Mr. McKELLAR. From the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I report back favorably the nomination of Floyd Mitchell to be postmaster at Tullahoma, Tenn.; and, as the matter has been delayed, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination and that the President may be notified of its confirmation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none. The nomination will be read.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Floyd Mitchell to be postmaster at Tullahoma, Tenn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of this nomination. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

Are there further reports of committees? If not, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of W. J. Jamieson to be State administrator for Arizona.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John K. Jennings to be State administrator for Indiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James H. Crutcher to be State administrator for Louisiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the Executive Calendar.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, APRIL 2, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father, for Thy daily blessings. Our best riches are the gifts from Thy bountiful hand; they do not spring from the depths where gold and gems are gathered; they are the choicest riches of the soul, such as knowledge, usefulness, and love. May we rejoice in the magnitude of Thy mercies, build up and adorn the stations to which we are called. Sustain those who may be weighted with sorrow, discouragement, or disappointment. So magnify Thyself that their painful experiences may not be able to last, clarify their firesides, let not their skies be robbed of blue, show anew Thy living, moving presence. Lord God, who shall abide in Thy tabernacle? Who shall abide in Thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States as communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

On March 10, 1937:

H. R. 194. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Brownville, Nebr.;

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had concurred in a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 7. Concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of additional copies of the report of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation entitled "The Taxing Power of the Federal and State Governments."

ENGINEERING AND INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Education be discharged from consideration of the bill (H. R. 5531) to aid engineering and industrial research in connection with colleges and schools of engineering in the several State and Territorial universities and colleges, and for other purposes, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I have consulted with the chairman of each of these committees, and it is entirely agreeable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, on last evening my colleague, the distinguished majority floor leader, delivered a very able address which I ask unanimous consent to print in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

(Mr. COLDEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL, 1938

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5996) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5996, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased at this moment to discuss with the membership of this body the provisions of the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia.

Upon the appointment of this subcommittee we immediately began our investigations of District activities. We visited the hospitals of the District, the public institutions in the District, studied proposals for buildings to be erected, property to be purchased, paving, and other construction items. We did these things in order as thoroughly as possible to familiarize ourselves with what it was proposed to do, as well as to familiarize ourselves with the activities of the District in general.

The bill that is being considered carries a total appropriation of $45,228,024, which is $1,292,761 below the Budget estimates. All of the revenue necessary to finance these District activities will come from taxpayers of the District except the sum of $5,000,000 which this committee recommends as the Federal payment to the operation of the District affairs. In electing to provide $5,000,000 as the Federal payment the committee had to discard the Jacobs' report. This report is the result of the expenditure of $50,000 of District revenues by a committee to provide Congress with a study of fiscal relations between the District government and the Federal Government. At this point I feel that it is proper for me to discuss with you the provisions of this report so that you may realize yourselves why we felt that it was best to discard the recommendations of the fiscal relations committee.

The Jacobs report has been referred to in the public press as a three-point formula for ascertaining the amount due the District of Columbia from the Federal Government. In the hearings, however, it developed that it was a four-point rather than a three-point formula. The first point in this formula provides for intergovernmental payments; in other words, the District of Columbia does certain work for the Federal Government, it maintains agencies that serve not only the District but the Federal Government as well; for instance, it has a fire department and at times the fire department serves the Federal Government. It has a police department. The police department provides a certain amount of protection to activities of the Federal Government. Likewise, it has a water department which furnishes a large part of the water used by Federal agencies. Likewise, it provides courts in the District of Columbia and these courts are used by the Federal agencies; and there are innumerable other activities that, in turn, are used by the Federal Government. Point I of the Jacobs formula provides that all of these activities shall be gone into thoroughly for the purpose of ascertaining the value of each and every one of these services; and, furthermore, it provides that these services shall be charged against the Federal Government.

Likewise, there are certain agencies of the Federal Government which at times render service to residents of the District. To illustrate, the Library of Congress is located in the District. At times District residents use the Library of Congress. The Jacobs report estimates that the value of the Library of Congress to residents of the District is $55,000. These illustrations, in my opinion, are sufficient to show what is meant by intergovernmental charges.

The objections that this subcommittee had to that formula were numerous. To state one of them, I believe, will be sufficient at the present time, and that is that the agencies keeping the books will be interested in making the charges against each department as much as possible. For instance, all the activities of the police department for the Federal Government will be noted by the police department. If the President has a function and needs policemen, policemen will be designated to the White House and the District will charge the Federal Government with the services of those policemen. There will be a tendency on the part of all of these agencies to make those charges against the Federal Government as much as possible, and there is no end to what those charges will ultimately be. This is one of the reasons for the rejection of the first point in the Jacobs formula.

The second point in this formula asserts that Congress passes all laws governing the District of Columbia.

The residents of the District are helpless and must accept the final adjudications that are made by the national legislative establishment. For instance, in the passage of the so-called 40-hour-week law the Congress saw fit to make the provisions of that law applicable to the District of Columbia. In the passage of leave laws, including annual leave, certain holidays, numbering about seven, and so on, amounting in all to 111 days besides Sundays, they are made applicable to the District of Columbia.

The Jacobs report says we ought to take 17 American cities, find out what laws they are operating under, ascertain the laws that the District of Columbia is operating under, and if the laws passed by Congress applicable to the District of Columbia impose an undue burden upon the residents of the District of Columbia, as has been done in the case of the 40-hour week, as well as the leave laws, then the Federal Government should share this extraordinary burden. The objections to that point in the formula are apparent and would be the subject of innumerable controversies.

For instance, it has been estimated that the 40-hour week law will cost $925,000 additional to the taxpayers of the District and, of course, that much would ipso facto be shouldered by the Government of the United States. And so on with regard to all the other laws that have been passed which impose what might be regarded as an undue burden upon the residents of the District of Columbia.

Point no. 3 of the Jacobs report provides for the establishment of a new commission to be known as the Capital Planning Commission. This commission will have seven members, to wit, the Secretary of the Interior, the chairman of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the Engineer Commissioner, two citizens of the District of Columbia and two citizens of other jurisdictions. Mind you, the personnel of the Capital Planning Commission as proposed will include seven members and of those seven members four will be residents of the District of Columbia and the probabilities are that some of the other members will ultimately be residents of the District.

The duty under point 3 imposed upon this Capital Planning Commission is to ascertain what public buildings are needed in the District of Columbia, not only from year to year but including long-time planning needs and designating those buildings from year to year and for a long period of time. In doing so this commission shall fix the proportionate part of each building to be erected that must come from the treasury of the District and likewise fix the proportionate part that would be paid by the Congress of the United States.

In other words, because a building in the District of Columbia may be more ornate here than somewhere else, or because it is more ornate or because it follows the general plans of the buildings in the District of Columbia so as to make it a monumental city, those extraordinary charges must be borne by the Federal Government because this commission has decided the question that way.

I will give you a current illustration. A bill came to the subcommittee with an estimate for the Pennsylvania Avenue bridge across the Anacostia River. Upon investigation we found that the cost of a steel bridge across that river would amount to $2,000,000. A masonry bridge would cost four and a half million dollars. We all know that a nice, beautiful steel bridge would suffice. The truth of the matter is a bridge will not be needed down there, in my opinion, for 10 years.

The Capital Planning Commission as provided in this act would immediately say that we should have a monumental bridge there to correspond with the other bridges in the District of Columbia. As fair-minded men they would have to assess the difference between the cost of a steel bridge and a monumental bridge against the Treasury of the United States. For that and other reasons the committee felt that point should be rejected. The same thing might be said about the Chain Bridge or streets that link up with nearby States and so on and so on. So much for point no. 3.

The fourth point in the Jacobs report provides that a commission shall determine the per-capita cost of operating the government of the District of Columbia. If you are a resident of the District this commission would find out what was the cost of operating the District as against you, not taking what you pay but what the average of the citizens of the District pays and at the same time ascertain the average per-capita cost of operation in 17 other cities of comparable size in the United States. After the average of operating these other 17 cities of comparable size has been determined, that will be laid down beside the per-capita cost of operating the District of Columbia, and if and when the cost of operating the government of the District of Columbia is larger than the cost of operating the other 17 cities of comparable size, the excess cost would be placed upon the shoulders of the Treasury of the United States. There are so many objections to that, I cannot enumerate all of them.

Suffice it to say that the first thing we have to do would be to set up budget officers in all of the 17 other cities in the United States.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I would prefer not to.

In the second place, we would have to ascertain what items are chargeable here that are not chargeable in the other cities of the United States and what items are chargeable in the other cities that are not chargeable here.

Let me enumerate some of those items. The District of Columbia, through the wisdom of the Congress of the United States, has prohibited the issuance of bonds in the District of Columbia and there is, therefore, no bonded indebtedness. In the other 17 cities of the United States it is estimated that the total bonded indebtedness amounts on the average to $8.49 per capita. What does the Jacobs report say the average per capita cost is of operating the District of Columbia? Under the set-up given to us, which admittedly is more or less of an estimate, it is shown as $59.54. The average cost per capita of operating the other 17 American cities is $72.66. If we take $72.66 and eliminate the $8.49, which certainly ought not to be chargeable in making the comparison, the figure is brought down from $72.66 to $64.17.

Let us consider another charge. In other cities we find factories. In Washington the Congress undertakes to eliminate the building of factories. Factories in the other cities pay at least 10 percent of the entire tax burden. Please remember that. In figuring the per-capita cost the factories which provide the pay roll have paid 10 percent of that per-capita cost. Ten percent of $72.66 is $7.26.

Let us consider a third item that should be eliminated. In other jurisdictions we have a State government and a county government. In other words, there are three governments. In the District of Columbia there is but one government. In figuring the average per-capita payment in the other cities, the cost of administering those other governments is included, and we will say that roughly amounts to 15 percent. There is great agitation in my State to decrease the number of counties. There is great agitation to merge county governments with city governments in order to eliminate extra expense. That has been eliminated in the case of the District of Columbia, and we can easily figure 15 percent of the $72.66 as incidental to the operation of the other two governments found elsewhere than in the District of Columbia. Fifteen percent of $72.66 amounts to $10.89.

When there is eliminated the $10.89 chargeable to the extraordinary cost of operating the other governments, when we figure the 10 percent which is paid by factories, when we eliminate the interest we find in other jurisdictions which we do not find here, and subtract the total of these eliminated figures from $72.66 we find the per-capita cost of operating the other governments in the other 17 American cities which are enumerated in the Jacobs report amounts to $45.02. I maintain any board or any set of individuals which will go into this subject will of necessity eliminate at least these three items from consideration in fixing the average per-capita cost of operating the other cities as against the cost of operating the District of Columbia.

When we subtract these amounts from the $72.66 per-capita cost of operating the 17 other American cities, we find the per-capita cost of operating the cities is $45.02. Subtracting the latter amount from $59.64, the per-capita cost in the District of Columbia, we find a difference of $14.62. Multiplying this figure by the population of the District of Columbia, which we estimate as 600,000, we arrive at a result of $8,772,000 plus, which would be the contribution from the Treasury of the United States on this one item alone of operating the affairs of the District of Columbia.

Realizing this, I asked Mr. McAneny, one of the gentlemen who testified before the subcommittee, these questions:

Mr. COLLINS. As I understand it, you said elsewhere in your testimony that after all the taxes were raised that you proposed, if there was any extraordinary expenditure you thought that the Federal Government should bear that extraordinary expenditure.

Mr. MCANENY. That is the final proposition in this trilogy.

Mr. COLLINS. That is what I understood you to say.

Now, I will ask the question in another way. Suppose the Federal Government's contribution amounted to a couple of million dollars. It could be 20 or 25 million dollars.

Mr. MCANENY. It could; that would depend upon circumstances.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, there is no disposition on the part of this committee to take chances upon the possibility of the Congress of the United States paying $25,000,000 of the cost of operating the District of Columbia. We felt the additional proposal carried in the Jacobs report was a bait. We realized that when the camel got its nose under the tent, ultimately the entire camel would be under it, too.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. Without any disposition to defend the Jacobs report, I do think it fair to state, based upon the Jacobs report——

Mr. COLLINS. I do not have much time to yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. I want to ask the gentleman if this is not the case.

Mr. COLLINS. I will yield for a question, but not for a statement right now.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 additional minutes.

I will now yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma for a question.

Mr. NICHOLS. May I ask the gentleman if the Jacobs report did not provide the contribution from the Government to the District of Columbia should be based on the difference in the value of services rendered by one government to the other, and vice versa?

Mr. COLLINS. That was the first point I mentioned in the Jacobs report.

Mr. NICHOLS. It was the recommendation in the Jacobs report.

Mr. COLLINS. Oh, no. With all due deference, the gentleman has just not read it.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman has read it, I may say to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLLINS. I know all about it; do not worry about my knowledge of it. Furthermore, I will convince this House that I know it. If the gentleman will read the testimony he will see that Mr. Jacobs realized I knew it too.

I happen to have been a Member of the so-called Mapes committee which undertook to investigate fiscal affairs in the District of Columbia in 1931. Eliminating myself from the membership of the so-called Mapes committee, I dare say the ability of the personnel of that committee was as high as that of the personnel of any committee which has been appointed to study any question since I have been a Member of the Congress.

For 6 months the Mapes committee went thoroughly into the subject of fiscal relations. The result of our deliberations was the recommendation of a $6,500,000 contribution from the Federal Government to the District of Columbia. Here is the simple way the committee arrived at the figure: The committee valued the Federal property used exclusively by the United States. Mind you, all of the valuations set out in this statement from which I am reading were based on the purchase price of the property and the actual cost of constructing the buildings. All other property in the District of Columbia was valued in the same way.

Federal property used exclusively by the United States was valued at $385,000,000. The estimated depreciated value of tangible personal property owned exclusively by the United States was $37,000,000. The Federal share of property used jointly by the United States and the District of Columbia, the entire value being $263,000,000 and one-third of this being the Federal Government's share, was $87,000,000. The value of excess park acreage in the District of Columbia, as compared with other American cities of comparable size, was $40,000,000. This makes a total of $549,000,000.

What was deductible from this figure? The Capitol of the United States is in the District of Columbia, but there are capitols elsewhere. The Mapes committee believed that as capitols elsewhere do not pay taxes the Capitol in the District of Columbia should not pay taxes, so this item of $45,000,000 was eliminated.

In the States no taxes are paid on the Governor's mansion, so the value of the White House, $25,000,000, was eliminated.

In some jurisdictions offices are supplied for members of the legislative bodies, and no taxes are paid on such offices. Therefore the value of the House and Senate Office Buildings, $20,000,000, was deducted.

No taxes are paid on monuments anywhere, so the value of the Lincoln Memorial, $3,000,000, was eliminated, and that of the Washington Monument, $1,500,000. The Federal Government operates post offices elsewhere. We felt the value of post offices in the District of Columbia should be deducted, which amounted to $7,400,000. Other items which were considered deductible were customhouses, $58,000, the power-house to the Capitol Buildings and Grounds, $1,300,000, and I am also including the new Supreme Court Building, $11,000,000, which, of course, was not included in the Mapes report, because supreme court buildings in other jurisdictions pay no taxes. For instance, the State of Louisiana maintains its court buildings in the city of New Orleans instead of at Baton Rouge, and no taxes are paid on these buildings.

These eliminations amount to $114,258,000, leaving $434,742,000. That is the approximate figure to which the Mapes committee applied the rate of $1.50 per $100, which is the rate paid upon property in the District of Columbia, and this amounted to slightly more than $6,500,000.

This committee felt that the Federal share of the property partly used by the Federal Government might not approach one-third, and they felt that the parks which were used by the District of Columbia, although their acreage is in excess of what it is elsewhere, ought not to be on this list, and so we finally made the best guess we could and we guessed $5,000,000.

Notwithstanding the fact the Jacobs committee states this is an engineering problem, I believe that each and every Member of this House is just as capable of estimating the fiscal relation as any so-called expert that can be found, and the formula adopted, at any rate in the Mapes report, is very much more simple, very much easier to arrive at, and I think more nearly reaches a right conclusion than the fantastic scheme which was brought to us by this committee.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. May I ask the gentleman with respect to the language in the bill that provides that any revenue now required by law to be credited to the District of Columbia and the United States in the same proportion that each contributed to the activity or source from which such revenue was derived, shall be credited wholly to the District of Columbia, how much would that mean the Government would be contributing to the District of Columbia?

Mr. COLLINS. That does not amount to anything, practically.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Why is the language in the bill?

Mr. COLLINS. That is fixed at $5,000,000.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I beg the gentleman's pardon, there is another provision with respect to the $5,000,000.

Mr. COLLINS. Then I will ask the gentleman to ask me about that when we come to read the bill for amendment.

I feel it is but proper that I discuss some of the provisions of the bill with the Members of the House.

The rate of $1.50 per thousand on real estate property in this bill is pegged by this committee at $1.50. Under the law, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the power to fix the tax rate at such amount as they see fit, and it has been fixed for several years at $1.50. However, on numerous occasions the Congress arbitrarily has fixed this rate in spite of existing law. This has been the practice on more than one occasion. This subcommittee undertook to peg this rate at $1.50 this year for this reason. There is scarcely any property in the District of Columbia that pays any taxes except real estate. Real estate bears practically the entire burden. We have no inheritance tax, no income tax, the tax for operating an automobile is one dollar, a mattress manufacturing establishment in the District of Columbia pays a privilege tax of $75 and the Washington Baseball Park pays $5, moving pictures pay practically no tax whatever, and the gasoline tax is 2 cents, while over in Virginia and Maryland it is about 4 cents. In my State I think it is 7 or 8 cents.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Seven cents.

Mr. COLLINS. And we felt that the tax base in the District of Columbia should be broadened, and so that the District of Columbia legislative committee could tackle this question and bring in the additional taxes that are so much needed here, we pegged it at $1.50, because we were apprehensive that the Commissioners might raise it to $2, thereby obviating the necessity of widening the tax base in the District of Columbia.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question at that point?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. COLDEN. In Los Angeles, in southern California, we pay a State inheritance tax, income tax, and a gasoline tax, and we are also paying $4.32 per $100 on our real estate in the section where I live, and our rentals are about one-third of what they are in Washington. Why should we contribute to the payment of the expenses of the city of Washington?

Mr. COLLINS. But the difficulty about securing your taxes entirely from real estate is this——

Mr. COLDEN. We do not do that.

Mr. COLLINS. I am not speaking about the gentleman's jurisdiction, but, speaking generally, any increase in tax rates on real estate will be passed on to the people who rent these properties, and in this instance that happens to be the employees of the Government of the United States, in the main.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado and Mr. AMLIE rose.

Mr. COLLINS. I would rather not yield now, because I think all of these questions are coming up at a later time and at that time I shall be very pleased to explain each and every one of them.

In other words, the pegging of this tax rate was provided solely to enable the Committee on the District of Columbia to tackle the tax question and handle it in an orderly fashion. This committee could not do that job because we did not have the authority.

The next item in its order provides for a survey of the District activities. A law was passed this year to do this and confer jurisdiction here, and another law was passed at a later date, and so on, with the result that we have at least four police departments in the District of Columbia, we have two health departments in the District of Columbia, one operating under Public Health and another by social workers. We have given privileged taxes; I have cited you one or two examples; we have duplication after duplication in District activities, and $15,000 is provided for in this bill to make a survey so that they can present their findings to the legislative committee on the District of Columbia, so that that committee can tackle that question in an orderly way, with the very best advice it is possible to secure. In other words, we are trying in this instance, as in the other I just mentioned, to protect the power and authority of the legislative committee on the District of Columbia.

The next item we reach in the bill is an evaluation survey of the water system of the District of Columbia. This is a system that is comparable to a private corporation. We do not know its value, we do not know the proper rates to establish. The last extensive improvement that was made in it had to be paid for out of the general fund of the Treasury and, therefore, it is necessary, in order to arrive at a correct rate, that its value be determined, so that proper rates can be fixed, and a sum of money was asked by the Engineer Commissioner of the District for the purpose of doing that job. His estimate was $20,000, and that amount is provided.

There has been a 25-percent reduction in water rent in the District of Columbia. That 25 percent is eliminated because $13,000,000 of improvements and expansions are badly needed in the water-supply system or will be needed in the near future, and the reduction of 25 percent was eliminated so that that money or most of it could be invested in Government bonds by the Treasurer of the United States to build up a reserve so that in time this much-needed improvement could be made. Therefore, $750,000 of water revenue is to be laid aside each year, beginning with this year, to take care of those improvements when they are needed.

In our discussion of matters connected with the District we saw instances of nepotism in the government of the District of Columbia, and, therefore, the committee called upon the Commissioners of the District to give us a list of the persons holding positions in the District of Columbia who were kin to each other by blood or marriage to the second degree and no further, and out of about 10,000 employees the list shows that more than 3,050 of them are related to each other within those degrees.

I find to my utter surprise that at least two Washington newspapers editorially have asserted that that is not nepotism. I shall give you one instance, which you can find upon investigation. I mean if you will investigate this report. It has not been printed. There is a man here who holds a position in the schools of the District of Columbia. I shall not name his position, because it will not profit us anything to do so. There is his name right here on this list.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the Committee is not in order, and I make the further point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine makes the point of order that a quorum is not present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and six Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I shall later, if the gentleman will permit. This list with his name begins here, and proceeds down this page and on to the next.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman prefer not to yield at this time?

Mr. COLLINS. I prefer to go on. I think I shall cover everything. I did not ask that this report be printed, and it has not been printed, and I am not asking now that it be printed, but I call the attention of the membership to the fact, and also make this personal observation in passing, that the persons whose names are on this report are employees of the District of Columbia only. This report does not include persons who may be kin to these people who are employed in other governmental agencies.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Not now, because I have so much to say.

There are several items here now where no change is made of any consequence. Next, I take up the office of the poundmaster, though I feel ridiculous discussing most of these small items. But they must be passed upon. I shall therefore discuss them. We found there was a gentleman down here who was a guard. He received about $1,500 a year. A vacancy occurred in the office of poundmaster. This guard was transferred to that particular job and is paid $3,080 a year. The committee did not think his duties and responsibilities were commensurate with that amount of pay, and therefore we reduced the salary to $2,000, as we felt we had a right to do under the authority given to this committee.

Next we come to the care of the District buildings. There is no particular point in that except in the Police Court Building, a new structure, there is a great amount of space, more than the police court will be able to use. The Commissioners of the District said that they would like to use that additional space, that the building ought to be under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners. Therefore, for the year 1938 we provided it should be under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. We did this, so that the matter could be pointed out to the legislative Committee on the District of Columbia, so that they could in turn pass permanent legislation on this subject.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes, I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is legislation, is it not?

Mr. COLLINS. Well, I doubt that.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is not confident that it is not, is he?

Mr. COLLINS. Well, I think I am.

Mr. McCORMACK. Do you approve of the Appropriations Committee undertaking——

Mr. COLLINS. Oh, the gentleman knows I do not do that.

Mr. McCORMACK. Well, you did it pretty well in this bill.

Mr. COLLINS. I will say to the gentleman in that connection that if every point of order that could have been made in the Navy appropriation bill were made I doubt very much if you would have had a Navy. That has been tried on the floor of this House. The gentleman who started it had to abandon it because he was in favor of a Navy, and therefore he found that if his points of order continued we would be without a Navy.

The gentleman knows full well that appropriations for a long time were carried by the legislative committees, and legislation, therefore, crept into these bills back in those days. These legislative provisions have continued to be in the appropriation bills. So all of them have legislation in them.

I will say to the gentleman that I do not know what will become of the bill for the District of Columbia if points of order are made upon some of its provisions that have been carried ever since the District of Columbia was in existence.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. NICHOLS. I could tell the gentleman.

Mr. COLLINS. I have declined to yield to the gentleman. I am going to yield to the gentleman all the time he desires, just as much as he wants, when we read the bill.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman will not have to yield there.

Mr. COLLINS. Oh, the gentleman will have a chance to talk later on.

I have tried as best I could to protect the legislative committee for the District of Columbia. I have not only tried to protect them so that they could have the right and the opportunity to act on these questions, but this subcommittee has gone further than that. We have pointed out in this bill many changes that ought to be made so that this committee can write permanent law upon those subjects. Anything that is done in this bill is only for the fiscal year 1938; only for 1 year. There is not any permanent legislation in the bill.

The next item is assessor's office. In the assessor's office we found one particular part of it that is charged with the issuance of licenses—privilege taxes as we know them in many jurisdictions. I had apprehended, and other members of the committee had apprehended, that those privilege taxes were not being collected. So we had a survey made. A man went out 1 day, and here are about 30 different places of business that were either operating with no license whatever or operating under a license issued to somebody else, or under an old license.

This represented one man's work for 1 day. So we decided, as we have a right to do under the rules of this House, to place the license part of the assessor's office under another department of the District government, which has inspectors out all the time inspecting weights and measures. Therefore, we transferred about $10,080 of money to the department of weights and measures instead of to the assessor's office, so that we could get these taxes collected.

There is no change of any consequence in the collector's office or the auditor's office.

With regard to the corporation counsel's office, the corporation counsel says that claims that have been adjudicated by the Commissioners, compromised, if you please, under $250, ought not to be sent to Congress and have Congress act as a matter of routine upon each and every one of them. As is the case now, all we do is pass them. We cannot investigate them, because we do not have the facts. This gives the corporation counsel $3,000 for the purpose of settling those cases up to $250 each.

Public Utilities Commission: There is in the Public Utilities Commission what we know as the people's counsel. The job has been vacant for quite a while. It was evident to us that it would not be filled.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 additional minutes.

So that item was eliminated at the instance of the Public Utilities Commission.

This committee felt that the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co.'s charges in the District were excessive. Every outside call that is made from your office or this Capitol is paid for at the rate of 3 cents, according to my recollection of the rate, unless it is a call to another Government department. In private offices each call is 5 cents, plus a monthly charge. The Public Utilities Commission is authorized to make investigations now, and the cost of making them is to be paid by the corporation being investigated. That is existing law. This subcommittee requests or directs the Public Utilities Commission to make such an investigation.

Department of Insurance: The only change in that was to add an insurance rate expert at a salary of $4,600. The reason that position was added was because the insurance commissioner in the District asserted that we were paying rates, insurance premiums, of a million dollars more in the District than we should pay. Here is a statement which was given to the committee by him beginning with the year 1924 and ending with the year 1935, which shows premiums amounting to $26,990,000 were paid and the losses amounted to $8,357,000.

This small sum of money for a rate expert is provided in this bill so that the insurance commissioner, with the aid and assistance of the legislative Committee on the District of Columbia, may work out something to the advantage of the taxpayers of the District.

Register of wills and recorder of deeds: There are no particular changes in these items.

Public Library: The main library in the District is not open on Friday afternoons, and the branches are not open on Saturday afternoons. This bill provides additional money so that the library and branches can be kept open that additional time and also reinforces the existing staff. With the passage of the Economy Act the appropriation for books for the library was reduced. The pending bill restores the base prior to the Economy Act of $54,500; and the bill also provides for the Petworth branch, which is submitted to you in the same form that it was passed on to us by the Budget.

On the question of sewers, there is a part of this District that does not have any sewerage at all. It is over across the river in what is commonly known as the southern part of Anacostia. This bill provides a sum of money to build the Oxon Run sewer, which would provide sewage to about 1,500 people.

Playgrounds: A part of this item will probably be subject to controversy. We have four systems of playgrounds in the District of Columbia, all operated by different agencies. The President has even appointed a man to study the question of coordination of recreational activities. This gentleman came before the committee, and we asked him questions about the reorganization of playgrounds but were able to get very little, if any, information worth while from him. The best information that came to this subcommittee on the subject of playgrounds came from a couple of colored men, very bright men. They asked this subcommittee to let the colored children play on playgrounds under the jurisdiction of the colored schools and let white children play upon playgrounds under the jurisdiction of the white schools; and they asserted that if that were done we would have a minimum of trouble. Near and adjacent to schools are playgrounds. The committee, as it had the right to do under existing law, transferred these to schools, or to what is commonly referred to as the community center, and took them away from playgrounds which is under a different activity and under a different agency, because the committee wanted to let white children play on white playgrounds and colored children play on colored playgrounds as was requested by these two colored men.

Public schools: While District schools have always been a subject of a great deal of controversy on the floor of the House I may say that in this instance we did not get any information from the superintendent of schools, or very little information. Ninety-three additional school teachers were requested. Most of them were requested to take care of crowded conditions, so-called. We found upon investigation, however, that there was a school teacher for about every 26 school children in the District of Columbia. We found also that about 152 of the school teachers were doing something other than teaching school. Many of them were doing purely clerical work, work that a $1,440 stenographer could do equally well.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield.

Mr. MERRITT. Does the gentleman know how the number of pupils per teacher in the District of Columbia compares with the number in other cities?

Mr. COLLINS. Forty students per teacher is supposed to be the rate in elementary schools.

We felt that as far as new classrooms in newly built buildings were concerned, that perhaps it was wise to give them a teacher for each of those classrooms. They amounted to 27. As to the rest of them we felt that there was not any crying need, or no need at all, especially no need if these teachers were put to teaching. At any rate, we leaned backward because we felt that the school should be taken care of and that if there should be any doubt that the part of wisdom was to resolve the doubt in favor of the schools, so besides these 27 teachers for new classrooms the committee authorized 27 additional teachers, making 54 additional teachers in all.

There are libraries in the schools as well as the library and branch libraries in the District. School teachers in the District of Columbia receive an annual increase of $100 a year for the first 8 years. After that the pay is not so uniform; but the average annual pay of a school teacher in the District of Columbia is around $2,600 or $2,700. At any rate, the teachers doing library work in school libraries are paid more than librarians in the Public Library and we did not feel that there was any necessity for a difference. The bill, therefore, provides that the pay shall be uniform for the type of work that is being done.

In addition to this—I am still discussing schools—there has been built up in the District of Columbia schools what the committee has been told is a very wonderful activity, and that is boys' clubs—not under the jurisdiction of the police department, but under the jurisdiction of schools. Mr. Quinn, one of the best informed attorneys in this city, and a member of the school board, as well as Mr. Yaden, civil-service examiner, emphasized the necessity of encouraging this boys' club activity in the schools. The committee, therefore, increased the Budget estimate of $75,000 to $100,000, because of its desire to improve this work. These are the principal matters with reference to the schools.

With reference to the police department, the only change in this item is that the bill provides for 25 additional policemen. Washington is not overpoliced. It is, perhaps, on an average with cities of comparable size in the United States. It is, perhaps, a little over the average, but there is a constant hue and cry about the need for additional policemen, and for fear that there might be some justification to it we acceeded to this demand and provided for 25 additional policemen.

I hope no newspaper representative is listening in on this conversation. We feel rather concerned about the attitude of certain persons in the police department. Their general attitude toward the public has not been of the best. We feel that we ought to have at least an occasional smile from members of the Washington police force. We tried to get the superintendent of police to let us put a little money in this bill to teach the Washington police courtesy, but he said he had a little money under his jurisdiction, and he hoped we would not add this money to the bill because he felt he could finance that without our aid. The superintendent of the Metropolitan Police is one of the finest men I know, and I have nothing but praise for him. I believe that the police department has been lacking in this respect, and many Members so think, but the superintendent will correct the situation.

There was about $34,000 over the Budget added to the fire department because we have learned from investigation that much of the equipment of the fire department is from 15 to 20 years old. Certainly this condition ought to be corrected, and we think we have started in the proper direction.

Let me next take up the health department. Additional money is provided for the health department, and I do not know of any activity of the District that is more in need of help than the health department. The health conditions of the District of Columbia are worse than in any other American city save one. I do not know of any worse place than the District. I am willing to share my part in the indictment so far as the condition of the public health in the District of Columbia is concerned. Therefore, we are leaning backward in our desire to change these conditions for the better.

We sat down with Dr. Ruhland, one of the greatest health men, in my opinion, in the entire United States, and asked him to tell us what he needed in the way of help and equipment, and in the main we have provided it for him. In addition to that, this committee found a situation existing here that we felt should be called to the attention of the Congress. There are, in effect, two health departments in the District of Columbia, one the health department and the other health activities conducted by a social-worker organization known as Public Welfare.

Mr. Chairman, the hospitals of the District, to my utter surprise, are under the Public Welfare, the idea being that the care of the sick is a social matter. If we refer to the Army we do not find the hospitals under the jurisdiction of anyone but medical officers; likewise, in the Navy and in the Public Health Service. Furthermore, as chairman of this subcommittee, I wrote the mayors of all principal American cities and found out that almost universally the hospitals are under medical officers. Something will be said here about boards, and I say that is true, but the boards in all instances are composed of medical officers. So we undertook to transfer these hospitals for the fiscal year 1938 from the Welfare Department to the Public Health Service, leaving to the legislative committee the right to make permanent law on this subject.

Let me illustrate why this is necessary. I may say I think the situation has reached the point where it has become an emergency. Let us consider a maternity case. The Public Health goes to see that woman if the case is reported to it. They give that woman all prenatal care, including pelvic measurements. Then when the woman must bear the child she is transferred to a hospital, which is under another jurisdiction, to wit, Public Welfare. This other and different jurisdiction does not have the record that the health department has. In Chicago and other American cities, it has been demonstrated in these cases that three-fourths of the women have borne children heretofore and can be treated with a minimum of expense and given equal consideration and care at home. As the situation is in the District of Columbia, Gallinger Hospital is bulging to overflow with maternity cases that could be treated equally well, if not better, at home.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Not for the present.

For the year 1938 it is proposed to transfer these hospitals from the Public Welfare Department to the Public Health Department in order to eliminate duplication and relieve these hospitals of overcrowded conditions. Ultimately this matter will be settled as it should be settled in a permanent matter by the legislative Committee of the District of Columbia.

With reference to the courts, there were certain small changes made.

With reference to the Anacosta River Flats, a development of the flats down here, a small amount of money is appropriated so that the work can be kept current for this year instead of dropped.

Taking up streets and bridges, no particular change of consequence is made except certain surveys are to be made of the circles. A survey is also to be made across Rock Creek Park so that you may get from Sixteenth Street to Connecticut Avenue. Certain things of that nature have been recommended.

Speaking generally of public welfare, this bill provides funds amounting to $6,866,440 for public welfare.

With reference to the limitations in the bill, the first one relates to the Chesapeake & Potomac investigation which I have already discussed.

The next one is a prohibition against teachers doing clerical work.

The next relates to the differential in salaries of librarians in the District schools and in the libraries.

The next permits the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to do work by private contract if the contract price is less than it would cost them to do the work.

The next item relates to the Jefferson Junior High School, which, in my opinion, is in sore need of replacement. As you know, this school is located within 50 feet of a railroad.

The next is an authorization so that a public building may be erected. Without this the building could not be erected. Likewise the next one.

The next item refers to the Police Court Building, which I have already discussed.

The next relates to the auditing of public welfare. It undertakes to place the duty of auditing upon the auditor of the District of Columbia. As the situation is now the District has no authority, except general authority, over the audit and the records of Public Welfare. The result is we do not know what the situation is.

The next relates to purchases and provides, as will be found in practically all appropriation bills, where the purchase is for less than $50 there is no need for advertising. That brings this bill in line with all other appropriation bills.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

The next item enables the District of Columbia to eliminate grade crossings. Without this item grade crossings in the District of Columbia cannot be eliminated.

The following item relates to the $750,000 of water revenue which is to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States in order that the enlargement of the Water Supply System may proceed in an orderly way.

The next item relates to per diem personnel. This is followed by an item relating to the reallocation of employees in the District of Columbia. We find, for instance, that an individual employed by the District of Columbia who is receiving $3,000 may be put into a higher grade, with his salary raised $600 or $800.

I make the assertion, and I believe I am making an accurate statement, that the number of increases in salaries in the District of Columbia amounts to more than the total number of increases in salaries of civil-service employees in all the other Government departments combined. I believe I am stating the facts correctly because I made the same statement in committee when a number of District representatives were present, and the statement has not been corrected to date. I imagine it would have been corrected if it were incorrect.

The committee undertakes to limit reallocations to positions where the salary is less than $2,000. In other words, if anyone is going to be raised from one grade to another, it will be someone who draws less than $2,000 in salary. Of course, this does not interfere in the least with promotions within the grade. In my opinion, this provision is a limitation upon an appropriation bill, which this committee has a right to insert in the bill.

The next item relates to congressional tags. Too many people in Washington have congressional tags. I feel congressional tags ought to be given only to people mentioned expressly in the law. This item is intended to bring that condition about, and also undertakes to forbid anybody else from getting such tags.

The next item is in compliance with the Ramseyer rule, relates to the tax rate which I have already discussed. The item following refers to the reduction in the salary of the poundmaster. The next one increases the limit of cost on a building in the District, as does the next item. The following item relates to the transfer of the hospitals from social welfare to public health.

This completes the discussion of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, this subcommittee has given approximately 2 months of intensive study to this measure, and has approached the problem in a perfectly friendly manner. We have heard every person and every civic organization that wanted to present claims for the consideration of the committee. Furthermore, many citizens of both professional and business prominence in the District, who the committee members felt possessed unusual qualifications and information in their fields, were invited to offer suggestions to the committee in an off-the-record discussion as to ways and means of improving the administration of District business.

All in all, I believe we approached our work in a perfectly friendly way, eager to serve the best interests of both the District and the Federal Government. We pride ourselves upon our accomplishments, for we feel we have done a good job. We are quite sure we have been instrumental in building up more friendly relations and a better feeling between the residents of the District and the National Government. This in itself is sufficient compensation for our labors. Every American citizen believes Washington should be the greatest capital on the face of the earth and that it should be beautiful to look upon, but more important, that it should ultimately become the educational and cultural center of all the people of the world. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, any revenue (not including the proportionate share of the United States in any revenue arising as the result of the expenditure of appropriations made for the fiscal year 1924 and prior fiscal years) now required by law to be credited to the District of Columbia and the United States in the same proportion that each contributed to the activity or source from whence such revenue was derived shall be credited wholly to the District of Columbia, and, in addition, $5,000,000 is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be advanced July 1, 1937, and all of the remainder out of the combined revenues of the District of Columbia, and the tax rate in effect in the fiscal year 1937 on real estate and tangible personal property subject to taxation in the District of Columbia shall not be increased for the fiscal year 1938, namely:

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that portion of the section, beginning on page 1, line 5, down to and including the figures "1937" in line 10 on page 2. The language against which I make the point of order is as follows:

* * * any revenue (not including the proportionate share of the United States in any revenue arising as the result of the expenditure of appropriations made for the fiscal year 1924 and prior fiscal years) now required by law to be credited to the District of Columbia and the United States in the same proportion that each contributed to the activity or source from whence such revenue was derived shall be credited wholly to the District of Columbia, * * *.

The grounds being that it is legislation changing existing law, and therefore improper on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be pleased to hear the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS], chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is not well taken. This provision merely requires that it shall be divided in accordance with existing law. It follows substantive law. This provision has been carried in the bill for a long number of years.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard, if the Chair will hear me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. The language of the bill under consideration and to which my point of order is directed provides that—

> Any revenue now required by law to be credited to the District of Columbia and the United States in the same proportion that each contributed to the activity or source from whence such revenue was derived shall be credited wholly to the District of Columbia.

If there is existing law on our statute books that requires all joint income of the United States and District of Columbia to be paid to the District government and to the Federal Government in proportion to their respective contributions, then I respectfully submit the language of this bill changes existing law. In other words, the language of this bill would require all such joint revenue to be credited to the District of Columbia when a portion of it should be credited to the United States under existing law.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The Chair is prepared to rule. The pending bill provides:

> That in order to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, any revenue (not including the proportionate share of the United States in any revenue arising as the result of the expenditure of appropriations made for the fiscal year 1924 and prior fiscal years) now required by law to be credited to the District of Columbia and the United States in the same proportion that each contributed to the activity or source from whence such revenue was derived shall be credited wholly to the District of Columbia, and in addition $5,000,000 is appropriated * * *.

To that language the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FORD] makes a point of order. Naturally the question would require an examination of the existing law.

The Chair invites attention to the provision of existing law upon authority of which this appropriation is made, which is as follows:

> Annually from and after July 1, 1922, 60 percent of such expenses of the District of Columbia as Congress may appropriate for shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia derived from taxation and privileges, and the remaining 40 percent by the United States, except such items of expense as Congress may direct shall be paid on another basis.

Therefore it is clear that under existing law there is a ratio of 60–40 percent provided for defraying the expenses of the District of Columbia. The pending bill carries substantially $45,000,000 in appropriations. Therefore, roughly speaking, 40 percent would be around $18,000,000. The portion of the revenue derived from the District of Columbia to which the Federal Government would be entitled, and the $5,000,000 so-called lump-sum appropriation added to that, would not equal the amount or proportion authorized under existing law to be provided by the Federal Government.

The Chair is of the opinion that the provision of the bill clearly comes under the provisions of the Holman rule. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. I make a point of order against that portion of the bill on page 2, beginning after the comma, in line 11, which reads as follows:

> And the tax rate in effect in the fiscal year 1937 on real estate and tangible personal property subject to taxation in the District of Columbia shall not be increased for the fiscal year 1938.

In support of my point of order I call the Chair's attention to the fact that this provision is contrary to existing law and is legislation.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to reserve a point of order?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the Chair explain the effect of reserving a point of order instead of making it?

Mr. COLLINS. No advanage will be taken of the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. It is within the right of the gentleman from Oklahoma either to make his point of order or to reserve his point of order. If the gentleman makes the point of order, discussion would be confined to the point of order. If he reserves the point of order it would permit debate on the provision of the bill against which the point of order is reserved.

Mr. NICHOLS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I decline to reserve the point of order, but make it.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman makes the point of order on the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes; and on the additional ground that it is contrary to existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Mississippi. The Chair would also be glad to hear the gentleman cite the existing law to which reference is made.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, the existing law provides:

> And that for the purpose of defraying such expense in the District of Columbia as Congress may from time to time appropriate for, there is hereby levied for each and every fiscal year succeeding that ending June 30, 1937, a tax at such rate on the aforesaid property subject to taxation in the District of Columbia; * * * and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia hereby are empowered and directed to ascertain and determine and fix annually such rate of taxation as will when applied as aforesaid produce the money needed to defray the share of the expenses of the District during the year for which the rate is fixed * * *.

The District Commissioners under that law have the right to fix the tax rate. I felt, and the committee felt, that as far as the fiscal year 1938 was concerned, Congress would rather fix the tax rate than have the Commissioners of the District of Columbia fix it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Mississippi is not directing his remarks to the point of order but is discussing the merits or demerits of the provision of the bill to which I have interposed a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi will proceed in order and confine his remarks to the point of order.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, for the fiscal year 1932 the same provision, or substantially the same provision, was incorporated in the bill, and is as follows:

> The tax rate in effect in the fiscal year 1931 on real estate and tangible personal property subject to taxation in the District of Columbia shall not be decreased for the fiscal year 1932.

For the fiscal year 1933 we find this provision, which is on all fours with the previous one:

> And the tax rate in effect in the fiscal year 1932 on real estate and tangible personal property subject to taxation in the District of Columbia shall not be decreased for the fiscal year 1933.

The purpose of this provision is to prevent any change by the Commissioners so that the legislative Committee on the District of Columbia can legislate upon this subject as well as on other taxation of a general nature. The purpose is to help that committee.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not addressing his remarks to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair differs with the gentleman from Oklahoma. The Chair feels that the gentleman from Mississippi is discussing the point of order.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman is discussing the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. That might very well be involved.

Mr. COLLINS. Suppose, Mr. Chairman, that the District Commissioners should raise the tax rate from $1.50 to $2; the increase in the tax rate would——

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the point of order but is discussing the effect of what would happen if this provision be left in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi will proceed in order. The Chair, however, feels that the gentleman from Mississippi is indulging in discussion which is within the scope of the point of order made by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to advise my friend that I will have to discuss this matter so that it will be presented in the proper light to the Chair in order that the Chair can rule upon this important subject.

Mr. NICHOLS. There is only one question.

Mr. COLLINS. I know how to discuss the matter, I may say to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Now, suppose the District Commissioners should raise the real-estate tax from $1.50 to $2. They could likewise raise the rate of the personal-property tax to the same figure. When that was done it would provide the District with all of the revenue that was needed and the legislative District Committee then would have no necessity, or very little necessity, for reporting out a tax bill enlarging the tax base.

So, in order to enable the legislative Committee of the District of Columbia to approach this problem in a fearless manner, so that they may have all the facts in their possession, and so that they will be protected in all of their rights and privileges, the committee felt that this ought to be temporarily pegged at the $1.50 rate in order that the entire question can be put in the lap of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. NICHOLS and Mr. McCORMACK rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. NICHOLS. If the Chair is ready to rule, I shall not insist on being heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule but will be glad to hear from the gentlemen.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, may I make this brief observation. If the Appropriations Committee has not the authority to insert legislation of a permanent nature, certainly it has not the authority to insert legislation of a temporary nature. The mere fact it is temporary legislation makes no difference.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, may I also make this brief observation. The Chair asked the gentleman from Mississippi, chairman of the subcommittee, to state to the Chair what the law was. I do not know whether the gentleman did that or not. Briefly, the provision at this time gives authority to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the right to fix the property tax rate in the District of Columbia. That is the existing law. Of course, when this act says that they shall be estopped from doing that for which they are given authority under existing law, it is clearly an alteration of existing law and, in my judgment, makes the point of order good.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair feels it is appropriate to state that in the broad and general application it is well recognized that the Committee on Appropriations has the authority to exercise the function of appropriating for the activities of the Federal Government under existing law. In other words, there must be authority in existing law to support the appropriation provided in a general appropriation bill.

It is also well settled that the Appropriations Committee does not have authority to include legislation in a general appropriation bill.

It will be recalled that considerable debate occurred at the time of the creation of the Appropriations Committee. Apprehension was voiced at that time that the Committee on Appropriations might encroach upon the functions of the standing legislative committees of the House. For this reason the rules of the House make it certain and definite that the Appropriations Committee has authority only to appropriate or to provide funds pursuant to the authority of existing law.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] makes a point of order to the following language which appears in the pending bill, found on page 2, line 11:

> And the tax rate in effect in the fiscal year 1937 on real estate and tangible personal property subject to taxation in the District of Columbia shall not be increased for the fiscal year 1938, namely.

The provision of existing law is as follows:

> That for the purpose of defraying such expenses of the District of Columbia as the Congress may from time to time appropriate for, there hereby is levied for each and every fiscal year succeeding that ending June 30, 1937, a tax at such rate on the aforesaid property subject to taxation in the District of Columbia, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia hereby are empowered and directed to ascertain, determine, and fix annually such rate of taxation, as will when applied as aforesaid produce the money needed to defray the share of the expenses of the District during the year for which the rate is fixed.

A question very similar to the pending question was raised when the District of Columbia appropriation bill was under consideration on February 15, 1933.

The Chair observes that in the course of the argument presented by the gentleman from Mississippi in opposition to the point of order he quoted the identical provision that was involved in the point of order raised at that time. It was on the basis of the language quoted by the gentleman from Mississippi that the ruling of the Chair turned.

On February 15, 1933, as shown in volume 76, part 4, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the following occurred:

> The point of order is directed at the language in the bill on line 10, page 2, which reads as follows: "And the tax rate in effect for the fiscal year 1933 on real estate and tangible personal property subject to taxation in the District of Columbia shall not be decreased for the fiscal year 1934."

The point of order was discussed at some length, after which the Chair ruled as follows:

> The gentleman from Virginia makes the point of order against the language appearing on page 2, line 10, which reads as follows—

And again quotes the language that has just been quoted.

> The point of order is that this language is legislation on an appropriation bill. The Chair is of the opinion that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, and therefore sustains the point of order.

The Chair also calls attention to section 3543 of Hinds' Precedents of the House, volume 4, the syllabus of which is as follows:

> Although a law may give an executive officer authority to do a certain thing, a provision directing him so to do is legislative in nature and not in order on a general appropriation bill.

It is apparent, of course, that if it was not in order in a general appropriation bill to authorize and direct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to not decrease the tax rate for a certain year, obviously the same logic would require the application of the rule to a proposed increase in the tax rate. In other words, the question here presented is whether or not an executive officer can be directed specifically and definitely not to do a thing he is clearly given discretionary authority to do.

The Chair feels that the language to which the point of order is made is legislation on an appropriation bill, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question.

I am wondering if I understand correctly from the report of the committee that the estimated revenues from gasoline taxes for the fiscal year 1938 are $3,113,591?

Mr. COLLINS. That is right.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I further understand from the report of the committee, and I am asking for verification, that the total amount with the exception of $4,731 is covered into the District's general fund?

Mr. COLLINS. No; it is in the gasoline-tax fund.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I understand this represents the total gasoline-tax funds collected?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. All gas taxes go into the general fund of the District except $4,731 for 1938?

Mr. COLLINS. No. This does not go into the general fund.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What is the meaning of this language on page 2, under the heading "Appropriations and Revenues", which reads, "the total amount approved by the committee, payable from the gasoline-tax fund, is $3,108,860", if it does not mean that substantially all of the gasoline taxes are carried into the general fund?

Mr. COLLINS. The general fund, I may say to the gentleman, is discussed in the preceding paragraph. This is the gasoline-tax fund, which must be used entirely for street improvements, sidewalk improvements, and so forth.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The language is a bit confusing, at least to me. I wanted, for the purpose of the RECORD, to ask the gentleman if all gasoline taxes are used for street and highway purposes in the District?

Mr. COLLINS. Improvements; yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. They are not diverted, in other words?

Mr. COLLINS. No.

Mr. NICHOLS. This would be a diversion, of course, I may say to the gentleman. If the provisions carried in the present appropriation bill were adopted, then clearly it would be a diversion of the gasoline funds.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. To what provision does the gentleman refer?

Mr. NICHOLS. I refer to the provision which broadens the use for which these funds can be expended, in that it says they can be expended for the maintenance of parks, parkways, and bridges, the maintenance of trees, sidewalks——

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I understand, however, that would really be for street and highway purposes?

Mr. COLLINS. That is right.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. A provision is included in many highway appropriations to the effect that money shall be used to beautify the roads.

Mr. COLLINS. And bridges.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What I want to know is whether all of the gasoline taxes and all automobile license fees collected are to be used for street and parkway purposes.

Mr. COLLINS. That is right.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And there is no diversion?

Mr. COLLINS. No diversion.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FORD of Mississippi: Strike out all of line 5, on page 1, and all of lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and down to and including the word "remainder" in line 10, on page 2.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have proposed simply eliminates all Federal contribution to the operation of the District of Columbia. In line 8 of the bill there is a provision providing for a lump-sum contribution of $5,000,000, and there is further language, to which I directed a point of order some moments ago, which provides that any revenue now required by law to be credited to the District of Columbia and the United States in the same proportion that each contributed to the activity or source from which such revenue was derived will be credited wholly to the District of Columbia.

A few moments ago, when the chairman of the subcommittee was explaining the bill, I asked the gentleman how much revenue the District of Columbia would receive under the language in the bill which I have just quoted, and to which my point of order was directed, but he failed to advise me, and I now call upon him or any other member of the subcommittee to tell me and the other Members of the House how much revenue will go to the District of Columbia under that language in the proposed bill. [After a pause.] It is obvious, since no answer is made, that it is undetermined by the bill which we are about to pass how much money will go from the Federal Treasury into the District revenues to be used wholly for the District of Columbia.

Mr. Chairman, I do not offer this amendment for the purpose of criticizing any member of the Appropriations Committee, but I do say it appears to me the District of Columbia government should tax its own citizens an amount sufficient to operate its own government without requiring the taxpayers of the United States to contribute annually to the upkeep and operation of the District government.

Let us look at this picture as we should. Approximately 117,000 employees of the Federal Government are being paid by the United States within the limits of the District of Columbia. Think about that. Approximately 117,000 men and women now on the pay roll of the Federal Government right here in the District of Columbia. The Federal pay roll within the borders of the District of Columbia amounts to almost $20,000,000 every month, or approximately $240,000,000 annually, and surely every Member of Congress can appreciate what a pay roll of that enormous size means to the citizens and business interests of the District of Columbia.

Mr. Chairman, what would a pay roll of that size mean to a city in our respective States—I think I could safely predict that most any city in my State would be willing to make the Federal Government an annual contribution of some five or ten million dollars if they could secure such a pay roll and such an amount of business within their borders.

In my own State, today, under an act passed by the legislature, whether wise or unwise, some cities are floating bonds in order to bring manufacturing interests there. Many cities are donating manufacturing sites, for the purpose of encouraging business interests to come there, in order to secure pay rolls; yet the Federal Government, which has a monthly pay roll in the District of Columbia of approximately $20,000,000 or $240,000,000 annually, under the direct provision of the bill we are going to contribute a lump sum of $5,000,000 to the Government of the District of Columbia; and in addition, by further language in the bill, we are giving the government of the District of Columbia an additional amount the extent of which we do not know.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, we should adopt the amendment I have offered and let the District of Columbia government stand on its own bottom and pay its own expenses. It is well known that the tax rate in the District of Columbia is much lower than anywhere in the country. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand my friend from Mississippi. The gentleman presented a point of order to the bill, which, if sustained, would have given the District a contribution from the Federal Government of $18,000,000, and then, in the next breath, the gentleman offers an amendment to strike out the $5,000,000, which is very much less than the $18,000,000.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. If the gentleman will yield, I will be pleased to explain.

Mr. COLLINS. No.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Will not the gentleman let me correct him?

Mr. COLLINS. I decline to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Will not the gentleman stand corrected?

Mr. COLLINS. I decline to yield to the gentleman. I hope the gentleman understands that language.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I heard the gentleman.

Mr. COLLINS. Now, with reference to the merits of this proposal, the gentleman refers to the pay roll in the District of Columbia. Of course, it is particularly fortunate that the District has the Federal Government here to provide pay rolls. In the other cities of the country, however, we have factories that provide pay rolls and factories also pay taxes. The Congress of the United States does not permit factories to be built in the District of Columbia, and, therefore, as a matter of common justice, the Federal Government should pay for extraordinary burdens that are placed upon the people of the District because of laws that we pass in order to make this city the monumental city which it should be, if we are to recognize it as the great Capital of this great country of ours.

Long before the gentleman ever came to this House, I had been paring down Federal contributions to the District of Columbia. I was a member of this subcommittee 12 years ago. I was a member of this subcommittee at the time we got away from the 60-40 and down to a lump sum. Every one of these succeeding years I have helped to bring down the Federal contribution. This year we are providing the same amount as the Federal contribution that Mr. Blanton recommended when he was chairman of this subcommittee and, certainly, Mr. Blanton was just as alert in protecting the Treasury of the United States as my friend from Mississippi.

Mr. Chairman, as a simple matter of justice, the Federal Government should pay a part of the cost of administering District affairs. This great Government of ours is not a beggar. We do not have a tin cup passing it around, and, certainly, services performed by the District of Columbia taxpayers ought to be reimbursed by the Federal Government. Certainly, services rendered to this great Government of ours by District residents should be paid for, and this subcommittee has recommended for that purpose as small a sum as is consistent with right thinking.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. In answer to what my good friend and colleague from Mississippi stated a moment ago, that I was evidently trying to increase the revenue of the District, I call upon him now to tell me how much, under the language of this bill, will be actually appropriated by the Federal Government in addition to the $5,000,000.

Mr. COLLINS. Not one dime.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Then why is this language in the bill? What is the purpose of the language, if it will not do any good, and why put it in the bill? Can the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. COLLINS. I have answered the gentleman's question by stating that not one dime will be contributed other than the $5,000,000.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Why have this additional language in the bill? Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I also call the gentleman's attention to the land bought by the Resettlement Administration in his district, in my district, and all over this country, and may I ask how much money the Federal Government is contributing to our counties where they are taking a large amount of land off the tax rolls?

Mr. COLLINS. Will the gentleman yield to me to answer that question?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. COLLINS. There are certain counties in my State that the Federal Government has taken over almost exclusively. I see my friend, BILL COLMER, sitting here, and I know counties in his district, to wit, Perry, where practically all the land in the county has been taken over by the Federal Government, and if the Federal Government ultimately does not pay taxes on the land it owns in Perry County, Perry County has got to fold up as a county government; and I know other jurisdictions that are in the same shape as Perry County. I may also say to my young friend that in the State of Washington, or perhaps it is Oregon, but in one or the other of those States, the Federal Government owns land there and the Federal Government pays taxes on that land; and there are other jurisdictions where the same rule prevails. There is not anything unusual about this particular situation in the District of Columbia.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I do this for the purpose of commending the subcommittee having in charge this District appropriation bill. I did not hear all of the comment made by the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee when he discussed the bill, but I hold in my hand a report concerning the employment of relatives and next of kin here in the District of Columbia. In the investigation which I note has been somewhat hurriedly made by virtue of the shortness of time, what was the real status, I ask the chairman, with respect to the employment of relatives in the District of Columbia and the number so employed?

Mr. COLLINS. The number is about 3,000, or a little more out of ten thousand and odd employees.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. About 3,000 out of 10,000 that are employed only in the District of Columbia set-up?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Of course, that does not include various other departments of the Government. I notice in this report there seems to be a typewritten list here that is perhaps an inch and a half thick, setting out in detail the number employed who are related to each other in the District of Columbia, totaling about 3,000 in number. I find one family here named McQueeney, and there is an unusual situation with reference to that particular family. It must be possessed of royal blood of some type or kind. They are not ordinary folk, but it must be some kind of super family. Apparently some 76 members of the McQueeney family are listed, and at this point, Mr. Chairman, I ask to be permitted to insert the names of that family who appear in this report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman that a request of that nature requiring inclusion in the RECORD of extraneous matter will have to be made in the House.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. I hope to find time to read them in a few minutes. The 76 members of the McQueeney family involve a pay roll of $119,960.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. And yet we talk about the relief of the unemployed and sit idly by and have a situation like this obtain in the Nation's Capital. I shall yield in a moment. That character of practice should be stopped. In 1931 I introduced a bill to prevent nepotism, which has been criticized by some and commented upon favorably by others, and I now call the attention of the House to the situation on the pay roll in the Nation's Capital. If that bill needs to be amended, if there are particular reasons why in some instances it should be amended, I have no objection to that. It is the principle involved, I advocate, because half a loaf beats no bread at all in behalf of the taxpayers as I see it. I would rather have part of something than all of nothing, as one of our colleagues said.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. In a moment. First, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FADDIS. I call the attention of the gentleman to the statement in the Bible that their seed shall inherit the earth. It seems as if the McQueeney family are about to inherit the schools of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. They are about to inherit the earning capacity of the taxpayers in this Capital City, and it ought to be stopped. This is only the second degree of relationship. If they went as far as the third, the number might run up to a hundred or 200.

Mr. LUCAS. What does the document show with respect to the type and kind of employment in which the McQueeneys are engaged and who employs them?

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. I should be very glad to give you in the time left some of the names and their employment:

McQueeney, Dorothy, schools, matron, $1,200.
McQueeney, Francis, brother, schools, $1,500.
McQueeney, Santus, brother, schools, $1,320.
McQueeney, John, brother, schools, $1,080.
McQueeney, William, uncle, schools, $3,300.
McQueeney, Earl, cousin, schools, $1,560.
Sweeney, Catherine, aunt, schools, $1,320.
Lynch, D'Arcy, cousin, schools, $1,680.
Lynch, Edw., cousin, schools, $1,320.
Lynch, William, cousin, schools, $1,320.
McKeever, Thomas, cousin, schools, $1,080.
Morgan, Vincent, cousin, schools, $1,500.
West, Charles, cousin, schools, $2,000.

This list of McQueeney names continues on and covers the entire next page, closely typewritten, and half of the next page after that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Without objection, the pro-forma amendments will be withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FORD].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

AUDITOR'S OFFICE

For personal services, $136,700, of which $10,000 shall be available immediately, without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and civil-service requirements, for examination of estimates of appropriations, and for other purposes; and the compensation of the present incumbent of the position of disbursing officer of the District of Columbia shall be exclusive of his compensation as United States property and disbursing officer for the National Guard of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language, beginning on page 5, line 16, as follows—

Without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and civil-service requirements—on the ground that if it is in compliance with existing law it is unnecessary, and if it is not, it is certainly legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The Chair is of the opinion that the provision to which the gentleman from Maine has made the point of order is patently legislation on an appropriation bill which is not authorized under the rules of the House. Therefore, the point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Public Utilities Commission is directed to cause an investigation to be made of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. with a view to ascertaining the reasonableness of existing rates, tolls, charges, and services.

Mr. O'BRIEN of Illinois and Mr. NICHOLS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. O'BRIEN of Illinois. To make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Oklahoma rise?

Mr. NICHOLS. I rise to make a point of order against a portion of the section just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be pleased to hear the gentleman and the grounds of his point of order.

Mr. NICHOLS. I raise a point of order against the following language, beginning on line 15:

The Public Utilities Commission is directed to cause an investigation to be made of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. with a view to ascertaining the reasonableness of existing rates, tolls, charges, and services.

The reason for the point of order is that it is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be pleased to hear the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

Mr. COLLINS. I do not care to discuss it, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] both make a point of order against the language appearing on page 8, line 15, which is as follows:

The Public Utilities Commission is directed to cause an investigation to be made of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. with a view to ascertaining the reasonableness of existing rates, tolls, charges, and services.

Existing law provides that—

Upon its own initiative or upon reasonable complaint made against any public utility that any of the rates, tolls, charges or schedules or services or time and conditions of payment, or any joint rate or rates, schedules or services are in any respect unreasonable or unjustly discriminatory, or that any time schedule, regulation, or act whatsoever affecting or relating to the conduct of any street railway, etc., * * * the Commission may in its discretion proceed, with or without notice, to make such investigation as it may deem necessary or convenient.

Therefore, it is clearly to be seen that under existing law the Public Utilities Commission has discretionary authority to make the types of investigation that are embraced in the language here upon which a point of order is made.

This language in the pending bill seeks to direct the Public Utilities Commissioners to do what they have clearly discretionary authority to do. The effect of this language would be to direct the Commissioners to do what they have authority to do within their discretion. Therefore it is legislation on a general appropriation bill and has the effect of changing existing law.

The Chair would also like to invite attention to the same provision of Hinds' Precedents, section 3853 of volume IV, to which attention was invited in the course of a previous ruling made by the Chair. This provision is as follows:

Although a law may give an executive officer authority to do a certain thing, a provision directing him so to do is legislative in nature and not in order on a general appropriation bill.

Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: On page 8, after line 14, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"The Public Utilities Commission is authorized to make an investigation of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. with a view to ascertaining the reasonableness of existing rates, tolls, charges, and services."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a point of order in the same section for the same reason, beginning in line 6, page 8.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that has already been read and the point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a different paragraph, one which has already been passed, and the Chair would remind the gentleman from Maryland that the point of order comes too late at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

For personal services, $79,000.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and three Members are present, a quorum.

The Clerk read as follows:

Administrative expenses, compensation to injured employees in the District of Columbia: For the enforcement of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for disability or death resulting from injury to employees in certain employments in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved May 17, 1928 (45 Stat., p. 600), $53,300, for transfer to and expenditure by the Employees' Compensation Commission under its appropriations "Salaries and expenses", $53,000, and "Printing and binding", $300.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ELLENBOGEN: On page 9, after line 24, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act. For the contribution of the District of Columbia under the provisions of section 5 (a) of the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act approved August 28, 1935 (49 Stat., p. 946), $175,000."

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to carry out the mandate of existing law and to restore the contribution of $175,000 to the unemployment insurance fund, which is required by existing law, the contribution to come out of District funds. The unemployment compensation law, section 5 (a), which I hold in my hand, reads as follows:

SEC. 5 (a). The District of Columbia shall pay—

Not may pay, but shall pay—contributions in addition to its contributions as an employer in the following amounts: For the calendar year 1936, $100,000; for the calendar year 1937, $125,000; and for the calendar year 1938, $175,000.

The Appropriations Committee in reporting out the District of Columbia appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1938—House Report No. 483, to accompany H. R. 5996, at page 9—recommended elimination of the $175,000 for three reasons:

First. The several States are not making a similar contribution.

Second. Payments from District employers are coming in steadily.

Third. There is no need for this additional payment by the District government.

What are the facts, however, that answer these arguments:

First. The fact that other States do not contribute as a government is not a sound reason why the District government should not do so. Many of the States are too poor to contribute. Others are and will be unlikely to do so unless some progressive law contains such a provision and leads the way. In inserting this provision in the District Act the thought which was in the mind of the sponsors was that the District law should be a model. The unemployment-insurance laws of most European countries provide for governmental contributions. This provision is advocated by all progressive persons who have studied unemployment insurance.

Second. The District of Columbia had on deposit in the Federal unemployment trust fund on March 15, 1937, approximately $2,255,000. This money must be used only to pay benefits beginning in 1938 according to the provisions of the District Unemployment Compensation Act. Even if it is true that payments from District employers are coming in steadily it cannot be inferred from this that the payments which employers are making are sufficient to adequately take care of unemployment in the District. In the bill as I originally introduced it the contributions to be required of employers was 3 percent of his pay roll. Under the present provisions of the act only 1 percent was collected during 1936 and 2 percent is being collected during the year 1937 but it is not until next year, 1938, that the full 3-percent rate will be in force.

Third. The argument that there is no need for the additional payment by the District government is false. The contribution by the District government was made because it was recognized that unemployment compensation, which is financed through the use of the pay-roll taxes, would take part of the burden of relief off the District government and thereby relieve the District of the necessity of appropriating as much money as it has had to in the past. During 1934 there was spent for relief in the District of Columbia a sum approximating nearly $6,500,000. Certainly when unemployment compensation goes into effect these relief costs will be diminished and the appropriation of $175,000 is a recognition of the responsibility which the District has in this connection.

Furthermore, on the present basis the District may have somewhere between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000 collected by the end of the year 1937 which will be available for benefits beginning in the year 1938. This amount collected in 2 years would only be sufficient to take care of the relief burden, on the 1934 basis, for merely 1 year. Can it be said, therefore, that there is no need for additional funds to supplement what has already been collected? Finally, in the original bill which I introduced in Congress benefits were provided for 26 weeks, plus 8 weeks of additional benefits to long-time employees, or a total of 34 weeks. Under the present law benefits are only provided for 16 weeks, plus 11 weeks to long-time employees, or a total of 27 weeks. If there ever is a sufficient amount of money in the fund, I certainly suggest that the duration of benefits under the law be liberalized rather than curtailing the amount of contributions. The unemployment-insurance law of Great Britain provides for benefits of 26 weeks, and such a provision was incorporated in my original bill. The 16 weeks now provided under the present act is not liberal enough to take care of the majority of unemployment. Before we do anything else we ought to liberalize the District law instead of deliberalizing it.

Abraham Epstein, who has written many books on the subject of social security and social insurance, is an ardent advocate of the necessity for States and the Federal Government contributing to social insurance. In his last book entitled "Insecurity: A Challenge to America", at page 795 he says on the subject of State contributions as follows:

> Despite the imperative necessity of governmental contributions in unemployment compensation, only one law—that of the District of Columbia—provides a regular governmental contribution to the fund.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. If a deficiency should arise in any of the States in the unemployment compensation fund, the State would not be called upon to make money available; but in case of a deficiency in the District of Columbia unemployment compensation fund the Federal Government would be called upon to make the money available out of its own funds to take care of the unemployed. This money is to be appropriated only so that it may be available if it should be necessary to pay it out in unemployment compensation benefits. It is not appropriated to be expended unless the need for its expenditure arises.

We hear so much about social security, about unemployment insurance. Why this attack upon the unemployment compensation laws in the District of Columbia, which is acclaimed all over this Nation as a model? I ask the members of the Committee to restore the small sum of $175,000 and to make it available for unemployment compensation benefits under the unemployment compensation law of the District of Columbia.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, the Unemployment Compensation Act goes into effect January 2, 1938. There is already about $2,500,000 available in this fund for use by the District of Columbia.

The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to add $175,000 to this fund to be paid out of the general revenues of the District of Columbia. No State in the Union is doing that and, therefore, there is no necessity of our requiring the residents of the District of Columbia to do something we do not require the residents of our own respective States to do.

Furthermore, I call this testimony to the attention of the committee:

> There is another item where I know that $175,000 can be saved, and that is this: There is $175,000 in this bill for the third appropriation for the District of Columbia unemployment fund to be paid out of the appropriations to the District. That is according to the act of August 1935. I know that is substantive law, but there is no reason that that money should be appropriated. This is the only State, if we call this a State, in the United States where the State itself, as far as I can find out, is contributing to the unemployment fund, and at the time that bill was enacted there was not a single person in Washington, including the labor leaders, who wanted that amount to be in there. There was nobody in the House that wanted it, as far as I know, except the author of the bill. The Senate did its best to keep it out, and did cut it from a million and a half to $175,000. Recently, Mr. Marshall, director of the unemployment fund here, stated that money was coming in in splendid shape, and that he felt the rates could be reduced and we would still have enough money. There is no necessity whatsoever, even though it is substantive law, that that $175,000 go into this bill.

After that statement was made, Mr. Sheild, clerk to the Appropriations Committee, checked its accuracy and found that it correctly stated the situation. In addition to that, this subcommittee communicated with the Social Security Board and found that the money that we had already was entirely available and in sufficient quantity to do the work contemplated by the act. So there is no necessity whatever for this $175,000.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. The gentleman does not mean to tell us that the Social Security Board is in favor of eliminating this?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Marshall said there was no necessity for it.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Marshall is not connected with the Social Security Board.

Mr. COLLINS. He administers it in the District of Columbia.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. How does Mr. Marshall know this year what the rate of unemployment will be in the District in the future?

Mr. COLLINS. I am stating what the Social Security Board advised the committee. There is no necessity of allowing money for anything and everything.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SURVEY OF MUNICIPAL FUNCTIONS

For a survey of all municipal functions and activities of the District of Columbia, including those under Federal agencies receiving District of Columbia appropriations, such survey to include the present tax and financial systems, efficiency and economy of administration, and all other matters incidental to the operation of the government of the District of Columbia, $15,000, to be immediately available, which sum shall be available for personal services without reference to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and for all other necessary expenses, and a report of such survey, with recommendations, shall be made to Congress at the next regular session.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the section on page 4, beginning in line 5, and including all of the language down to and including line 17, for the reason it is legislation.

Mr. Chairman, in support of that may I say at the present time there is being conducted such a survey as is provided for here by men under the direction of the District Commissioners. I may further say that there is now a subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House conducting hearings for the purpose of making a further survey as provided here.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] makes a point of order to the paragraph of the bill beginning on page 11, line 4, and extending through line 17, on the ground it is legislation on an appropriation bill. The existing law provides the manner in which funds may be used for these activities. The language beginning especially in line 12 waives the provisions of existing law and, of course, is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: Page 11, after line 4, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"For a survey of all municipal functions and activities of the District of Columbia, including those under Federal agencies receiving District of Columbia appropriations, such survey to include the present tax and financial systems, efficiency and economy of administration, and all other matters incidental to the operation of the government of the District of Columbia, $15,000, to be immediately available."

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment on the same ground, namely, it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, the objectionable language to which the Chair referred recently has been eliminated and the bill now merely provides for a survey of municipal functions.

Mr. NICHOLS. All of which does not in the least change the purpose. It is a matter which could not be done under existing law without aid of legislation from the Congress; therefore, it is clearly legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair inquires of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS], especially with reference to the language appearing in lines 6 and 7, beginning with the word "including" and reading as follows:

Including those under Federal agencies receiving District of Columbia appropriations.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment which I have offered by omitting the language to which the Chair just referred.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to modify the amendment by striking out the language referred to?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: Page 11, after line 4, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"For a survey of all municipal functions and activities of the District of Columbia, such survey to include the present tax and financial system, efficiency and economy of administration, and all other matters incidental to the operation of the Government of the District of Columbia, $15,000, to be immediately available."

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. May I ask the Chair, under the provisions of this amendment, who would conduct the investigation?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may say that is not a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair is not called upon to construe the language of an amendment.

Mr. NICHOLS. I thought maybe the Chair could.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi probably could give the gentleman the information desired. That is not within the province of the Chair.

Mr. NICHOLS. May I ask the gentleman from Mississippi, under the provisions of the amendment, who would conduct the investigation?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I would assume the Commissioners would do that, as they have a right to do.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order for the reason it is legislation and for the further reason the language should designate some person, persons, agency, or agencies to conduct the investigation.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Would it be possible to make these funds available to the Subcommittee on the District of Columbia to make this investigation? It might be possible for the gentleman from Mississippi to answer the question if the gentleman from Oklahoma cannot answer it.

Mr. COLLINS. I would not like to violate any of the functions of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I would be the last man in the world to endeavor to do that, and therefore I would have to decline any request in that direction.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, unquestionably the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the right to carry on such an investigation. Of course these investigations would of necessity be under their jurisdiction, therefore this provision is in compliance with existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair is of the opinion that the function here provided would be discharged by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and is of the opinion that in the exercise of their general authority and the discharge of the duties imposed upon them as Commissioners of the District of Columbia they would have the authority to make the type of survey or investigation contemplated and provided for in this amendment. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NICHOLS to the amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: Strike out "$15,000" and insert "$10,000, to be conducted by subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the latter part of the amendment, following the "$10,000", on the ground it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. NICHOLS. Only to this extent, Mr. Chairman, addressing my remarks now to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Mississippi: I think I properly understood the ruling of the Chair in ruling on the point of order I made that the amendment is legislation. The Chair held it was not legislation. Surely if the amendment was not legislation, the mere changing of the amount in the appropriation, with the addition of the words "to be conducted by subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia" could not make it legislation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I suggest that my understanding of the ruling of the Chair is that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi covered a matter already authorized by existing law. The Chair did not pass on the question of whether or not it was legislation, but the Chair's ruling, as I understand it, was to the effect the amendment was germane by reason of existing law authorizing a survey to be made. I simply refer to this in order to bring out the distinction that this is not new legislation. It is an appropriation authorized by existing law, as I understand the amendment as finally offered by the gentleman from Mississippi and as perfected after several efforts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

As has been well stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts in presenting the argument on the point of order, the decision of the Chair on the point of order made by the gentleman from Oklahoma to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi turned on the question of whether there is authority in existing law for the function which was sought to be performed by the provision of the amendment, whereas in connection with the pending amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma, the Chair invites attention to the fact that this amendment not only seeks to limit or reduce the amount of money provided for the investigation but goes further and provides an entirely different agency from the one contemplated in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The Chair is of the opinion that on a general appropriation bill for the District of Columbia an amendment would not be in order which directed an investigation to be made by a legislative committee of the House. This is not the bill making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government. The Chair feels, for the reasons stated and for other reasons which are quite obvious, that this amendment is not germane and is not in order. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NICHOLS to the amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: After the word "Columbia", strike out "$15,000" and insert "$1,000."

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment is simply to reduce the amount from $15,000 to $1,000. I can see no reason for providing for the expenditure of $15,000 by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to conduct an investigation which they are at this time conducting without the aid of any appropriation from the Congress. Furthermore, I can see no reason for the appropriation of $15,000 to be handed to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to conduct an investigation, when a subcommittee of a standing committee of the House of Representatives is now conducting such an investigation as is provided for in this provision of the bill.

Unless the House is ready to say the subcommittee of which I am a member is not competent to conduct such an investigation, unless it is ready to say a subcommittee of one of its standing committees is not possessed of sufficient interest and intelligence to make this kind of a survey, or unless the Members of the House are ready to say they simply want to give the District Commissioners $15,000, then for the life of me I cannot see how the Members of the House can support this amendment.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. SACKS. Is it not true that Congress gave $50,000 just a short while ago to an outside agency to do this very thing, and that a subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia is now going over some of these things?

Mr. NICHOLS. I thank my colleague from Pennsylvania. Fifty thousand dollars was paid to the Commission which prepared the Jacobs report. They made a very voluminous report, an inch or so thick, and brought the report to this Congress for consideration. The subcommittee which now has under its control the pending bill junked the $50,000 report of the Jacobs committee, and in its report on this bill stated the Jacobs report was not entitled to consideration by this body. I am not sure this will not happen to a report returned by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. SACKS. And is it not also true that a subcommittee of the House Committee on the District of Columbia is making the investigation upon this report, as well as other evidence, without a cent of appropriation?

Mr. NICHOLS. Absolutely. Of course, I may say to the gentleman I think, perhaps, we ought to have some money in order to make the investigation.

Mr. SACKS. I agree with the gentleman, but it should be given to the committee and not to an outsider.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, statements have been made about the Jacobs report. Of course, we all know that the purpose of the Jacobs committee was to study fiscal relations. The Jacobs committee recommended an investigation be made looking to a reorganization of the District government, and such an investigation should be made by persons competent to do it, because the savings that would result from an elimination of duplication in District activities would be enormous.

I called the attention of the House in my initial remarks today to the fact that a person engaged in manufacturing bed mattresses pays a $75 privilege tax and the Washington baseball park pays a $5 privilege tax. Moving-picture houses in the District of Columbia pay practically nothing, and this is one of the most profitable businesses here. The firm of Woodward & Lothrop pays tremendous taxes, and I have in mind a business machine corporation that does five times as much business in the District of Columbia as Woodward & Lothrop and pays no taxes whatever to the District of Columbia.

The question of privilege taxes on parking lots, on theaters, and on every activity in the District should be gone into carefully and looked into by experts, as well as a reorganization of the District of Columbia. As I have pointed out today, we have four activities administering playgrounds in the District of Columbia.

The District of Columbia cannot do this and there is no agency under the Commissioners that can do it, and if the investigation is to be made—and it is immaterial to me whether it is or is not—it should be made by competent people, and a sum of money sufficient to do the work should be available for this particular purpose.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. No; I do not.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman does not mean to say that this committee is not competent?

Mr. COLLINS. Oh, no; I have nothing but the best feeling toward the gentlemen.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman said it should be made by competent people.

Mr. COLLINS. I do not regard the gentleman as a tax expert, an expert on privilege taxes, or on reorganization of Government agencies, and it is no reflection for me to say that the gentleman is not versed in such matters. I do not imagine the gentleman is a physician or understands——

Mr. NICHOLS. Are the Commissioners?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not think so.

Mr. NICHOLS. This amendment gives them the privilege of making the investigation.

Mr. COLLINS. With this money they can employ men who are competent.

If the gentleman wants to strike out the provision, let him strike it out or let the House strike it out. All I am doing is defending the action of the committee in bringing this matter to the attention of the House so that it may come up for proper solution, and I maintain that $15,000 is a small enough sum of money to do this work.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, at the last Congress $50,000 was voted for an examination of the tax problems and the financial system in the District of Columbia. The committee that was appointed to spend this $50,000 went to 17 or 18 different cities, examined their tax structure, examined the make-up of their government agencies; and, as a result, a report was filed.

The sum of $50,000 was given for this purpose, and yet when they brought in a report the Appropriations Committee absolutely ignored it.

I say to give them another cent for such an investigation is simply wasting more money, because a subcommittee of the District of Columbia Committee is now considering these matters as set forth in that report, as well as other suggestions.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. I yield.

Mr. COLLINS. If the gentleman's statement were entirely correct, I would agree with the position he takes. The Jacobs committee was set up to make an independent study "of the fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia", and was not set up for the purpose of studying a reorganization of District government departments.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. Certainly.

Mr. NICHOLS. May I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that in the report on this bill the subcommittee recommended the junking of the Jacobs report?

Mr. SACKS. They did.

Mr. NICHOLS. And now they say this work should be carried out and the Commissioners should be given authority to conduct this investigation because the Jacobs committee recommends it.

Mr. SACKS. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. NICHOLS. That was the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi a moment ago.

Mr. SACKS. And, furthermore, the gentleman said we ought to have experts go into this matter, because the Commissioners are not experts, while Jacobs was an expert on financial matters and spent $50,000, and the Appropriations Committee scuttled his report.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that what this Committee should do is to vote down both of these amendments, the original and the substitute. The Committee on Appropriations asked this Committee to appropriate $15,000 to have an investigation by the Commissioners, so that they may correct something that they did themselves or neglected to do, in not finding the defects that we are complaining about. That is the reason the Jacobs committee was appointed. That is the reason this House should permit its own committee to make an investigation, because that committee has no interest so far as the District is concerned to shield anybody or any defects of these Commissioners, and by conducting the investigation and having before it the Commissioners and the heads of the different departments of the District of Columbia it will be able to determine and correct some of the defects. You cannot correct a defect by asking a person who is the cause of the defect to correct it, and someone other than a Commissioner should do that. I hope the Committee will vote down both of these amendments.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maryland should realize that the laws governing the different agencies having to do with the government of the District of Columbia are operating, not at the whim of the Commissioners but because of laws that Congress has passed. Those laws were written by the Congress. The privilege-tax laws on the statute books were passed by Congress, some of them 50 years ago, when conditions were entirely different from what they are now, and so it goes with all of the agencies of the District government, and no committee in Congress will ever under the shining sun be able to correct these abuses, these duplications, until personally you go into all of these activities to find out where the duplications are, and it is going to be necessary to spend some money in order to get the best help you can for the purpose of doing it. I do not want to spend this money myself; I have no desire to spend it. The agency best able to do it happens to be the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro-forma amendments are withdrawn and the question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COLLINS) there were—ayes 26, noes 20.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi demands tellers. All in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Eight Members have risen; not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the Collins amendment as amended by the Nichols amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general advertising, authorized and required by law, and for tax and school notices and notices of changes in regulations, $7,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for the payment of advertising in newspapers published outside of the District of Columbia, notwithstanding the requirement for such advertising provided by existing law.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to the proviso beginning on line 11, page 13:

Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for the payment of advertising in newspapers published outside of the District of Columbia, notwithstanding the requirement for such advertising provided by existing law.

I make the point of order that that is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, the law provides that all purchases over $1,000 shall be advertised in newspapers outside of the District of Columbia. The purpose of this amendment is to save the District a little money, and if the gentleman from Maryland does not want to do that, it suits me.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, it is not that the gentleman from Maryland does not want to save the District any money. This is a question of whether or not we are going to permit the Committee on Appropriations to come in here and change laws that are now on the statute books.

If we are going to permit that in the case of the District of Columbia, we might as well wipe out all legislative committees in this House. That is the question involved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair inquires of the gentleman from Maryland whether his point of order is made to the proviso, beginning on line 11 and extending through line 14?

Mr. PALMISANO. It is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair is of opinion that especially the last part of the proviso, beginning with the word "notwithstanding" clearly waives the provisions of existing law, and therefore changes existing law and would be legislation on a general appropriation bill, which is prohibited by the rules of the House. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For advertising notice of taxes in arrears July 1, 1937, as required to be given by the act of February 28, 1898, as amended, to be reimbursed by a charge of 50 cents for each lot or piece of property advertised, $5,500: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for the payment of advertising the delinquent tax list for more than once a week for 2 weeks in the regular issue of one morning or one evening newspaper published in the District of Columbia, notwithstanding the provisions of existing law.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order; and I might add that in this particular paragraph it might save the District of Columbia some money, because it would permit the District to advertise in Virginia and Maryland and obtain better prices.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is just not reading the language of the bill, or else he fails to comprehend its meaning, because that question is not involved in this provision. Furthermore, this provision was inserted in the law at the instance of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia so as to save money. Of course, if the gentleman from Maryland does not want to save money, that is his affair.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I still insist that there is a way to correct the evil, if it is an evil.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The Chair is prepared to rule. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO] makes the point of order against the language on page 13, beginning with the proviso in line 19 and extending through line 24. Obviously, for the reasons stated by the Chair in ruling on the last point of order made, the point of order now made by the gentleman should be sustained. For the same reasons heretofore stated the point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

For personal services and miscellaneous and contingent expenses required for maintaining a public employment service for the District of Columbia, $4,640.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

I rise for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee in regard to this paragraph pertaining to "central garage." That paragraph provides $73,020, and it pertains to personal or passenger-carrying automobiles. It does not include cars under the police or fire departments. It seems to me that is a tremendously large sum, and I would like to have the chairman of the committee explain if that sum is not exorbitant.

Mr. COLLINS. I will say this item has been reduced considerably over previous years, and was reduced very materially over the protests of certain District officials.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. By whom are these passenger cars used?

Mr. COLLINS. Building inspectors, plumbing inspectors, all types of inspectors. Men working on the streets. In the administration of the affairs of the District, with over 600,000 population, innumerable inspectors, building, plumbing, street, all types of inspectors are needed. There has been no one more zealous in his efforts to keep down appropriations than I have.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Is it not a fact that when the general public avails itself of these inspectors, they have to pay for such services? Plumbing inspection, building inspection, and so forth?

Mr. COLLINS. Even with this number, I would say that two-thirds of these officials travel on streetcars.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. It seems to me these items are very, very high.

Mr. COLLINS. At one time many of these employees were allowed a dollar a day for the use of their own automobiles. The present method was found to be so much more reasonable and less costly so we adopted this system very largely. I think the gentleman will find that this is a reasonable item in comparison with that expended in other cities of comparable size. In 1932 in the District it was $115,040. It is cut down in this bill to $74,820. If it could have been cut further this committee would have done it.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. I thank the gentleman for his information.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For personal services of teachers and librarians in accordance with the act approved June 4, 1924 (43 Stat., pp. 367–375), including for teachers colleges assistant professors in salary class 11, and professors in salary class 12, and including $4,000 for advancement of teachers from group 1A to 1B, group 2A to 2B, group 3A to 3B, and group 2C to 2D, $7,157,820: Provided, That as teacher vacancies occur during the fiscal year 1938 in grades 1 to 4, inclusive, of the elementary schools, such vacancies may be filled by the assignment of teachers now employed in kindergartens, and teachers employed in kindergartens are hereby made eligible to teach in the said grades: Provided further, That teachers shall not perform any clerical work except that which is necessary or incidental to their regular classroom teaching assignments: Provided further, That teaching vacancies that occur during the fiscal year 1938 wherever found may be filled by the assignment of teachers of special subjects and teachers not now assigned to classroom instruction, and such teachers are hereby made eligible for such assignment without further examination: Provided further, That the average of the salaries paid librarians in the public schools shall not exceed the average of the salaries paid employees performing the same grade of work in the Free Public Library.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language contained on page 25, beginning in line 4, as follows—

That teachers shall not perform any clerical work except that which is necessary or incidental to their regular classroom teaching assignments—for the reason that it is legislation and modifies existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). Patently this is legislation on a general appropriation bill, and there is no saving or retrenchment shown. Therefore, it being legislation, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: On page 25, line 3, after the word "grades" insert "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the salary of any teacher performing any clerical work other than that necessary or incidental to the classroom teaching assignments."

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order to that amendment for the same reason. The existing law today says nothing about clerical work being done by teachers. This amendment, of course, is introduced for the purpose of preventing teachers from doing any clercal work. Even though it places a limitation on some clerical work that they may be doing, it is contrary to existing law and the point of order would lie.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment here offered by the gentleman from Mississippi provides that no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the salary of any teacher performing any clerical work other than that necessary or incidental to the regular classroom teaching assignment.

The Chair is of opinion that this amendment in the form presented is very clearly a limitation and retrenchment of expenses, that it is germane, and that the point of order should be overruled.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to argue at length with the Chair, but the retrenchment could only be under the Holman rule that which would save the expenditure of money. This amendment does nothing to reduce the number of teachers. It provides nothing about reducing anybody's salary. It is directed only to their duties. Now, if the Chair is to hold that this is a retrenchment, then the Chair must go further and say that maybe some teachers who are doing clerical work will be discharged and cheaper people employed in their places, which probably might be the effect of the amendment. But, be that as it may, on the face of it that cannot be construed to be the situation by the Chair. If this amendment were directed at salaries, or if the amendment were directed at the number of teachers that were to be permitted to do clerical work, specifying the number, then it would be a retrenchment under the Holman rule, but certainly the general terms of this amendment cannot be so construed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remind the gentleman of the fact that there really does not have to be any saving if clearly on its face the amendment shows that it is a limitation.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMUNITY CENTER DEPARTMENT

For personal services of the director, general secretaries, and community secretaries in accordance with the act approved June 4, 1924 (43 Stat., pp. 369, 370); clerks and part-time employees, including janitors on account of meetings of parent-teacher associations and other activities; for personal services for public playgrounds adjacent to and in the vicinity of school buildings: Provided, That employments on such playgrounds, except directors who shall be employed for 12 months, shall be distributed as to duration in accordance with corresponding employments provided for in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1924; for keeping open public-school playgrounds, including playgrounds operated during the summer months and daily after school hours; for general maintenance, repairs, improvements, equipment, supplies, lighting fixtures, and other incidental and contingent expenses, including labor; and including $10,000 for health and physical education teachers to supervise play in schools of the central area bounded by North Capitol Street on the east, Florida Avenue on the north, the Mall on the south, and Twelfth Street on the west, $216,565.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph beginning in line 23, on page 26, down to and inclusive of line 18, on page 27, for the reason that it changes existing law and is, therefore, legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not, Mr. Chairman, except to say that the only provision of the paragraph subject to the point of order is the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma make the point of order against the entire paragraph?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I modify my point of order and direct it to that portion of the paragraph beginning in line 4, page 27, which is the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order against the proviso appearing in line 4, page 27, down to and including the figures "1924", in line 9. Is this the language to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. NICHOLS. It is, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to supplement the point of order.

Mr. COLLINS. Will the Chair be so kind as to restate the proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understood the gentleman from Oklahoma, he modified his point of order as first made so as to make the point of order against the proviso on page 27, beginning in line 4 and extending down to and including the figures "1924", in line 9.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will kindly state the point of order he makes against the paragraph, the Chair may be able to dispose of it and save time.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the effect of the entire paragraph is that of legislation. As the law now stands, the playgrounds are under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners. By putting the appropriation under this clause, jurisdiction of those playgrounds near public schools is transferred to the department of education.

I thought it probably would be simplified if something could be worked out between the gentleman from Oklahoma and the gentleman from Mississippi on the point of order which has been made. For that reason I desired to reserve the point of order until the Chair ruled on the other point of order, because I thought the gentlemen could probably work the situation out.

Mr. COLLINS. Why not withdraw the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the right to do that.

The Chair will proceed to rule on the point of order made by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The proviso on page 27, beginning at line 4 and continuing through the figures "1924" in line 9, is the language against which the point of order is made. The appropriation act of 1924 was law for that year and did not become permanent law. This provision would incorporate into this bill the legislative provision of the act of 1924, and is therefore legislation on an appropriation bill.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

Does the gentleman from Virginia insist on his point of order?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to insist upon my point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

For completing the construction of a vocational school for girls, to replace the old Dennison School Building on S Street, on land owned by the District of Columbia at Arkansas Avenue and Allison Street NW., $236,000: Provided, That the limit of cost fixed in the act of June 23, 1936, is hereby increased from $280,000 to $336,000.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language appearing on page 33, beginning in line 2, with particular reference to the proviso which increases the existing act and authorization from $280,000 to $336,000.

Mr. COLLINS. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. PALMISANO. Yes.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman makes the point of order, we cannot build this school building.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of what we can or cannot do. There is a principle involved here.

Mr. COLLINS. I do not think the gentleman wants to make the point of order.

Mr. PALMISANO. It is the principle involved.

Mr. COLLINS. If the gentleman wants to take out of this bill the authorization for the erection of a school building in the District of Columbia, all right. The building cannot be constructed.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on the point of order?

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, as I said previously, the question involved here is, Are we going to permit the Appropriations Committee to legislate for the whole Congress? I stood on this floor last year and asked that money be appropriated for public-school buildings here to help the people of the District of Columbia. If we are going to permit the Appropriations Committee to come in here and legislate and ignore all acts of Congress, why, then, we might just as well appoint one committee and wipe out all of the other committees. That is the question involved. If this appropriation is necessary, they can bring in a bill tomorrow and the District Committee will report it favorably within a day. We are not opposed to this, but I think the principle involved is whether or not we shall permit them to legislate.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. If that is stricken out, what will be the effect?

Mr. COLLINS. There will be no school building.

Mr. PALMISANO. There will be a school building, provided they can build it for $280,000.

Mr. COLLINS. And they cannot do it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I subscribe completely, in a general way, to the position the gentleman takes, and the gentleman and his committee is to be commended. But we have to look at things from the practical standpoint. On principle I thoroughly agree with the gentleman, but there should be a practical application of the principle involved here of an appropriations committee taking unto itself the duty and prerogatives of a legislative committee. In this case, in view of the importance of the matter, in view of the delay, and in view of the fact if legislation passes it has to come back for another appropriation; and looking at it from a practical angle, I hope my friend will look at it in the same way, in the practical broad light he is so capable of doing, and not press his point of order.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I can appreciate the position I am in on this particular point of order. Had this particular subcommittee only reported one or two amendments, the Members of the House could readily understand the situation. But this subcommittee has come in here with 20 or 30 amendments of existing law, ignoring the law as it presently stands. It seems to me we ought to serve notice on the Appropriations Committee that that cannot be tolerated.

On the other side of the Capitol things have been put back into bills and, as far as I am concerned, I would prefer to wipe it out at this time and let that body put it back in, and I will not object. I do think we ought to serve notice on this committee that in the future this will not be tolerated. I think the rules ought to be changed so that the chairman of the District Committee may be appointed a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations having to do with the District of Columbia in order that the two committees could work together.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BACON. May I point out to the gentleman that often a long time elapses between the authorization for a building and the time when the Appropriations Committee can in the normal course of events appropriate the amount of money necessary. This happens very frequently with a great many appropriation bills. Sometimes a year or a year and a half elapses between the passage of the bill brought in by the regular committee which authorizes the building and the time when the Budget sends an estimate to the Appropriations Committee.

We all know that the cost of building has been rising very rapidly in the past 6 or 7 months. If this goes on, by the time you bring in a new authorization for the increased amount the cost of building may have again increased, and again it will be thrown out on a point of order. This situation may continue indefinitely.

It seems to me very wise for the Committee on Appropriations to take into account the existing building costs at the moment when the appropriation is made; otherwise a building may never be built. Oftentimes in the Treasury appropriation bills the committee has had to increase the limit of cost to meet a given situation due to the increased cost, involving an increase in the price of land, and so forth. So the building will not be built if the gentleman insists on his point of order.

Mr. PALMISANO. I appreciate the position and I am not going to continue to object. If there was only this one amendment involved, there would be no question in my mind. However, I want to stop the practice of a Subcommittee on Appropriations having to do with the District of Columbia coming in here and tacking on new legislation and limiting other legislation that the Congress has previously passed.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am glad the gentleman is not going to press his point of order. At least, I assume he is not going to from what he has just stated. This is a step in the right direction.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the point of order is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase, exchange, and maintenance of passenger-carrying and other motor vehicles and the replacement of those worn out in the service and condemned, $67,300.

Uniforms: For furnishing uniforms and other official equipment prescribed by department regulations as necessary and requisite in the performance of duty to officers and members of the Metropolitan Police, including cleaning, alteration, and repair of articles transferred from one individual to another, $49,750.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the chairman of the subcommittee a question. Does the District government purchase all uniforms and other equipment for the police in the city of Washington?

Mr. COLLINS. That is right.

Mr. SACKS. The police are not required to pay anything for their uniforms and the other things necessary in the performance of their duties?

Mr. COLLINS. That is right.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro-forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the following hospital and sanatoria, which, on and after July 1, 1937, shall be under the direction and control of the health department of the District of Columbia and subject to the supervision of the Board of Commissioners.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language on page 46, beginning in line 1, after the word "sanatoria", ending with the word "Commissioners", in line 5 of the same page, that it is clearly legislation on a general appropriation bill, which is contrary to the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from New Jersey makes a point of order against certain language in the first paragraph on page 46. Under existing law these hospitals and institutions are under the Board of Public Welfare. This provision seeks to transfer these hospitals and institutions to the Department of Health. It is obviously legislation on a general appropriation bill.

The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

POLICE COURT

Salaries: For personal services, $107,030: Provided, That upon occupancy of the new police court building the Commissioners are authorized to transfer such part of this appropriation for payment of custodial employees as may be necessary to the appropriation in this act for "Care of the District Buildings."

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the language contained in the paragraph beginning in line 22 of page 48, after the "$107,030", which reads:

Provided, That upon occupancy of the new police court building the Commissioners are authorized to transfer such part of this appropriation for payment of custodial employees as may be necessary to the appropriation in this act for "Care of the District buildings"—

That it is legislation and changes existing law.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield so I may ask a question?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield for a question.

Mr. COLLINS. The Commissioners of the District asked this be done in order to put the administration of public buildings under one authority.

Mr. NICHOLS. May I say to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, that if the Commissioners wanted this thing done, the proper procedure would have been for them to have made their request to the legislative Committee on the District of Columbia. I think their request would probably have been very readily granted by that committee. I may observe for the benefit of the gentleman from Mississippi that this is not the proper place for such a provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes a point of order against the proviso on page 48, line 22, which reads:

Provided, That upon occupancy of the new police-court building the Commissioners are authorized to transfer such part of this appropriation for payment of custodial employees as may be necessary to the appropriation in this act for "Care of the District buildings."

This provision seeks to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to transfer funds appropriated for one specific purpose to another purpose, and, apparently, seeks also to impose an additional duty on the Commissioners. Therefore, it is legislation on a general appropriation bill, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For completing construction of a building in Judiciary Square to house the Police Court of the District of Columbia, including furniture and equipment, and inspection, $450,000, and the supervision, control, and operation of said building shall be under the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who are authorized to assign surplus space in said building to other activities of the municipal government.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that portion of the last paragraph on page 49 beginning after the word "control", in line 20, which reads, "and operation of said building shall be under the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who are authorized to assign surplus space in said building to other activities of the municipal government" for the reason it is legislation and changes the provisions of existing law.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Why does not the gentleman include in his point of order the words "and the supervision, control, and operation", beginning on line 20? In other words, all after the figure "$450,000."

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for the observation. I modify my point of order to include the language beginning in line 20 referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COLLINS. No, Mr. Chairman. I do not know what we are going to do with the available space there, but it is, perhaps, all right.

Mr. NICHOLS. May I state to the gentleman the custodians of the particular buildings will assign the space in the orderly manner as they have always done.

The CHAIRMAN. Patently, the language referred to is legislation on an appropriation bill. Therefore, the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries: For the chief justice, eight associate justices, nine stenographers (one for the chief justice and one for each associate justice), and other personal services, $137,300.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in relation to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and the court of appeals here, there is considerable feeling that these courts should come under the Department of Justice for budgetary purposes.

I have had several chats with my friend from Mississippi and I would like to ask the gentleman if he has any observations to make in this respect. My purpose is not to create any controversy on this occasion, but does not the gentleman feel that these are United States courts and should come under the Department of Justice budget rather than that of the District of Columbia?

Mr. COLLINS. There are two theories about that. One is that the District of Columbia has always operated under the laws of the State of Maryland, and therefore these courts are comparable with State courts in other jurisdictions. Recently, there was legislation enacted giving the judges of the supreme court the same status as District judges and giving the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia the same status as courts of appeal in other jurisdictions, and because of the enactment of this statute there is certain agitation for the transfer of these courts from the District of Columbia appropriation to the Department of Justice appropriation, and then divide the cost between the District and the Federal Government. I think by next year there will be some method worked out to carry out the purpose the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank the gentleman for his observation.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

RELIEF OF THE POOR

For relief of the poor, including medical and surgical supplies, artificial limbs, and for pay of physicians to the poor, to be expended under the direction of the Board of Public Welfare, $13,000.

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. AMLIE: On page 65, line 8, after the word "welfare", strike out "$13,000" and insert "$2,000,000."

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Chairman, I made my talk on this subject yesterday. I merely insert here a figure which is approximately the figure that would be provided for the relief of employables in comparable cities throughout the United States.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For each and every purpose, except the acquisition of land, requisite for and incident to the work of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission as authorized by the act entitled "An act providing for a comprehensive development of the park and playground system of the National Capital", approved June 6, 1924 (U. S. C., title 40, sec. 71), as amended, including personal services in the District of Columbia, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, not to exceed $1,000 for printing and binding, not to exceed $500 for traveling expenses and carfare of employees of the Commission, and not to exceed $300 for professional, scientific, technical, and reference books, and periodicals, $40,150: Provided, That the Commission may procure supplies and services without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $50.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language on page 69, beginning in line 24, as follows:

Provided, That the Commission may procure supplies and services without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $50.

I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that this is legislation on an appropriation bill and therefore contrary to the rules of the House.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman from New Jersey withhold the point of order?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. COLLINS. I may state that this is a provision carried in all appropriation bills.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman from New Jersey yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. Is it not a fact, may I ask the chairman of the subcommittee, this is carried in other appropriation bills with a limitation of $25 instead of $50?

Mr. COLLINS. And, furthermore, a great many of the departments have authority to purchase up to $50, and this is simply to make the rule uniform.

Mr. NICHOLS. As a matter of fact, the other appropriation bills have limited the amount to $25.

Mr. COLLINS. No; $50 is the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentlewoman from New Jersey insist upon her point of order?

Mrs. NORTON. I insist upon my point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from New Jersey makes a point of order against the proviso beginning in line 24, page 69.

Obviously, this provision changes existing law and is legislation on an appropriation bill, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

This item came to the Committee on Appropriations from the Budget and was in the bill as it came to us and was not inserted in the bill by the committee.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. In reply to the gentleman from Mississippi, and by way of justification of the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] in having interposed this point of order, even though the Budget did come to the Committee on Appropriations and ask that committee to put a legislative provision in an appropriation bill, it does not make it so holy that it does not necessarily follow that the legislative committee is the committee to which the request should have been made by the Budget or the Commissioners, and the legislative committee of the District would have been very happy probably to have passed a bill which would have put these departments in perfect harmony with the other departments of the Government, and the District Committee will still be ready at any time it is requested to do so by the Budget or the District Commissioners to report such a bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro-forma amendments are withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For paving, repaving, grading, and otherwise improving streets, avenues, and roads, including temporary per-diem services, surveying instruments and implements, and drawing materials, and the maintenance of motor vehicles used in this work, including curbing and gutters and replacement of curb-line trees where necessary, and including trees and parkings, assessment and permit work and the several purposes provided for in that paragraph, and salaries and expenses of the office of the Director of Vehicles and Traffic, as follows, to be paid from the special fund created by section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for a tax on motor-vehicle fuels sold within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved April 23, 1924 (43 Stat., p. 106), and accretions by repayment of assessments.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the portion beginning in line 11 on page 71 after the word "work", and beginning with the word "including", going through lines 11, 12, and 13, on down to and inclusive of line 21, on the ground that it is legislation and changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order made to the language on page 71 beginning after the comma in line 11, and extending to and including the colon in line 21?

Mr. NICHOLS. That is correct. If there is any provision in the rules of the House which would permit this language to stay in the bill as against the point of order, that it is legislation, it would have to be held under the provisions of the Holman rule. I assume, of course, that the Chairman is thoroughly familiar with the provisions of the Holman rule. I want, however, to read it to the Chair at this time, or at least a portion of it:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salaries of officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, etc.

The organic law which provided for the expenditure of funds derived from the collection of the gasoline tax in the District of Columbia, stating where those funds might be expended, reads as follows:

A tax of 2 cents per gallon on all motor-vehicle fuels within the District of Columbia sold or otherwise disposed of by an importer or used by him in a motor vehicle operated for hire or for commercial purposes, shall be levied, collected, and paid in the manner hereinafter provided.

I ask the Chair to listen carefully to the reading of the following portion of the law:

The proceeds of the tax, except as provided in section 840 of this title—

And for the benefit of the Chair let me say that section 840 of this title simply provides certain exemptions of certain classes of motor vehicles from the provisions of this tax law—shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States entirely to the credit of the District of Columbia, and shall be available for appropriation by the Congress exclusively for road and street improvements and repair.

In Hinds' Precedents, volume 7, page 411, section 1395, this is stated:

A provision construing or interpreting existing law is legislation and is not in order on an appropriation bill.

And there follows the ruling where a similar objection to this was made, and it was sustained. My point is this: In answer to this point of order the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations can only say, I believe, that this language is justified because curbs, gutters, parkways, streets, motor vehicles, and other things related thereto are parts of a street and a roadway. If that is the contention, then that is an attempt on the part of this subcommittee to do the thing that section 1394 says cannot be done, to wit:

A provision construing or interpreting existing law is legislation not in order on an appropriation bill.

In other words, if the District of Columbia up to this time has been using these funds only for a particular purpose, that is an administrative discretion of theirs and this rule provides that if an Appropriations Committee attempts to direct that executive officer that he must use the funds for some other purpose than that for which he is using it, that that is legislation, and I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this under that rule is clearly legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, the law merely says that the gasoline-tax fund shall be available for road and street improvement and repair. Trees are just as much a part of the street as the center of the street. Assessment and curbing work simply means the paving of sidewalks and gutters. Certainly operation and maintenance of traffic lights is a part of street improvements.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield.

Mr. TABER. All there is to it is that you have specified the parts of certain things that are provided for in the law for which the money is to be used?

Mr. COLLINS. And that is all.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, in the light of the statement of the chairman of the subcommittee, clearly this is legislation, because that thing cannot be done by an appropriations committee. I will read from volume 7 of Cannon's Precedents, at page 444, section 1438, as follows:

A provision limiting discretion vested in an executive officer is legislation and not in order on an appropriation bill.

Which goes back to the very thing I stated before. If these gentlemen whose duty it is to spend the funds derived from this gasoline tax are not spending it for the things provided for here, then if you direct them what they shall spend the money for, that makes it legislation, beyond question. Under the admission of the chairman of the subcommittee, certainly it cannot be construed as anything else.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The Chair is prepared to rule. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] makes a point of order against certain language appearing on page 71, beginning with the word "including", in line 11, and extending to the end of the paragraph.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] in speaking in opposition to the point of order, has called attention to certain improvements that are provided for by the language included in this part of the bill. The Chair would be inclined to agree with the gentleman in the contention that he presents in all respects except that relating to the question of salaries and expenses of the office of director of vehicles and traffic. The Chair observes that the office of director of vehicles and traffic in provided for in the act to regulate traffic in the District of Columbia, and so forth. An examination of this law clearly shows that the director of vehicles and traffic has rather broad general duties to perform, and it is not related alone to what might be imposed upon him in connection with the Gasoline Tax Act. The Gasoline Tax Act provides, as was pointed out by the gentleman from Oklahoma, that—

> The proceeds of the tax, except as provided in section 840 of this title, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States entirely to the credit of the District of Columbia and shall be available for appropriations by the Congress exclusively for road and street improvements and repairs.

The Chair is unable to see how that language would be broad enough to authorize the payment of salaries for the director of vehicles and traffic. The Gasoline Tax Act does not make provision for the payment of the salaries to which the Chair has directed attention. Therefore, salaries paid out of this fund would not be authorized by law. For that reason the provision to which the point of order is made would, in the opinion of the Chair, be legislation on a general appropriation bill and would be subject to a point of order.

Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: Page 71, line 7, insert a new paragraph, as follows:
> "For paving, repaving, grading, and otherwise improving streets, avenues, and roads, including temporary per-diem services, surveying instruments and implements, and drawing materials, and the maintenance of motor vehicles used in this work, including curbing and gutters and replacement of curb-line trees where necessary, and including trees and parkings, assessment and permit work and the several purposes provided for in that paragraph, as follows, to be paid from the special fund created by section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to provide for a tax on motor-vehicle fuels sold within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes', approved April 23, 1924 (43 Stat., p. 106), and accretions by repayment of assessments."

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment for the same reason. If I properly interpret the amendment, it is the exact language that was heretofore in the bill, with the exception that that portion has been stricken which provides for the payment of the salary of a supervisor of traffic. Am I correct in that understanding?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I interpose a point of order again for the same reason. I would like to call the attention of the Chair to this fact:

I call attention to section 817, page 15, of Cannon's Procedure in the House of Representatives, where the following appears:

> MEMBER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the proposed appropriation is not authorized by law.

I would particularly direct the Chair's attention to this language:

> The burden of proof of authorization is on proponents, and those upholding an item in an appropriation have the burden of showing the law authorizing it.

With this in mind I would call the attention of the Chair again to the language of the statute which provides that the gasoline tax—

> Except as provided in section 840 of this title shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States entirely to the credit of the District of Columbia and shall be available for appropriation by the Congress exclusively for road and street improvement and repair.

It is the opinion of the gentleman from Oklahoma that in ruling on this point of order unless the Chair is willing within the knowledge of the Chair to presume how broad a scope is encompassed by the phrase "exclusively for street and road repairs", or the language of the statute, that the Chair should require the chairman of the subcommittee to point out some definition or some provision of law which provides that trees planted in the parkway along the street, and that lights hanging over the street, and that sidewalks running parallel to the street are a part of the street itself—that unless the Chair is prepared to say of the Chair's own knowledge that a street encompasses all of those things, then it is encumbent upon the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee to point out wherein the law provides that they are included; and if he cannot, then, in my judgment, the point of order that this is legislation changing existing law should be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, the wording of which, as pointed out by the gentleman from Oklahoma, is the same as the wording of the bill excluding the portion to which the Chair invited attention in the ruling made on the previous point of order. It will be remembered that the Chair pointed out in ruling on the previous point of order that the so-called Gasoline Tax Act provides:

> That the proceeds of the tax, except as provided in section 840 of this title, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States entirely to the credit of the District of Columbia and shall be available for appropriation by the Congress exclusively for road and street improvement and repair.

The Chair has consulted the dictionary and finds that the word "improvement" is there defined to be—

> An act or process of improving, as profitable employment or use, cultivation, development, enhancement, or increase; especially betterment—

And so forth. The word "improvement" appears in the so-called Gasoline Tax Act, and this word is defined in the dictionary as meaning, among other things, "especially betterment." The Chair, therefore, is of the opinion that the various functions mentioned in the language of the amendment and the various things to be provided—trees, parking, curbing, guttering, and so forth—certainly are proper to be included as betterment or improvement of the streets.

The word "improvement", defined to mean "betterment", makes the word broad and general enough to include all of the various activities mentioned in this amendment. They are, therefore, authorized by existing law. For this reason the Chair feels that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi is in order.

The point of order is overruled.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

> For current work of repairs to streets, avenues, roads, and alleys, including the reconditioning of existing gravel streets and roads; for cleaning snow and ice from streets, sidewalks, cross walks, and gutters in the discretion of the Commissioners; and including the purchase, exchange, maintenance, and operation of non-passenger-carrying motor vehicles used in this work, $800,000: Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, should they deem such action to be to the advantage of the District of Columbia, are hereby authorized to purchase a municipal asphalt plant at a cost not to exceed $30,000: Provided further, That appropriations contained in this act for highways, sewers, city refuse, and the water department shall be available for snow removal when specifically and in writing ordered by the Commissioners.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph on page 77, beginning in line 9 after the semicolon, the following language:

And including the purchase, exchange, maintenance, and operation of non-passenger-carrying motor vehicles used in this work, $800,000.

I might make this in sections, Mr. Chairman, but I will make it all at once. I make a point of order against the following language on page 77, line 11:

Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, should they deem such action to be to the advantage of the District of Columbia, are hereby authorized to purchase a municipal asphalt plant at a cost not to exceed $30,000: Provided further, That appropriations contained in this act for highways, sewers, city refuse, and the water department shall be available for snow removal when specifically and in writing ordered by the Commissioners.

I make a point of order against these provisions on the ground that they are legislation and change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not know of anything in that paragraph that is subject to a point of order. It seems to me the removal of snow is a great improvement.

The CHAIRMAN. May I inquire of the gentleman from Mississippi, is the purchase or building of an asphalt plant authorized by law?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not understand that there is any intention of building an asphalt plant; but, Mr. Chairman, we have carried this language in the bill year after year so as to keep down the price of asphalt. As I stated, it has been carried in the bill for years, because without it we would probably pay twice as much for asphalt, or considerably more for asphalt, than without this provision. That is the object of the language. It has been carried in the bill for years and has had a very efficacious effect.

Mr. NICHOLS. I may say to the gentleman if I could be assured and if the gentleman was more positive about that statement than he was as to whether or not there was an asphalt plant authorized by law, I certainly should not be standing here on the floor opposed to anything which would keep the price of asphalt down, so far as its purchase by the District of Columbia is concerned. But since I cannot be assured of it in more positive form than I am at this time, I insist on the point of order.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, there is no intention on the part of the District to build an asphalt plant. The same language is carried in the bill that has been carried for many years and, as I have said, solely for the purpose of keeping down the price of asphalt.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma insist on his point of order?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I do. I may say if the Commissioners want such a law we will gladly pass that legislation for them.

The CHAIRMAN. While the Chair is constrained to agree with many of the observations made by the gentleman from Mississippi, yet the Chair is of the opinion that the inclusion of the words in lines 14 and 15, as follows: "and hereby authorized to purchase a municipal asphalt plant", and so forth, together with the failure to point out to the Chair the provision of existing law authorizing such an activity, makes this legislation on an appropriation bill, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: Page 77, line 5, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"For current work of repairs to streets, avenues, roads, and alleys, including the reconditioning of existing gravel streets and roads; for cleaning snow and ice from streets, sidewalks, cross walks, and gutters in the discretion of the Commissioners; and including the purchase, exchange, maintenance, and operation of non-passenger-carrying motor vehicles used in this work, $800,000: Provided, That appropriations contained in this act for highways, sewers, city refuse, and the water department shall be available for snow removal when specifically and in writing ordered by the Commissioners."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For assessment and permit work, paving of roadways under the permit system, and construction and repair of sidewalks and curbs around public reservations and municipal and United States buildings, including purchase or condemnation of streets, roads, and alleys, and of areas less than 250 square feet at the intersection of streets, avenues, or roads in the District of Columbia, to be selected by the Commissioners, and including maintenance of non-passenger-carrying motor vehicles, $150,000.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to the language in line 22, page 79, after the comma, as follows:

And construction and repair of sidewalks and curbs around public reservations and municipal and United States buildings, including purchase or condemnation of streets, roads, and alleys, and of areas less than 250 square feet at the intersection of streets, avenues, or roads in the District of Columbia, to be selected by the Commissioners, and including maintenance of non-passenger-carrying motor vehicles, $150,000.

Mr. Chairman, there might be a portion of that language which may conform to existing law, but I make the point of order because it is legislation and does not conform to existing law. Certainly that portion which provides for the construction of sidewalks around public reservations and municipal and United States buildings cannot be according to existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard?

Mr. COLLINS. The Chair has already ruled on a similar point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes a point of order to the language beginning in line 22, page 79, down to and including line 4, on page 80.

The Chair has had occasion in several instances during the course of the consideration of this bill to invite attention to the so-called Gas Tax Act and the provisions therein relating to the improvement and betterment of the streets and roads. The Chair feels for the reasons heretofore stated in passing upon several other points of order very similar in application to the pending question that these improvements, such as paving, sidewalk improvement, and all of those various activities, come within the scope of this act to which reference has been made; therefore these activities are authorized by existing law, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For personal services, department of vehicles and traffic, $76,440.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I interpose a point of order against the language appearing in line 13, page 80, reading as follows:

For personal services, department of vehicles and traffic, $76,440.

That this is legislation and contrary to existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order against the language appearing in lines 13 and 14, on page 80, which reads as follows:

For personal services, department of vehicles and traffic, $76,440.

It will be remembered that on page 71 of the bill a point of order was made against language appearing in lines 15 and 16. For the reasons indicated at the time that point of order was under consideration, the Chair is of opinion that this is an appropriation not authorized by law and therefore sustains the point of order.

For the purchase of motor-vehicle identification number plates, $20,000.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to interpose a point of order against the language beginning in line 16, page 81, "For the purchase of motor-vehicle identification number plates, $20,000", for the reason it is legislation on an appropriation bill, which is contrary to the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes a point of order against the language appearing in lines 16 and 17 on page 81. The Chair is of the opinion the so-called Gas Tax Act, to which reference has been made on several occasions during the consideration of this bill, does not authorize appropriation out of that fund to provide for these identification plates, and so forth. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Commissioners, or their duly designated representatives, are further authorized to employ temporarily such laborers, skilled laborers, drivers, hostlers, and mechanics as may be required exclusively in connection with sewer, water, street, and road work, and street cleaning, or the construction and repair of buildings, and bridges, furniture and equipments, and any general or special engineering or construction or repair work, and to incur all necessary engineering and other expenses, exclusive of personal services, incidental to carrying on such work and necessary for the proper execution thereof, said laborers, skilled laborers, drivers, hostlers, and mechanics to be employed to perform such work as may not be required by law to be done under contract, and to pay for such services and expenses from the appropriations under which such services are rendered and expenses incurred: Provided, That per-diem personnel employed under appropriations contained in this act shall be paid only for time actually worked, and the Commissioners are hereby directed to transfer to the per-diem rolls any employees now carried on the annual rolls whose duties can be performed as per-diem employees, and savings effected thereby shall not be available for expenditure for any purpose, and appropriations for annual salaries shall be available for payment as per-diem wages of such employees.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the proviso on page 89, beginning in line 1, after the word "incurred", reading—

Provided, That per-diem personnel employed under appropriations contained in this act shall be paid only for time actually worked, and the Commissioners are hereby directed to transfer to the per-diem rolls any employees now carried on the annual rolls whose duties can be performed as per-diem employees, and savings effected thereby shall not be available for expenditure for any purpose, and appropriations for annual salaries shall be available for payment as per-diem wages of such employees—because it is legislation on an appropiration bill and is contrary to the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The provision of the bill to which reference has been made by the gentleman from Oklahoma does not clearly and definitely show a saving under this language, and therefore does not come under the Holman rule. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: On page 89, line 1, after the word "incurred", insert the following: "Provided, That per-diem personnel employed under appropriations contained in this act shall be paid only for time actually worked, and savings effected thereby shall not be available for expenditure for any purposes."

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is contrary to existing law. Per-diem employees are entitled to annual and sick leaves under the law. This amendment would be in violation of that statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair is of the opinion the amendment as presented here clearly comes within the provisions of the Holman rule. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAMSPECK) there were—ayes 19, noes 15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 5996, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, 1938, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FORD of Mississippi moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to that committee to effect such reductions as will eliminate all appropriations from the United States Treasury for the use of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FORD of Mississippi) there were—ayes 2, noes 47.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present, and object to the vote on that ground.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INVESTIGATION OF SIT-DOWN STRIKES

Mr. COX, from the Committee on Rules, reported House Resolution 162, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed, as follows:

House Resolution 162

Whereas an epidemic of sit-down strikes is sweeping the Nation and threatening the very foundations of orderly government; and

Whereas many of such sit-down strikes are accompanied by refusal on the part of the strikers to permit the owners of the property to enter their property or to have access to their files or to exercise any of the prerogatives of lawful ownership; and

Whereas such sit-down strikes are doing infinitely more harm to the cause of labor than to the cause of industry and will likely produce a public reaction which will set back the cause of labor for another decade; and

Whereas it has been reported that some of the participants in these sit-down strikes have gone so far as to picket the courthouses and interfere with the orderly administration of justice; and

Whereas it is imperative that the Congress of the United States shall know the cause or causes of such sit-down strikes and what influences are producing same; and

Whereas it has been reported that some of these sit-down strikes are engineered by some who wish to discredit labor in the eyes of the American people; and

Whereas it is imperative that Congress shall investigate the whole situation from every angle and, as the same affects management, stockholders, and employees, to determine not only the causes but to immediately determine what steps the Federal Government can take to remedy this deplorable situation; and

Whereas such strikes have become Nation-wide in scope and directly influence the free movement of commerce from one State to another and from one section to another; and

Whereas labor is losing millions of dollars in consequence of such sit-down strikes: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a special committee to be composed of seven members, not more than five of whom may be from the same political party, for the purpose of conducting an investigation of facts regarding (1) the cause or causes producing such sit-down strikes; (2) the truth as to actual conduct of all parties to such strike, including the management and those acting under the management as well as those who take part in the strike; (3) upon whose advice and instigation such sit-down strikes were called and carried on; (4) the true condition in the affected industries in reference to wages, hours of work, and other conditions under which the employees are compelled to work; (5) the charges that the management of such affected industries have employed agents to perpetrate violence upon their employees; (6) the efforts made by the local and State authorities to prevent such sit-down strikes; (7) and all other charges which have been made or will be made by the representatives of labor on the one hand and the management of industry on the other so that a full, complete, and impartial finding of facts may be had; (8) and all other questions in relation thereto that would assist Congress in the immediate enactment of necessary remedial legislation.

Such special committee when organized is hereby authorized to request the fullest cooperation in the conduct of this investigation from the Department of Labor and the Department of Justice, and such other departments of the Government that the committee may deem necessary, including access to all files from such departments pertinent to the investigation, and use of such employees and facilities of such departments as may be advantageous to the conduct of such investigation.

That said special committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such records, books, papers, and documents, by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony as it may deem necessary.

Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives at the request of the chairman and shall be served by the Sergeant at Arms of the House or any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses.

Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, or who, having been required to produce records, books, papers, and documents pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, fails or refuses to produce such required records, books, papers, and documents, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 192), as amended.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—UNITED STATES RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION (H. DOC. NO. 190)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the annual report of the United States Railroad Administration for the year ended December 31, 1936.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 2, 1937.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be directed to correct all totals in the District of Columbia appropriation bill which has just been passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a resolution adopted by the Legislature of Wisconsin, asking the Congress to investigate certain statements made by myself, and a copy of the letter I have written in reply.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a resolution adopted by the Legislature of Wisconsin?

Mr. AMLIE. Yes; and it is addressed to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. And the gentleman wants it printed in full in the RECORD?

Mr. AMLIE. It is very short.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Sometime ago I took exception to the printing of all these State resolutions, and I am sorry, but I shall have to object.

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a copy of a letter I have written in reply to this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

REORGANIZATION OF THE FEDERAL JUDICIARY

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Speaker, I assure you I hesitate about coming before you at this time, especially as a freshman, but, as it is rather important for me to make this statement, I trust you will pardon me.

Before proceeding further I wish to state to you, Mr. Speaker, and the other Members of the House, I appreciate the many courtesies that have been extended to me from time to time since I have come to the Congress and I know it is not on my own account, but rather because of the many genuine friendships that my father made when he was here.

Mr. Speaker, I have considered carefully the arguments pro and con on the President's proposal to reorganize the Federal judiciary and I find few, if any, valid arguments against the suggested reforms. The views I express are those of a layman. It does not require legal training to appreciate that Federal courts in tying up important acts of Congress frustrate the will of the people, and inasmuch as I stated publicly during the campaign that if elected, I would follow through where my father was forced to leave off, I feel that it is my duty to support the President in the reorganization of the Court.

To do otherwise would be serving notice on the Court that I was in complete accord with their findings in the past. This not being the case, and to be consistent, I must either support the plan or admit that my votes on New Deal legislation are but idle gestures, knowing full well in advance that my support of such legislation will be nullified by the Court. My observations of the Court's past performance compel these conclusions, and, judging the future by the past, I could not justify support of economic and social legislation on the one hand and opposition to the proposed Court plan on the other, designed as it is to infuse new blood into the Court, that will in all probability work in closer harmony with the legislative and executive branches of our Government. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address delivered Wednesday afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

THE ANTILYNCHING BILL

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege and will only take a moment.

This morning's edition of the Washington Post carried a statement to the effect that:

Representative MITCHELL of Tennessee had conducted hearings on an antilynching bill.

I desire to correct this statement, as it is an entirely different Mitchell who is the author of the bill and conducted the hearings referred to.

My State is amply protected with all necessary statutory provisions to deal with lynchings, if we have any.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a speech made by the Honorable James A. Farley at a joint session of the Texas Legislature on March 4, 1937.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 1245. An act for the relief of Malinda J. Mast and William Lee Mast.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet, in accordance with its previous order, on Monday, April 5, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS

The Committee on Pensions will resume hearings at 10 o'clock a. m., Monday, April 5, 1937, on H. R. 2887, to amend the provisions of the pension law for peacetime service to include Reserve officers and members of the enlisted Reserves. Hearings will be held in room 313, House Office Building, Naval Affairs room.

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors will meet Wednesday, April 7, 1937, at 10:30 a. m., to continue hearings on the Bonneville Dam project, H. R. 4948.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the Business Research Subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, at 10 o'clock a. m., Monday, April 12, 1937. Business to be considered: Hearing on H. R. 4954, business research bill.

COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on the Public Lands on Tuesday, April 13, 1937, at 10 o'clock a. m., in room 328, House Office Building, to consider title I of H. R. 5858. Public hearing.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

495. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a draft of a proposed provision pertaining to an existing appropriation of the Department of Agriculture for carrying into effect the provisions of sections 7 to 17, inclusive, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, approved February 29, 1936 (H. Doc. No. 189); to the Committee on Appropriations.

496. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of a bill to amend the act approved June 7, 1935 (Public, No. 116, 74th Cong. (49 Stat. 332)), to provide for an additional number of cadets at the United States Military Academy, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

497. A letter from the Chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, transmitting a copy of a report in an investigation by the Commission respecting dressed and dyed furs; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

498. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of a bill to amend the Canal Zone Code; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

499. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of a bill to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 with reference to articles coming into the United States from the Virgin Islands, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. COLE of Maryland: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H. R. 4706. A bill authorizing the State Roads Commission of the State of Maryland and the State Highway Department of the State of Virginia to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Potomac River at or near a point in the vicinity of Point of Rocks in Frederick County and a point near the south end of Loudoun County to take the place of a bridge destroyed by flood in 1936; with amendment (Rept. No. 551.) Referred to the House Calendar.

Y., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

FEBRUARY REPORT OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, submitting, pursuant to law, a report of the activities and expenditures of the Corporation for the month of February 1937, including a statement of loan and other authorizations made during the month, showing the names, amounts, and rate of interest or dividend in each case, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. BULKLEY.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the resolutions committee of Local No. 13, I. W. A., of Cook County, Ill., favoring the enactment of "a public works and relief standards act" so as to provide employment for employable persons who are eligible for work under the W. P. A., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Soroptimist Club of the District of Columbia, favoring the enactment of legislation making any minimum-wage law for the District of Columbia applicable to men as well as to women and children, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. TYDINGS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Baltimore and White Hall, Md., praying for the enactment of the bill (H. R. 2257) to provide old-age compensation for the citizens of the United States, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HALE presented memorials of sundry citizens of the State of Maine, remonstrating against the enactment of any legislation that would or might disturb or abridge the religious rights and privileges of the people or close the mails to religious publications, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of several citizens of Waterville, Maine, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court, or other legislation of a similar character, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BULKLEY presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Ohio, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas the lands in Crawford County, Ohio, form a watershed, the southern portion of which constitutes a part of the tributaries of the Scioto River and the northern portion of which is the source of the Sandusky River; and

Whereas it is desirable to impound the waters of the Sandusky and Scioto Rivers at their source in the interest of flood prevention; and

Whereas because of the drainage and rapid run-off of rainfall there is a water shortage in Crawford County, Ohio; and

Whereas because of the foregoing fact the construction of such dam or dams should be a part of the Sandusky-Scioto conservancy district, or any other plan promulgated by the Federal Government and supervised by the United States Army engineers: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of Ohio House of Representatives, memorialize the Congress of the United States to appropriate such moneys as may be necessary for the construction of such dam or dams in Crawford County, Ohio; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, to both United States Senators from Ohio, and to each Member of Congress from Ohio.

Mr. BULKLEY also presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Ohio, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolution memorializing Congress to maintain a position of strict neutrality on the part of the United States

Whereas war and threats of war cloud the horizon of Europe, thereby threatening the peace and security of our country; and

Whereas the American people have always cherished a state of peace and security from the time our beloved country was created and our Government organized: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives, That we hereby memorialize Congress to keep aloof from any entangling alliances with any of the European nations, and that Congress is hereby further requested to enact such legislation as is deemed necessary to maintain a position of strict neutrality on the part of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That a properly authenticated copy of this resolution be forwarded by the clerk of the house of representatives to the President of the United States, the two United States Senators from Ohio, and to each of the Members of Congress from Ohio.

Mr. BULKLEY also presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Ohio, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas the President of the United States has directed the attention of the Congress to certain abuses, evils, and delays in the Federal court system; and

Whereas it is the opinion and belief of the House of Representatives of the Ninety-second General Assembly of Ohio that the position of the President is right and in accord with sound public policy and the principles of representative government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the Ninety-second General Assembly of Ohio hereby endorse and approve the efforts of the President to effect judicial reform; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of the house of representatives be and he is hereby authorized and instructed to transmit duly authenticated copies of this resolution to President Roosevelt, the President of the Senate of the United States, to each of the United States Senators from Ohio, and to each of the 24 Representatives in Congress from Ohio.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 5996) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mr. NEELY, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1765) granting a pension to Juna Vista Murphy, and it was referred to the Committee on Finance.

INTERSTATE TRANSPORTATION OF CHILD-LABOR PRODUCTS—AMENDMENT

Mr. WHEELER submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1976) to regulate interstate transportation of products of child labor in certain cases, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WHEELER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Interior Department appropriation bill, fiscal year 1938, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place under the caption "Bureau of Reclamation" and the subcaption "General fund, construction", insert the following:

"Gallatin Valley project, Montana: For commencing construction of the Gallatin Valley project, to be reimbursable under the reclamation law, $1,000,000."

AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 5966, the legislative appropriation bill (under the heading "Library of Congress, Legislative Reference Service"), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 31, line 13, after the word "persons", to insert a comma and "including a Director at $8,000 per annum", so as to read:

"To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ competent persons, including a Director at $8,000 per annum, to gather, classify, and make available, in translations, indexes, digests, compilations, and bulletins, and otherwise, data for or bearing upon legislation," etc.

Mr. HAYDEN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 5966, the legislative appropriation bill, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 37, line 3, after "employees", insert "to enable the Public Printer to comply with chapter 23, section 31 (28 Stat. 605), of the Printing Act, approved January 12, 1895 (U. S. C., title 44, sec. 60), relating to the consolidation of department printing offices."

On page 37, line 16, strike out "$1,000" and insert "$2,000."

On page 40, line 16, after "binding", to insert "including the total cost of work produced on the multilith, multigraph, and other similar equipment."

On page 44, after line 2, to insert the following new paragraph:

"Section 23 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1935, shall not be held to prevent adjustments in established rates of pay when in the opinion of the proper wage-fixing authority the established rates of pay on June 1, 1932, were inequitable, unjust, or unfair."

EFFECT OF BONNEVILLE DAM ON PROPAGATION OF FISH

Mr. STEIWER submitted a resolution (S. Res. 113), which was ordered to lie over under the rule, as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Fisheries is hereby requested to make an immediate survey of the facilities for the passage of salmon and other commercial fish at Bonneville on the Columbia River, and the effect, if any, of the Bonneville Dam on the propagation of salmon and other commercial fish, and to make recommendations with respect to the steps which may be necessary in connection with such dam in order to attain the full conservation of such fish and the preservation of the fishing industry on said river. The Commissioner is further requested to report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the result of such survey, together with his recommendations.

CHANGES IN CERTAIN SENATE SALARIES AND POSITIONS

Mr. LEWIS submitted a resolution (S. Res. 114), which was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, or any subcommittee thereof, having charge of the preparation of the bill (H. R. 5966) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, is hereby authorized to make the following changes in salaries and positions under supervision of the Secretary of the Senate and the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper, to wit:

REGULATION OF BITUMINOUS-COAL INDUSTRY

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4985) to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. At the time the Senate took a recess on Friday last the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] had the floor and yielded to the Senator from Arkansas for the purpose of moving a recess. The Chair does not observe the Senator from Colorado in the Chamber at the moment, and so he recognizes the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment that is pending and I send to the desk——

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BYRNES. Not just at this moment. I withdraw the amendment heretofore offered by me and offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Caroline withdraws the amendment that is pending and offers in lieu thereof an amendment, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 44, after line 12, it is proposed to add a new paragraph, as follows:

That it is the sense of the Congress that the so-called sit-down strike is illegal and contrary to sound public policy. The Congress only assumes to speak as to strikes in industries within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as the Senate will observe from the reading of the amendment now proposed——

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. MCNARY. The proposal submitted by the Senator from South Carolina is not in the nature of a joint resolution, is it?

Mr. BYRNES. No; it is offered as an amendment to the pending bill. I have withdrawn the amendment offered by me on Thursday last and have offered the amendment which has been read. I think I can explain the matter to the Senator from Oregon in a minute or two.

Mr. MCNARY. If I may add a word, I had in mind that the amendment now submitted is practically the same as, indeed, is, a replica of the resolution suggested by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], except that the resolution of the Senator from Nevada was limited to an expression of the Senate and not of the Congress.

Mr. BYRNES. I was about to proceed to make reference to that fact. The Senate will observe from a reading of the amendment that it is substantially the language the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] suggested he would incorporate in a resolution which he asked unanimous consent to have considered immediately after the passage or disposal of the pending bill. The only change I have made in it is to substitute the word "Congress" for the word "Senate." So, as offered as an amendment to the pending bill, which will have to go to the other House, it would express the sense of the Congress and not of the Senate.

I take this action because, while many Members of the Senate have expressed their disapproval of the sit-down strike, they have, in a number of instances, stated that their objection to the amendment originally offered by me was due to the fact that it applied only to one industry, and also that it did not restrict the condemnation to industries within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

As I have said, the language now proposed is that of the Senator from Nevada and not mine. I believe it is concise, far more comprehensive than the language in my original amendment, in that it removes the objection which has heretofore been expressed by a number of Senators to the amendment originally offered by me, that it applied only to one industry.

Mr. President, I do not believe it is necessary for me to make a further statement in connection with this matter. For 2 days it has been debated. Having the right to withdraw my previous amendment, I have offered the amendment now proposed because I believe that it should be offered immediately, and that if I should not offer it, some other Member of the Senate might receive recognition to offer an amendment on an entirely different subject and divert the Senate from the consideration of this subject. I believe the question ought to be determined, and, in view of the fact that we have debated it for 2 days, I hope that it will be brought to a vote and that the Senate may see its way clear to agree to the language embraced in the amendment which, as I have said, was offered originally by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am gratified that the Senator from South Carolina has withdrawn his original amendment. I had expected that, in all probability, the subject matter of the amendment would be entirely eliminated from this bill. As the Senator from South Carolina has stated, there has been a prolonged discussion extending over approximately 2 days. It is not my intention to renew that discussion at great length at this time. It seems to me that the question of the establishment of a general policy relating to alleged lawlessness and labor controversies is of sufficient importance to receive separate consideration. If a proposal looking to that end, whether in the language of this amendment or in such other form as the Senator from South Carolina or other Senators might choose, should be submitted, it would be my purpose to facilitate its consideration.

There are a number of reasons, in my opinion, which make it difficult to incorporate in the proposed law a matter of policy touching strikes. Some of them are embraced in the following suggestions:

We all know that lawlessness is not confined to employees alone; that employers themselves have resorted to practices which are not recognized in the law and in sound public policy. Any expression of policy that is to become the permanent law of the Congress ought to consider those acts, acts which are well known, acts which have not been calculated to promote peace in the labor world.

Many of us recognize the sit-down strike as unlawful. We also recognize as unlawful the practices which I have in mind, and to which I have referred generally, on the part of employers. We feel that whatever legislation is worked out on the subject should be properly and fully considered and carefully prepared; that any other course taken by the Senate would perhaps intensify the feeling that already exists on these subjects and not accomplish a wholesome purpose.

The situation respecting the disregard of the Labor Relations Act by employers, and as it respects the sit-down strike, the employment by employers of thugs as spies among their workmen, has been known to Congress for quite a while. Despite the intensity of feeling which has arisen in some localities on account of these unlawful methods on the part of both employers and employees, fair progress has been made toward reestablishing peace in the labor world.

It does not seem to me advisable to take cognizance solely of one side of the proposition or to take action in connection with the pending bill which, in the opinion of the proponents of the legislation, will be calculated to create further breaches. I am sure that every Senator would like to act wisely and prudently, and that no one within the sound of my speech contributes to the support of plans or policies on the part of either employees or employers which are unmindful or disregardful of either State or National laws.

No doubt one reason that prompted the withdrawal of the original amendment is to be found in the fact that it took no notice whatever of the laws of the States relating to ejectment and unlawful detainer, the only laws that can be enforced in the carrying out of the policy declared in the proposed amendment. There are other phases of the subject which ought to be considered and comprehended.

If the Senator from South Carolina should see fit to withhold his amendment, I should be pleased to assure him again that it will afford me pleasure to contribute to the consideration of his proposal, along with others that may be presented, and to facilitate the consideration in the early future. If that is not done I shall vote against incorporating the amendment in the pending bill, even though it has been improved in its form.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong the discussion of the amendment, though I do not know to what extent the withholding of any remarks on the part of one Senator would shorten the debate. I do not wish to enter into any debate about the amendment. I wish merely to make a very brief statement, which is brought forth very largely by remarks made last Thursday by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

We are considering a general bill of substantive legislation pertaining to regulation of the coal business. It is admitted, I suppose, and if it is not admitted it is true anyway, that the situation which brought forth the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and the situation which brings forth the offering of the amendment now before the Senate was not a result of anything any coal miner in the United States had done.

Although there are some 450,000 coal miners in the country the only thing that resembled a sit-down strike in the coal-mining business was among a few miners near Uniontown, Pa. Immediately the officers of the United Mine Workers of America condemned it and not only put the men back to work at once, but everyone who engaged in it was fined by the local union to show that they did not approve of the sit-down strike.

I agree with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] that, if we are going to deal with this phase of the labor situation in the country, we ought to deal with it comprehensively and we ought to deal with it deliberately. The so-called sit-down strike had been in progress all winter or for 3 or 4 months, in the automobile industry especially. There were some spasmodic outbreaks of some type in Providence, R. I., and at other places, which lasted only a day or two. We ought to find out at least what is back of these so-called sit-down strikes, what it is that causes them, what is the basis of their being inaugurated, whether by local employees, or with or without the approval of their national organization, for whom I do not speak because I have no right to speak for them. But certainly if we are to deal with this matter in the way of declaring a public policy, we owe it to the Senate and to the country not to do it at the point of a shotgun. We ought not to be "hijacked" into it simply because we are considering a coal bill, regulating the particular industry in which nobody, either employer or employee, has contributed to the so-called sit-down strike.

The other day I made a statement in response to a question propounded to me by my able friend from South Carolina, for whom I have an affectionate regard, as he knows. Having served with him in the House of Representatives for 14 years, and in this body for 6 years, I have learned to appreciate his ability, his character, his integrity, and his fairness. I hope the Senator is listening to the praise I am trying to accord him.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I was not listening at first. When I heard the praise, I immediately listened. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator.

In response to a question which the Senator propounded to me the other day, I stated that which I now repeat, that, in my judgment, the so-called sit-down strike is unlawful; that it is a violation of the laws of the State in which it occurs; but so far I have not observed that it is a violation of any law of the United States. Certainly nothing has been brought to our attention which indicates that interstate commerce is being interfered with, that the mails are being interfered with, or that the property of the Government of the United States is in any way in jeopardy. So, even with relation to the sit-down strike in Michigan, it would certainly be our duty to consider whether we, as the Senate of the United States, ought to try to supersede the legislature of that State and the Governor of that State in dealing with the trouble.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] the other day in his remarks said that he agreed with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] that—

> There is a very limited Federal jurisdiction that can be applied, although the able Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has indicated the existence of a statute under which there is a direct and specific Presidential responsibility.

I am forced to disagree with the Senator from Michigan and my very charming friend from California that there is any Presidential responsibility so far as any knowledge we have of what has occurred in Michigan is concerned. Certainly when both sides to the controversy and the Governor of the State are bending every effort to bring about a peaceful settlement of the difficulty there was no Presidential responsibility that ought to have injected the President into the controversy so far as those efforts were being made by both sides and by the chief executive of the State whose laws are being violated, if there is a violation.

> What I am saying is that there is a moral responsibility which thus far has not been exercised or declared, and it is a responsibility which not only rests on this Chamber but goes straight down Pennsylvania Avenue to the White House.

Further back in his remarks the Senator from Michigan, while agreeing with the Senator from Arkansas, and saying that probably the amendment then pending ought not to have been offered, nevertheless intimated that we ought to vote for it, because to do otherwise would be subject to misinterpretation by the press and by the public, and would be construed as an approval on our part of the so-called sit-down strike.

Mr. President, I think we are all men of average intelligence and average courage. I have as much rabbit blood in me as has the average man, and now and then it surges up in my veins and turns my toes toward the tall timber in the forest of politics; but I believe that not only I but most of the Members of the Senate have sufficient sense of responsibility and sufficient courage not to commit an act of folly simply because to do otherwise may be misinterpreted.

I am going to vote against this amendment. I should have voted against it as it was originally offered. If I cannot explain my vote to those who are responsible for my presence here, if I am not willing to take my chances on dissipating any misunderstanding that my vote may bring upon my shoulders, that is my misfortune; but I am willing to undertake the task and to accept the responsibility. My vote against this amendment is not to be interpreted and is not meant as a vote in favor of approving the sit-down strike. No matter who undertakes to misinterpret my vote in that respect, it will be a misinterpretation and a false representation. I am going to vote against it, or any other amendment of its kind offered on this bill, because I do not believe it has any business in the bill, in the first place, and because I do not believe we can hastily deal with this subject here on the floor of the Senate in the form of an amendment.

The course which the amendment has already taken proves beyond any question of doubt that we cannot deliberately and wisely act upon it here on the floor of the Senate as an amendment to this bill.

The course which the amendment has taken shows that the question deserves the consideration of a committee. It deserves the dignity of a report from a committee. It deserves to be considered by the Senate in the light of all the circumstances and all the conditions that may surround this troublesome question.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I should not have interrupted the Senator except for the fact that his last statement rather disturbs me and may change my vote on this amendment.

When I suggested the substitute amendment which has now been adopted by the Senator from South Carolina, having it apply to the Congress instead of to the Senate alone, I interrupted the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] when he was speaking to suggest that he ask unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business, the entire bill, in order that the Senate might consider the resolution—it was then in the form of a resolution—which I offered. It has now been changed into the form of an amendment by the Senator from South Carolina. I said in the first place I thought it should be a resolution. I still think it should be a resolution. I should, however, prefer to have it as an amendment than not to have any expression at all on the subject. If this amendment is to be defeated, and a resolution of this character that may be introduced is to be referred to a committee for hearing, with a very indefinite understanding or knowledge of when it may be reported back to the Senate, if ever, then I am going to vote for the amendment.

I do not see what there is to have hearings on. Every Senator knows now whether or not he considers the so-called sit-down strike illegal. I think the Senator from Kentucky himself knows. He knows whether or not it is contrary to sound public policy; and in order not to involve matters that are purely within the jurisdiction of States, such as the strikes that have occurred in Detroit, I took the the liberty of adding the language:

The Senate—

Now it is the "Congress"—

only assumes to speak as to strikes in industries within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

Whether or not unanimous consent is given that such a resolution shall be taken up and made the unfinished business immediately after the disposal of this bill, it is within the power of the Senate to make it the unfinished business immediately afterward. If the leaders on both sides of the Chamber are willing to make it the unfinished business immediately after the disposal of the pending bill, so that Senators will have an opportunity to amend in any particular they see fit what will be then offered as a resolution, and to discuss it without involving the discussion of the coal bill, without possibly threatening much discussion on the subject in the House of Representatives, without possibly causing the amendment to go into a conference that may last a long time, without endangering the coal bill, it can be done. But if there is a disposition upon the part of the leaders of this body to postpone indefinitely the consideration of this question, then I shall be impelled by my view of the matter to vote for and support the amendment. I do not believe it ought to be an amendment, because, for the reasons stated, I think it is rather a reflection on the coal miners, who have never used the sit-down strike at all. I think it will be misunderstood by them. I think it will be contracted in its general effect if it is put in as an amendment. I would rather have a bold concurrent resolution dealing with the subject passed by both the Senate and the House of Representatives. I desire assurance now, however, before I am called on to cast my vote, as to whether or not it is going to be the disposition of the leaders of this body to support a motion to make any resolution that may immediately thereafter be offered the unfinished business.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am not in a position to speak for the leaders of the Senate; I can speak only for myself. I did not mean by what I said a while ago that I thought it was necessary to hold hearings. I did not say anything about hearings. I do not know whether or not it will be necessary to hold hearings. So far as I am concerned, it would not be. I am ready to vote on this subject or any other similar matter at the very earliest opportunity, and I should certainly have no objection to making a resolution covering this question the unfinished business immediately upon the conclusion of the consideration of the coal bill, provided it should be subject to amendment, as it would be, so that we could perfect it, if we must work this matter out on the floor of the Senate, if we have to declare a public policy here on the spur of the moment in haste, although this subject has been before the country for nearly 4 months. I should not object if we might have opportunity to perfect the resolution so as not only to include any unlawful conduct upon the part of employees, but unlawful conduct of employers operating in concert to deny to the American workingman a right declared to be grounded in sound public policy, as we have over and over declared it—that is, the right to collective bargaining. We not only have declared that as a public policy, but we have enacted a law providing the machinery through which collective bargaining may be brought about.

If we are to act on a resolution, I am perfectly willing that the Senate may consider such a resolution tomorrow, or this afternoon, or day after tomorrow, or any other day, without referring it to a committee, if the Senate desires to go about it in that way. But I did say, and I still feel, that the subject ought to be given consideration from all angles by a committee. However, I should not insist upon such procedure, if the Senate desired to make such a resolution the unfinished business in haste after the pending bill had been disposed of.

If we are to adopt a public policy which condemns men because they quit work and sit down, we certainly owe it to ourselves and to the country to find out why they are quitting and why they are sitting down; to find out whether their employers have been guilty of any unlawful conduct or any denial of the rights of American citizens that resulted in the conduct of the employees; and if we find that the employers have been guilty, we certainly ought to include condemnation of their conduct in any public-policy resolution we adopt.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUFFY in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I am unable to understand from the statement made by the Senator from Kentucky whether it is his deliberate judgment that if employers are found not to have carried out fully the public policy declared by Congress in a congressional enactment, therefore, in his opinion, the employees would be justified in engaging in a sit-down strike on property that does not belong to them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no; I made no such statement, and I am sure my remarks are not subject to any such interpretation.

Mr. BURKE. I merely wanted to be sure on that point.

Mr. BARKLEY. I say that if there is any lack of proper observance on the part of employers of the spirit not only of the law but of public policy which we have heretofore declared which has resulted in a sit-down strike, we ought to consider it in order to determine whether we will also condemn any such conduct on the part of the employers.

Mr. BURKE. Let me put the question more directly, then. Is the Senator from Kentucky unwilling to declare his condemnation of the sit-down strike until Congress has investigated all the actions of employers and determined whether they also may or may not be doing some illegal thing?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that if we are to declare a public policy, and not enact a law on the subject, and that is what we are asked to do, adopt a resolution which might be adopted by any club or society in the Nation, so far as its effect is concerned; if we are to adopt a resolution declaring a public policy with respect to the conduct of men who are guilty of a violation of law, we should not ignore the fact that there is a possible violation on the part of men of Federal laws as to which we ought as well to declare some public policy. The two things ought to be considered together.

I am not committing myself as to how I would vote on any resolution brought before the Senate, because I want to see any resolution before I express an opinion upon it. I want to have an opportunity to amend it if I desire to amend it. I am not willing in any way to limit myself as to my conduct with respect to an amendment. I have over and over declared my belief that the sit-down strike is unlawful, that it is a violation of the laws of the States, but so far I have not been able to discover that it is a violation of any law of the United States. In considering whether we are to condemn it by resolution of Congress, however, I think it is so worthy of sufficiently comprehensive treatment that we should go into the whole subject and also adopt resolutions dealing with others who have been responsible in any way, remotely or closely, for the conduct which has brought about the sit-down strike.

For this reason I am unable to support, as an amendment to the pending bill, not only the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina but any other amendment of similar import, but I will assure the Senator from South Carolina and every other Senator that, as a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which an effort was made to refer the amendment last week, I would be willing to vote for immediate action. In that connection, the Senator from South Carolina so forgot himself as to intimate that, so far as I was concerned, I would never vote to bring out a resolution of this sort for a vote on the Senate floor. I do not think he meant that; but I assure him that if the matter is referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, of which I am a member, I would be willing to consider it immediately and bring back to the floor of the Senate, so far as I am concerned, some kind of a resolution that would be open to debate and amendment, so that the Senate might consider it without delay. I am speaking for myself only, and not for the entire committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish to discuss a reference made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. He referred to the fact that he would vote for the pending amendment unless he had some assurance that the subject matter might receive consideration without any possibility of being thrown aside on account of some technicality or other reason. My understanding is that, so far as the leaders of the Senate are concerned, we now have such assurance. I agree with the Senator from Nevada that it would not be right to resort to any technicality or any other means by which to cast the amendment aside and never consider it. But I understand, from all that has been said by the leaders of the Senate, that they are willing and anxious to give proper and careful consideration to the amendment, not with the view of throwing it out or getting rid of it on a technicality but with a view to meeting the issue fairly and squarely, face to face.

I think it must be conceded that the offering of the amendment to the pending bill does present to the Senate the necessity of taking action without giving the subject proper consideration. I fully agree with the leaders of the Senate when they say that we ought to have proper consideration, that we ought to have the right to offer amendments, which, of course, we do have; but, so far as I am concerned, I would want a day or so in order to prepare the amendments. I would be unwilling to consider a resolution covering this matter today if the understanding were that it was to be voted on today. I do not want any unreasonable delay. Is not my suggestion fair? We have before us a new proposal, and, if my view is correct, it is subject to amendment in several very material particulars. We ought not to be compelled to proceed without reasonable opportunity to prepare any amendments which may be desired and to offer them.

The subject matter now confronting the Senate has never been presented in printed form. I never saw a resolution covering the matter, and never heard of one until the language was read just a few minutes ago from the desk. Perhaps Senators think it is not a matter of importance, and they may be right about that; but I think it is a question of great importance, and I should like to amend the proposal. I should like to have some time for consideration, and I should like to give others an opportunity if they desire to amend it, and I do not refer to any amendment that is not fair or legitimate.

The pending amendment presents but one side of a controversy, and, however clear it may be, it seems to me that the Senate ought to give both sides ample opportunity to amend the amendment.

I would not like to see consideration of the amendment continued indefinitely. The right way and the deliberate way to handle the matter would be to refer the amendment to a committee. But I would not insist on that if Senators are afraid of the result, if they think it is doubtful that there would be good-faith consideration given to the amendment. If Senators entertain any such doubt, the amendment could be taken up tomorrow without referring it to a committee, so far as I am concerned.

I would like to have opportunity to amend any resolution covering the subject matter under discussion, and in the form the amendment comes before us I should like to have an opportunity to vote on one or two amendments to it.

If the amendments should be voted down, and we came to a final vote, and the resolution had in it nothing but what is contained in the amendment now before us, after I had had an opportunity to offer perfecting amendments, if I were unsuccessful I would vote for a resolution in the form in which the amendment now stands. But I do not believe it is fair not to afford opportunity for a proper consideration of the matter.

In my opinion it is not fair for another reason. Attempt is made to attach the amendment to a bill without notice having been given of the contents of the amendment, without any opportunity for Senators to know in advance its purport. The amendment applies to the general subject of sit-down strikes, and covers all industry wherever men or women are employed. The amendment is proposed to a bill that has reference only to the coal industry, an industry the employees of which have never been guilty of the sit-down strike. The sit-down strike is unknown in the coal business excepting in an instance or two where it was attempted and where the attempt failed—failed or was ended, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has said, by reason of the fact that officials of the labor unions in the coal industry called off the sit-down strike and so ended it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As a matter of fact, in the coal industry a successful sit-down strike could not be conducted, because immediately on the calling of the strike the men are called out of the mines, and all their tools are brought out with them. If they called a sit-down strike, they would have to remain in the mine continuously—a situation which would not be conducive to a successful termination of the strike.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. In my remarks on Friday last I expressed myself as being sympathetic with the general idea the Senator is now expressing. However, the pending amendment, which is almost identical with the one which had been offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], seems to me in its wording to take any direct aspersion from the coal industry.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not heard the amendment read.

Mr. TYDINGS. The last sentence of the amendment is as follows:

> The Congress only assumes to speak as to strikes in industries within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

Therefore, in voting for this amendment, as I shall do, I take the position that it is no reflection at all on the coal industry. It is a policy declared for all industries, even though it is declared in connection with a coal bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not complain of the position taken by the Senator from Maryland. He is taking a position which he has a perfectly legitimate right to take. I know he is taking it in good faith; but he is attaching to a coal bill language which has reference to all industry, and it is the only place in the bill where any reference is made to any other industry.

Senators who do not desire to have that done, while they may not be as well informed as those who take a contrary position with reference to the bill, nevertheless, are also acting in good faith; and they say, "Let us not attach the amendment to a coal bill. Let us put it in the form of a resolution which can be amended, a resolution which can be applied to all industry, and not place it simply in one bill, the coal bill, and do something which would embarrass that one industry." Perhaps I may be wrong, and perhaps the coal industry ought not to feel that way about it. The Senator from Maryland may be right in his opinion. The coal miners, through years of unfair treatment, and even persecution of the worst kind, have not resorted to this type of strike. Yet on a bill which covers only the coal industry Senators are attempting to place language which, as a matter of fact, in the light of past history, has no application to the coal business, but which has application to some other businesses which are not affected by the bill now under consideration.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield again to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Assuming what the Senator from Nebraska says to be true, what assurance have we that we can get a vote on this amendment apart from the coal bill?

Mr. NORRIS. As I said a short while ago, I concede that Senators have a right to receive such an assurance; and I think they now have it. I have not heard any Senator say anything except that such opportunity would be given; that if the action I have suggested were taken, the opportunity to vote on such a measure would be given. I believe that 100 percent. For instance, I take it that the Senator from Arkansas, the leader on the other side of the Chamber, has been absolutely fair in his statement and that he will act in conjunction with anybody to see that the matter receives proper consideration within a very short time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. If a separate resolution were introduced and referred to a committee—and, so far as I am concerned, I do not care whether it is referred to a committee or not——

Mr. NORRIS. Let me interrupt to say that that would be the correct procedure; but I am willing to consider such a resolution right now on the floor, and not refer it to a committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am willing to consider it without reference to a committee. However, if it were referred to a committee and the committee delayed consideration or delayed making a report for such time as was thought unreasonable, any Senator could move to discharge the committee and have the Senate enter immediately upon the consideration of the resolution. Not only that, but any Senator could offer a resolution at any time, on any day, without reference to a committee, and the resolution would go over to the following day, and would be eligible for consideration on that day.

Mr. NORRIS. That would be a Senate resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. That would be a Senate resolution; it would not be a joint resolution, of course.

Mr. NORRIS. I think this ought to be a joint resolution. It ought to go to the House as well as be considered by the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. There are many ways in which the Senate could be forced to consider the subject, even though a committee were dilatory in reporting it. I repeat that I do not believe there is any Member of the Senate, certainly not on the Committee on Interstate Commerce, who desires to delay the consideration of this matter if it is properly brought before the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me say to the Senators, and particularly to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], that I do not know of any disposition anywhere, covered or uncovered, to attempt to smother this question or try to avoid considering it. I do not think any such condition exists.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me point out to the Senator that if we had definite assurance that we should have a vote on this matter, say within an hour——

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, I think that would be unreasonable. The Senator ought not to ask that.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I say something to the Senator?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. As it is, we are going to vote on it anyway very shortly as an amendment to the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. The objection of many Members, including the Senator from Nebraska—and I respect that position very much—is that they are forced to vote on this proposal as a part of the coal bill. The alternative is, Shall we vote upon it as a part of the coal bill or as a separate resolution?

If we are going to vote on it anyway, and if we cannot get unanimous consent to have the amendment withdrawn, we shall either have to vote on it as a part of the coal bill or as a joint resolution. So I ask, inasmuch as we are going to vote upon it anyway as a part of the coal bill, How would anyone be hurt if we had an agreement to vote on it just as it is, as a joint resolution, 1 hour after the Guffey coal bill is passed?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator does not want an agreement that would prohibit discussion does he?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; but we can amend the proposal now. No one has attempted to amend it.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no; we cannot take up an important proposition of this kind and expect to amend it within a minute or two after it is first proposed.

Mr. TYDINGS. I suggest that after the amendment is perfected we could then put the perfected amendment, without taking a vote upon it, into the form of a joint resolution, and have an agreement to vote upon it as a separate measure immediately after the passage of the bill. How could anyone be hurt if we should take such action?

Mr. NORRIS. I submit to the Senator that would not be fair. Suppose this bill should be passed within the next 10 minutes, 15 minutes, or an hour, or such a matter, and then that we should vote on the resolution; the amendment would have to be changed somewhat before it came to us as a resolution. I do not now know what its exact form should be. Yet, if we should accept the Senator's suggestion, we would agree in advance to vote upon something that we would not be able properly to consider or suggest amendments to.

I should have no objection to a unanimous-consent agreement that this amendment should be perfected and put in the form of a resolution, and that it should be taken up the next day, let us say, after action had been taken on the coal bill. I should not want to say that action should be taken tomorrow, because the bill now under consideration might not be acted upon today, although I think favorable action will be taken today. There is not any disposition, so far as I can see, to mislead anyone or to deceive anyone. I think the cards are all on the table face up, and everyone knows just what is being done.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. When the Senator from Maryland has finished his questioning, I will yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. TYDINGS. All I wanted to point out was that it seems to me, unless we can have some kind of an agreement, the alternative will be that we shall have to vote on the question as an amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. If the amendment were withdrawn from the bill, and if it were introduced in the form of a resolution today, and if we should pass this bill today, I have no doubt we could take up the resolution tomorrow.

Mr. TYDINGS. How soon could we act on it?

Mr. NORRIS. Just as soon as debate was exhausted. I do not anticipate that there is any intention on the part of anyone to try to filibuster on the matter, and the Senator does not want to deprive us of an honest chance to debate it. So far as I am concerned, I could vote on it without debate.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand; but what a great many Senators on this side fear is that if they should agree to the proposition as outlined by the Senator, they would not have a chance to vote on it until after the sit-down strikes had ceased to be.

Mr. NORRIS. I have a great deal of sympathy for anyone who feels that way, but I do not think there is any ground for that kind of feeling.

Mr. TYDINGS. Perhaps not.

Mr. NORRIS. I think not. I hope that will not happen.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think it would be quite reasonable to agree to take action on the matter 2 or 3 days hence, thereby giving opportunity for consideration. I do not know whether such an agreement can be obtained.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit the Senator from Arkansas to speak—he desired to interrupt me awhile ago, but I could not yield to him at that time—perhaps he has something of that kind on his mind.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, at the beginning of the session today, in the hope that there would be eliminated any question in the minds of Senators that an opportunity would be afforded to pass upon this subject matter, I made a statement which most Senators heard. The statement was that if the amendment were eliminated from the bill, it would be my purpose at an early opportunity to move a consideration of the amendment in the form of a resolution, with the understanding that ample opportunity should be afforded to consider and pass upon amendments which might be proposed. If there is anyone here who doubts the good faith of that statement, he is justified in trying to force a vote immediately. But no unanimous-consent agreement of that character can be made, because this is a subject which the Senate is entitled to consider with reasonable deliberation. There is no purpose on the part of anyone, so far as I know, to delay action.

I have stated again and proposed on previous days unanimous-consent agreements and arrangements that would assure a vote, but no such agreements could be entered into. Now I will say what I said at the beginning of the session today, that if the subject matter is eliminated from the bill, I will move to proceed to its consideration at an early date. That might mean tomorrow or it might mean the next day, to suit the convenience of Senators.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUFFY in the chair). The Senator from Nebraska has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. McNARY. I beg pardon of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I do not doubt the good faith and sincerity of the Senator from Arkansas. He is an able and always reliable leader. His expression, however, as to the subject matter being considered at "an early opportunity" is not a very definite one. I can realize several parliamentary hurdles the resolution would have to take. Unquestionably the Senator from Arkansas or some other Senator would want the resolution referred to a committee, to which it would have to go. How long would that committee retain the resolution and have it under consideration?

So, Mr. President, an "early opportunity" is to me an indefinite expression. It might be some time after the consideration of the President's plan to reform the Federal judiciary, and I do not know when that will be.

In the form in which it was first presented I had some doubt as to the advisability of appending the amendment to this bill, but in the simple form in which it is now presented, with the limitations and restrictions it contains, I can see no objection to having a vote today.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I decline to yield further. I should like to conclude what I have to say.

Mr. McNARY. I beg pardon of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I reply briefly to the Senator from Oregon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will not ask the Senator to yield now.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to proceed on the theory that, no matter which side of any question they may be on, all Senators are acting in the best of faith and are conscientious. I have seen every indication during the course of this little controversy that everybody is so acting. I will not be intentionally misled. I think the situation appears to other Senators as it does to me. Certainly if any Senator should try to resort to what I thought were unfair tactics, I would take exception at once, as would every other Senator who was moved by a desire to be fair and to give even his enemies a fair opportunity to consider any pending legislation. I assume that there would not be any doubt on that question. It might take a few days. So far as I am concerned, I would not care if the action were taken tomorrow, but I would not consent to an indefinite delay. I think we have sufficient assurance when we have the word of Senators that if this amendment is taken out of this bill there will be no question whatever that within the next few days, if not tomorrow, the subject matter will be before the Senate.

Mr. President, I wish to refer to another matter which I intended to speak of on Friday, but forgot to do so. I was reminded of it by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] when he read what the Senator from Michigan had said. Every man has a right to draw his own conclusions, I concede; every man, in the Senate and out of it, has the right to believe that the President ought to have spoken out on this subject; and, since the suggestion is made that it reaches right up to the other end of the Avenue, to the White House, where some expression ought to have been made, I am induced to refer briefly to that phase of the question.

As I see it, and as I believe we ought to look at it, nothing has happened as yet that would call for an expression of opinion on the sit-down strike by the President of the United States. I think Senators are wrong when they say he ought to have said something about it and ought to have condemned it. He might have done that, I concede; he has a right to do it; but the matter was not officially before him. Even the Senate does not have it before it officially. After all, it would be only an expression of opinion by a Federal officer or by the Senate or by Congress that would be entirely unofficial. We have not the question before us; it is not proposed that we legislate with respect to it. I think, therefore, that the President and the Senate and the House of Representatives can very properly remain silent on the subject until it shall come before them in an official form. That is only a matter of opinion; and when someone says the President ought to express his opinion, while he has a right to express it, yet I do not think anyone is justified in criticising the White House for not publicly condemning the sit-down strike.

Since Friday I have read several articles in a number of newspapers on the subject. Some of them are bitter. One of them by a newspaper writer who publishes his articles every few days in a large number of newspapers, a syndicated article, has practically said, as I understand his language, that the President had the Army and the Navy behind him and he ought to have gone into this matter and settled it at once.

Suppose the President had called out the Army; what would have happened then? How many people would have arisen and yelled, "This is impossible; it is not to be thought of"? Suppose he had sent the Navy to Michigan; suppose he had marched an army into Detroit; I think he would have been rightfully subject to criticism. I think he would have been doing something that he ought not to have done; and I believe the laws of Congress will bear me out in that opinion. Yet there have been people who are worried and have been worrying for some time because the President has not acted about this matter. I concede he had a right to express his opinion or remain silent, just as he desired to do, but he is the President; he is not merely an individual; he had to take that into consideration. I think he ought to be moderate. I say frankly if I had been President of the United States, I would not have expressed any opinion about the sit-down strike up to the present time. It is in process of settlement, and negotiations are proceeding pretty well. The junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] told us on Friday what his idea was of it, and I thought he approached the subject with a great deal of wisdom and with more knowledge on the subject than most of us possess. I do not believe anyone would be justified in criticizing the Congress for not declaring a policy. Yet some people think Congress ought to declare a policy, and we have gone so far along that Congress will probably declare a policy one way or the other. I am willing to go along and do that, but I do not think it is necessary. I would rather Federal hands had been kept off this question until the processes of adjustment had been completed in Michigan, as they seem to be proceeding satisfactorily.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think what the Senator from Nebraska has said indicates quite clearly two things: In the first place, that a number of Senators have in mind to offer amendments if this question comes up in the form of a resolution. They may offer amendments to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina to this bill. However, the amendments that I have seen under consideration on the floor take the subject even farther away from the pending coal measure. I think, for instance, it is perfectly worthy of consideration in dealing with sit-down strikes that some of us do not believe them to represent sound policy, and it might be pretty well to give some consideration to whether or not the so-called industrial spy system does not arouse fears and suspicions and animosities that bring about heat and disturbance between employer and employee.

Mr. NORRIS. That is one of the amendments which I think ought to be added to a resolution of this kind.

Mr. PITTMAN. The exact form that it should be in, I do not know.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know, either.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have drafted a form which temporarily at the time seems to express my views, but whether it does I am not yet certain. It was drawn hastily, I admit. I do not even know whether I have used the correct name or not; I do not know whether it is called the industrial spy system or some other name. I think possibly that is what it is called; but I am very much opposed to it anyway because I think it does no good, and, like all spy systems, brings about animosities between employer and employee.

If criminals are being looked for in a plant or an industry, they are very easily found, and I believe as a general thing efforts to find them by legitimate means would have the assistance and approval of the employees themselves. I think they themselves are trying to get rid of the criminals.

I have just read another amendment suggested by another Member of this body which goes still further from the bill and deals with another existing law. I can conceive that the matter might legitimately involve a day or 2 days of debate.

While I announced that I would be compelled to vote for the amendment if I thought the matter was going to be referred to a committee, with resultant delay, I am perfectly satisfied, after having heard the statement of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and having learned the attitude of the minority leader, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], who does not desire to delay and who has suggested there might be delay by sending the matter to a committee, that we could overcome the rule about sending such a resolution to a committee, because 5 minutes after it is sent to the committee we can, by majority vote, have it returned to the Senate.

Taking into consideration the attitude of the Senator from Arkansas, the leader of the majority, and the Senator from Oregon, the leader of the minority, I have not any fear that the matter will not have consideration in a very few days. Therefore I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in conclusion, let me say that it follows that I would feel it my duty, so far as I am concerned, to vote against the adoption of the amendment. I shall do it without any fear. There may be danger in such a procedure. Senators have said such an action would be misunderstood, and that may be true. My brief experience in the Senate has caused me to believe that we often get in positions where our votes may be misunderstood. In my opinion, that ought not to cause anyone to vote either for or against the pending amendment.

After all I have given my reasons, in part at least, for being against the amendment on the pending bill. If that explanation does not satisfy, I shall have to suffer the consequences. If that position does not suit my constituents and they think I am misrepresenting them, then at the next election, when I am a candidate again for reelection, they can vote to have me stay at home and that will be all right. That is their privilege. I think I ought not to let that cause me to deviate from what I believe to be my duty in the matter.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. The amendment undertakes to declare that it is the sense of the Senate——

Mr. NORRIS. No; the sense of the Congress. It has been amended.

Mr. OVERTON. That does not interfere with the observation I was about to make.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator let me conclude, unless he has a question to ask me?

Mr. OVERTON. I want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator from Nebraska has given a great deal of consideration during his long service in the Congress to legislation of this character. The pending amendment undertakes to declare that it is the sense of the Congress that the sit-down strike is illegal. It confines its condemnation to strikes in industries within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

If the premise is true, as stated in the amendment, that the sit-down strike is illegal and that Congress has jurisdiction in respect to sit-down strikes in industries which affect interstate commerce or in other matters in which the Federal Government has jurisdiction, then I ask the Senator if he does not believe this is a very ineffective way of dealing with what appears to be a well-recognized evil? If the sit-down strike is wrong, if it is illegal, should there be simply a resolution or an amendment to the pending bill which undertakes to express in a very ineffective way the sense of the Congress of the United States?

If we have jurisdiction, and under the terms of the amendment we would have jurisdiction with reference to sit-down strikes in industries within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, should we not undertake to deal with the problem in an effective way? Should we not, for instance, undertake to enact legislation that would provide a penalty for those who engage in these illegal ventures which are so much condemned by the Members of the Senate?

It may be that a resolution or an amendment of the kind now pending might have some persuasive influence, but that would be all. If the sit-down strike is an evil, if it is something to be stopped and arrested by Federal intervention, should we not undertake to proceed in an effective way?

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, this is not an effective way. Nobody claims that we have any jurisdiction in respect to the particular strike situation now existing. This would be just an expression of opinion of the Congress. Congress has sometimes expressed its opinion. As I said, I do not think we were called upon to express an opinion, although, if Senators and Members of the House think we ought to do so, I am willing to express an opinion. It will not have any legal effect, but it may have a moral effect. Some Senators think it would, and I hope it would.

Mr. OVERTON. We have no jurisdiction at all over sit-down strikes unless they interfere with interstate commerce or with the mails or with Federal property. But the amendment confines its terms to strikes in industries within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. The question I have been propounding to the Senator from Nebraska is, if we are going to take any action at all in reference to sit-down strikes in matters in which we have jurisdiction, should we not undertake to do so in an effective way, and not in an ineffective way as represented by an amendment which simply undertakes to express our opinion?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly; that would be the more judicial and logical way to proceed. The amendment does not attempt anything of that kind. It merely expresses an opinion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Even the language of the amendment itself leaves in doubt just what it means, because we might have jurisdiction over the shipment of coal or beef or any other commodity from one State to another and yet have no jurisdiction over the manufacture or processing of that product, according to the decision of the Supreme Court. Accordingly it would be hard to tell just what we have jurisdiction over that gives us a right to legislate on a sit-down strike which the Supreme Court has declared is local.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not discussed that question because I do not think it is before the Senate. I do not think anybody claims it is before the Senate. It is not proposed by this amendment to legislate in that way. I do not think it would be effective in a legal sense. It might have a great deal of moral effect and I am not quarreling with those who think it would have. If a majority of the Senate and House think it would help to have Congress express its opinion, I have no objection.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I have no purpose to indulge in any debate as to the merits or virtues of any of the expressions in the amendments which have been or are before us. I at this moment wish to bring this honorable body to recall that I addressed the Senate last week, and possibly I am responsible for injecting the suggestion that the Congress should favor the President of the United States with its expression, asking of him the consideration of this subject, and obtaining from him, within the power and limitation of his authority, an expression on his part which would go to serve the uses of peace and order, and help bring about a harmony between those who are in conflicts or contests resulting in labor confusion.

I desire to have it understood, sir, that having injected that matter and having expressd my view I am still of that opinion. I do not withdraw from it. I have seen nothing in this debate or the circumstances that excuses the Federal authorities from an investigation, so far as the Federal interests are involved and where the Federal authority is permitted to enter the subject. I again assert that this honorable body, as a Senate, could fittingly pass a resolution requesting the President of the United States to take such course as in his judgment would indicate his interest and inform the public of his intent to preserve peace and order. This would inform those who are the toilers, as well as those who are the employers, that he hopes they may attain peace through their own efforts and that it is his intention not to interfere with the State when the State is acting wholly within its sovereign sphere; but that wherever the State, either within its sphere or otherwise in its assumption, shall decline to preserve the order that it might preserve, and will take no step to do so when it should, the President will feel it his duty, in behalf of the Federal Government, to initiate such course as will maintain the peace and order of America as against the destruction of property or the involving in any form whatever of danger to the life or liberty of the citizen.

Mr. President, I am strongly of the view that the tender of this amendment on the part of the able Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to be placed on the present bill fails to serve the object which no doubt he well has. It goes one step further in a direction that I think should be deprecated in this body, if my construction be right. It is an open announcement that we have entered into the quarrel between Mr. William Green, the head of one labor organization, and Mr. John Lewis, the head of another labor organization. Strikes are here and there under the supervision of each and going on in this country under the control of both; at the same time employers are persecuting toilers. Here we choose a single word, an expression describing but one, announcing our condemnation, without any regard to the fact that property may be, and has been, seized; that violence has occurred in respect to other strikes and other conflicts between employer and employee; and the persecution of employees by employers and State and National constabulary.

We are doing more. We are giving the President of the United States to understand that we remove him from the opportunity cautiously to consider this subject under any suggestion this honorable body may make to him. If he now attempts to investigate under resolution either from myself, who initiated this matter, or from my honorable colleague in the early enterprise, the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the resolution will take on the form that the President is not investigating the strike in order to see where the Federal Government should introduce itself; he is investigating the Senate. He is investigating this amendment. He is investigating the action of the Senate; and thus we have removed him from a calm opportunity to deal with the matter, and placed him in a position where, if his attitude should comply with the expression of this bill, it would be a senseless and useless one. Should it be one where it differed, it would take on the form of a condemnation of us; and we therefore put the President in the position, by such an amendment on this bill, of entering into the subject of investigating the Senate and the wisdom of its course in passing this amendment added to the coal bill.

I therefore join with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the leader, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and the expression of my able friend from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], in pointing out how this particular amendment on this bill fails of the very object it assumes to attain; and I add to that, sir, my objection upon the ground that it wholly defeats the purpose I injected into this undertaking. I now still insist that the President shall at a proper time be authorized by this honorable body to take the same kind of course, to the full limit, if he finds it necessary, that the former President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt, took in the matter of the anthracite coal strike of an earlier day, and the course that President Wilson took, sir, in respect to the railroad strike of 1916.

Upon these precedents, as well as upon my view heretofore expressed, I am not able to see how this amendment tendered to the pending bill serves any purpose other than that of a confusion which I must do all I can, by voice and action, to avoid at this time upon this bill, and upon the subject which is now before the Senate.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, in order that there may be no misunderstanding about the matter, I desire to say that it is my determination to ask for a vote upon this amendment.

I know there are some Senators who are perfectly sincere in their statement that if the amendment were withdrawn, and if hereafter the substance of it should be offered as a separate resolution, immediate consideration would be secured for that resolution. But I know that should I follow that course, the leader of the Democratic side of the Senate cannot speak for all of the Members of the Senate. I know from information received from him as to the views of certain Members of the Senate, and I know from information received from others that if this amendment is offered as a separate resolution there may be offered as an amendment to it legislation which is certain to result in a filibuster. Therefore the introduction of a separate resolution may mean no consideration for this subject at any time during the present session.

Not only is that true of the Senate, but neither the majority leader nor the minority leader can speak for the House of Representatives. Unless this is to be solely a Senate resolution—and no one suggests that—if it is to be a joint resolution, it must go to the House for consideration. I know what would happen in the House if the leadership of the House should be as enthusiastic about consideration of this amendment as the leadership in the Senate. No matter what might occur, I know that when the resolution reached the House it would be referred to a committee. I served in the House and I know what chance it would have of ever getting out of a committee in the House unless the majority leadership favors it. Even if it were not sent to a committee, there to sleep the sleep of the just and the dead, when the resolution reached the House, unless the leadership could be overturned, it would be the last of a resolution seeking merely an expression of opinion by the Congress of the United States on the question of sit-down strikes.

What is there that is so complicated about this matter? The amendment now pending is not mine. It was not drafted by one with my weaknesses and frailties. Its language was drafted by the President pro tempore of the Senate, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. It was drafted by him after most careful consideration. It was submitted last week to the Senate, and was debated on the floor of the Senate. The Senate adjourned from Friday night until Monday to consider the subject. The matter was debated Thursday and Friday, considered Saturday and Sunday, and we are here on Monday; yet this four-line resolution seems to defy the intellects of the Senate, and makes it impossible for them to consider it. They hold out hope that after this bill passes they might know how to vote upon the question, but not as an amendment to this bill.

Ask any Senator, "Do you approve of the sit-down strike?" "No." Then, if you do not, why delay to consider something upon which you have already decided? The only question before Senators is, having decided upon it, knowing that they are in favor of it, whether or not they should say it in the form of an amendment to this bill. As an amendment to this bill, we know it will be acted upon in the House; for under the rules of the House, when it reaches that body, a motion may be made to concur in the amendment. Such a motion has precedence over other motions, and the House will have an opportunity to do what a majority of the House desire to do, express their view, just as a majority of the Senate say they wish to express their view. I thought all Senators had made up their minds, with the exception of one or two. I think some Member of the Senate said he thought there ought to be an investigation. If any man has not made up his mind upon it, I can see why he should want an investigation; but the vast majority of the Senate know what they want to do about a declaration of policy on a matter of this kind.

Senators say, even if the matter should be considered, that we have not time to consider it now upon the floor of the Senate. If they all disapprove of the sit-down strike, it does not require consideration to vote the way we talk. But if time is necessary, we have not anything else to do. Time and again the Senate finds itself adjourning over from day to day because it has no business with which to proceed. The Senate has no business after the passage of this bill. What is there to prevent the offering of any amendments now? Let them be considered upon their merits. If we have not time today, there will be time tomorrow. If a majority of the Senate are in favor of any amendment, it will be adopted, and the expression of the Senate will be secured.

Senators say it is unfair treatment to coal miners. I cannot see the justification for that statement. The amendment I originally offered was offered as an additional declaration of policy pertaining to labor relations. Members of the Senate say, "Why single out one phase, and only one phase, of labor relations?" My amendment was offered as an additional paragraph to section 9, on page 42 of the bill, which section is nothing but a declaration of policy in paragraph after paragraph.

When Senators say, "Why not denounce those things inimical to labor?", I say that that is all that is done in section 9, and I am glad to say, and to repeat I think for the third time, that section 9 declares as the public policy of the United States that there shall be collective bargaining, and that no employer shall interfere with any employee in his right to bargain collectively. It provides that no producer shall interfere or coerce employees in the exercise of their rights. It provides, further, that no employee and no one seeking employment shall be required as a condition of employment to join a company union. Never before, that I can recall, has that been written into law; and here is a declaration of policy as to something new, but something of which I am in favor, denouncing the company union, and the action of any man who will try to force an employee to join a company union.

The section then proceeds to declare that if any employer shall be guilty of violating any one of these prohibitions, any one of these paragraphs, he shall not be permitted to receive a contract from the United States Government for furnishing coal.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Did the Senator say that the policies to which he has just been referring have not been declared in Federal legislation?

Mr. BYRNES. No. I said that the one referring to the company union had not been covered in previous legislation, so far as I could find.

Mr. MINTON. Were they not all embraced in the law held constitutional by the Supreme Court last Monday affecting the railway unions?

Mr. BYRNES. I stated to the Senate—and that answers the Senator—that if that particular policy denouncing company unions was embraced in any law, I personally did not know it.

In the National Labor Relations Act we made a declaration of policy, and I am in favor of every word of it. It denounces as unfair practices things against which I have contended for years. As I said to the Senator from Indiana, so far as I have gathered in reading that act this morning, it does not embrace specifically a reference to the company union.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Did the Senator say that the company-union question was not involved in the National Labor Relations Act?

Mr. BYRNES. I said that in reading it this morning I did not find it referred to, nor do I recall that it is. I shall be delighted to learn from the Senator, who was the author of the act and knows about it, what the fact is.

Mr. WAGNER. It is one of the important provisions of the law. We prohibited practices of the type of those under which the company union would fall.

Mr. BYRNES. I am delighted to learn from the Senator that that is true, because, as I have several times stated, that is one practice to which I am very much opposed; but, reading the provisions covering unfair practices, I did not see that referred to. Knowing the views of the Senator, I know he would be opposed to it, as I am.

Mr. WAGNER. In the Virginia Railway decision the Supreme Court took up that very practice, and the Court upheld the statute there involved and the prohibitions contained therein, and they are almost identical, word for word, with the provisions in the National Labor Relations Act with reference to the company union.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I am glad to know that. Then every one of these practices about which the Members of the Senate have complained has been denounced either as against public policy or as a violation of law. And they are denounced in the section to which my amendment is offered.

Senators who are very much opposed to acting upon the amendment at this time state, among other things, that it would involve us in a dispute between leaders of various labor organizations. That cannot be the fact. Members of the Senate know that Mr. William Green, the president of the American Federation of Labor, has denounced the sit-down strike. In this morning's newspapers the Associated Press carries a story from Houston, Tex., that Harvey C. Fremming, of the Committee for Industrial Organization, arriving in Texas to open what he terms one of America's major labor moves, declared:

> The first thing I want to do is tell the Governor, a good friend of mine, that John L. Lewis and the C. I. O. don't work on the principle of sit-down strikes. Lewis merely inherited that form of strike. Did you ever hear of a sit-down strike in a coal mine?

Therefore, Mr. Lewis is opposed to it. Mr. Hillman, who is in charge of the drive among the textile operators, was reported the other day to have said that he did not want to be quoted as favoring the sit-down strike.

Therefore the great leaders of both labor organizations are opposed to it. Every Senator who has discussed the subject is opposed to it. The people of this Nation are opposed to it. Then why should the Senate hesitate to declare against public policy something which everybody in America is opposed to?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. KING. Assuming for the sake of argument—and I am only indulging in an assumption—that some labor leaders favor the sit-down strike, which is condemned, as the Senator very properly says, by the people of the United States generally, why should that deter us from expressing our views in condemnation of something which obviously is wrong, is a trespass upon property, and leads to strife and confusion, and oftentimes to bloodshed?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, of course, nothing should deter us from voting our views. But it might make it easier for men in public life to vote their views if the views of the various leaders of the labor organizations were expressed as being in accord with the views expressed in a particular amendment.

Mr. President, Senators seem perfectly willing to proceed to the consideration of the subject matter in a resolution after we dispose of the coal bill. If so, and they have made up their minds they do not need any hearings. They know what they want to do, and I see no reason why they should not do it. What is the difference in voting today and voting tomorrow and Wednesday?

Certainly it cannot be said that there is anything new in offering an amendment containing a declaration of policy to a bill of this character. There is not a Member of the Senate, there is not a Member of the House of Representatives, who cannot recall instance after instance when legislation has been offered which was not even relevant to the language of the bill as originally introduced.

In this case that charge cannot be made. Here is what did happen: When my amendment was originally offered to the section containing a declaration of policy in the Guffey bill, which bill provided for the enactment of a code for the coal industry, what was the argument against it? The argument was, "It is fine, and we are against the sit-down strike; but the amendment is limited to one industry, and it ought to apply to all; it ought to be made general. It is unfair to single out one industry." After the Senators had exhausted their vocabularies and suffered mental anguish on Thursday and Friday in stating that it should not be restricted to one industry, today I adopted the language of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] applying to all industries. Now Senators say it is too broad, and, even if it is not too broad, that it should not be in this bill.

When the amendment first provided that when men cease to work they should not remain on the property where they were employed after they received notice to leave, Senators declared, "I am opposed to the sit-down strike, but I am afraid of the language of the amendment. I think you should say simply that we are against the sit-down strike, so there would be no doubt about what was said and what was meant. The suggestion of Senator PITTMAN is much better than your amendment." Well, I have offered as amendment the language of the Senator from Nevada, which does exactly what they said should be done. Now they say that that is all wrong; that the language should not be used; that there have been strikes during all the years and nothing has been said about them, and nothing should be said about strikes at this time.

Mr. President, I am sorry my dear friend the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is not in the Chamber. I wanted to tell him that I have greater confidence in his judgment when that judgment is reflected in an amendment prepared after due deliberation and when that judgment continues to be his judgment for several days, than I have in his conclusion a few minutes ago that his own amendment should be considered later, when somebody else would have a chance to amend it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Is the Senator of the opinion that the adoption of the pending amendment would be construed by the country and would operate to be a deterrent against future strikes of this kind?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if I did not believe that, I should not ask the Senate to vote upon it.

Mr. WALSH. I assumed that. I now ask another question. Is the Senator of the opinion that if his amendment shall be rejected, it will be construed by the country as an attitude of indifference on the part of the Senate to the sit-down strikes?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, there can be no doubt about it. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts there is not one reason why the original amendment drafted by me and offered to the Senate should not be adopted as a declaration of policy. It was simply adding one additional policy to the four or five declarations of policies set forth in the same section. The only reason I withdrew that amendment, and offered the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada, his own amendment, was because I believed that if Senators would vote the way they talked last week there would be more votes cast for that amendment, and there would be less misunderstanding on the part of the people of this country. The people should know that the Congress of the United States, the policy-making body, says, "As a policy of the United States we disapprove of the sit-down strike."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me, regardless of the precise phraseology of this amendment, regardless of the debate in this body, that the public will construe the vote on this amendment as an expression of approval or disapproval of sit-down strikes.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Massachusetts is right. The people can look into the record if they please and say, "My Senator is opposed to the sit-down strike, but he wants a chance to vote upon it tomorrow." Of course, some ordinary citizen may say, "If he is going to be against it tomorrow, why not today?" Whether a man approves of it or disapproves of it, I want him to vote his conviction. This amendment only expresses the views of the Congress as to a question that is today in the minds of all the people of this Nation. The people know how they would vote upon it.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I know that the Senator from South Carolina always wants to be fair—and I mean that sincerely. The Senator, being well informed as to what is going on and has been going on in this country, knows that there has been quite a sit-down with respect to the National Labor Relations Act on the part of a great many large employers. I am happy to say that the majority observed the law, and by that method have retained industrial peace in their industries; but there have been a great many who have not. I am not speaking of those who appealed to the courts; because, as I said the other day, when a court order is issued, the law must be observed. I am talking about those employers who, by themselves or with their attorneys, decided that the law did not apply to their particular industries, and violated it. Without bothering about the courts, they simply said, "We will not obey the law."

When we are talking about condemning the workers because of a certain method they have pursued, which is recognized as being a trespass, should we not at the same time recognize this defiance of the law of the United States, and have a provision put into the law dealing with it? I do not say that the language which I am about to read is the language which should be adopted. I have hurriedly drafted it, but it is similar to what was proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] the other day. It is as follows:

Provided, That the employers shall have recognized the jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board and other governmental agencies for the peaceful settlement of labor disputes.

I am wondering whether this would not present the true picture, rather than to pick out solely the working people, who have acted, I believe, mistakenly in resorting to the sit-down strike as a weapon.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator reread the phrase?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly. [Reading:]

Provided, That the employers shall have recognized the jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board and other governmental agencies for the peaceful settlement of labor disputes.

I do not have any pride of authorship. Perhaps some other language ought to be used. However, I think the entire picture ought to be presented.

I heard no great indignation when the La Follette committee brought out the manner in which workers were exploited by means of the spy system, the machine guns, and all the other methods used to oppress them while collective bargaining was completely denied them. When these facts were brought out there were not these great protests. I say we ought to look at the whole picture.

Mr. WALSH. Every violation of law, whether by employer or employee.

Mr. WAGNER. That is true. That is what I suggested. Every deliberate violation of law is subject to condemnation by this body.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. McADOO. I wish to ask the Senator from New York where in the bill he wishes to insert the provision he has just read.

Mr. WAGNER. Somewhere in the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. McADOO. I hand the Senator from New York a copy of the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina. I ask him to examine it.

Mr. WAGNER. It is easy enough for draftsmen to insert it in the proper place.

Mr. McADOO. It did not seem to me that it fitted into the amendment as the Senator now has drawn it, and it seemed to me that he ought to draw it to conform to the amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. I am speaking of the desirability of having added to the amendment additional language of that kind. Does not the Senator agree that both sides ought to be treated equally?

Mr. McADOO. I do.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I shall be glad to answer the Senator from New York. The Senator said that when the La Follette committee disclosed the fact that in certain industries spies were used, no great outcries were made. I do not know about outcries, but I know my views.

Mr. WAGNER. Will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I am not finding any fault about your views, but no great outcries were made about the injuries done to workers.

Mr. BYRNES. I wish to advise the Senator from New York that the revelations astounded me.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure they did.

Mr. BYRNES. They impressed me so much that I sent to the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the enforcement of the law, for the passage of which I was responsible, and which prohibits importing any person into the State for the purpose of interfering with men who are engaged in peaceful picketing; and I asked the Assistant Attorney General to bring to my office the record of any matters the department had investigated. Taking them, together with the La Follette hearings, I have been working on an amendment to the law which I have just described to see if there is a possibility of bringing such matters within the jurisdiction of the Congress. The attorneys in the Department of Justice are to see me and confer with me again at the conclusion of the La Follette committee hearings; and as chairman of the Audit and Control Committee I favorably reported a resolution giving additional funds to the La Follette committee to pursue its investigation.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I am one of the enthusiastic supporters of that very commendable piece of legislation. The Senator will have noticed that the La Follette committee investigation has shown that employers have defied the very admirable law which was proposed by the Senator. They did use thugs as strike-breakers in some instances, thus deliberately bringing about the conditions so resented by the employees.

Mr. BYRNES. There is no doubt about that, Mr. President. I voted for the provision in the act creating the National Labor Relations Board penalizing the actions that the Senator has in mind with respect to collective bargaining and company unions. I introduced the bill on the other subject to which I just referred. I am willing to go along with the Senator in any declaration of policy he may offer with reference to any unlawful act, but I would not base a declaration as to an unlawful act upon the condition that another man has committed a violation of the law. I will join the Senator in denouncing, in language as strong as he can draw, employers who violate the National Labor Relations Act or indulge in the employment of spies; but I would not say that employees are entitled to sit down on the property of any man and stay there and take possession of his property and hold it against him and against the officers of the law, unless the employer could show that he had never violated some other law. Each violation must stand to itself. Two wrongs do not make a right. When it is shown, as it can be shown, that employees have violated the Wagner Act, I will join in denouncing them. Their act is unlawful. My only objection would be to adding any language here which would say, "You must submit your cause to the National Labor Relations Board; and if you do not do it, your employees have the right to take your property away from you." That is not the penalty provided by the law. Congress fixes the penalty for a violation of law. It is in the statute. If it is sufficient, all right. If it is insufficient, then let us amend the law and provide a sufficient penalty, and I would want to see the Government enforce that penalty. But I will not say, "You must submit your cause to the Labor Board; and if you do not do it, then any man who works for you can take your property away from you." If another penalty is to be provided, it must be done by statute, and not by legalizing something which is illegal.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. The Labor Relations Board Act itself provides that no order of the National Labor Relations Board is enforceable until the courts approve the order. So there is in every instance a hearing in court before any of the acts of the Board are enforceable. I think the Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. BYRNES. I was thinking of the effect of the amendment the Senator read.

Mr. WAGNER. I have no pride of authorship, but I think the amendment ought to be presented.

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator will introduce a separate paragraph containing such a provision as he suggests, I will go along with him. It cannot be too strong for me.

Mr. WAGNER. But the Senator does not want it included in his amendment?

Mr. BYRNES. I say that cannot be done. As I read the language, I think the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] was correct. I looked at it this morning, and I think if the Senator will get the amendment, a copy of which is on his desk, he will conclude that it is impossible to frame an amendment which can be offered to the language used by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] which I have adapted as mine for the reasons stated. However, there is nothing to prevent the Senator from offering an amendment as another paragraph denouncing, in as strong language as he desires, those employers who fail to comply with the National Labor Relations Act or who deprive workingmen of any rights.

Mr. WAGNER. I think particularly that the matter ought to be dealt with in one resolution so that at the same time both sides might be condemned for any violation of law at the same time.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator that in the first three paragraphs of this section there is in effect a denunciation of employers who fail to permit collective bargaining; who discriminate against employees because of union membership and force membership in company unions. That is why my amendment is offered as an additional paragraph to the same section, but it would be perfectly proper for the Senator to offer another paragraph if he cares to draw the language.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator's amendment, as I understand—I was delayed for a while—is universal in its application?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. So, it presents a situation different from what it would if it dealt only with the provisions of this specific piece of legislation?

Mr. BYRNES. But, nevertheless, this whole section sets forth a declaration of policy and specifically denounces the things the Senator and I have stood together in denouncing, and as to which we now stand together. Last week the objection to my amendment was that it dealt only with the industry referred to in this bill. I changed it to apply generally to all industries. Now the objection is it should not be offered to this bill, which applies only to one industry.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to say one further word?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I was going to say that I was particularly apprehensive of having the Senator's amendment in this piece of legislation because I know something of the coal miner's life. I am sure the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] will substantiate what I say. A committee of which I was a member spent 3 weeks in the coal fields at a time before the workers were organized. At the head of that committee was the late Senator Gooding, who was the colleague of the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. Senator Gooding was recognized in this body as a very conservative man. He went to the coal fields with us and wrote the report for the subcommittee, in which he denounced, in as strong language as he could, the disgraceful and uncivilized conditions which existed in some of the mines. Many of the conditions complained of have been remedied, because the workers finally became organized.

Let me say that the men engaged in the coal industry are very orderly, and that the adoption of this amendment to the pending bill would be regarded as an indictment against these men who for 30 years have suffered and struggled and have finally reached the position where they are organized and are bargaining collectively without any strikes. Let me tell the Senator something further about these workers. When I was chairman of the Labor Board, which was a noncompensated office——

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not mind yielding to a question, but I do not care to yield for a speech.

Mr. WAGNER. It will take me only a minute to complete the subject.

Mr. BYRNES. That would be an excellent thing to do.

Mr. WAGNER. As to the workers, concerning whom, I think, I am well informed, they are men who went to France to defend our country; they exposed their breasts to bullets in defense of America. Let us think about these men and not indict them unjustly.

Let me say to the Senator that while I was chairman of the Labor Board there were workers in 15 mines who wanted an election. They were completely unorganized, or they were forced by coercion to belong to a company union. The Senator knows the story. They came to me, as chairman of the Labor Board, and asked me if I would not hold an election. They said, "We want only an election to determine the question whether the miners want to belong to a company union or an outside union." After some persuasion, the operators agreed to an election. The Governor of the State asked me if I wanted troops to protect the workers in case of riots, or other disturbances which he anticipated. I said that I wanted no troops.

The mayors of the different places asked, "Do you want policemen?" I said, "No; I regard these workers as respectable law-abiding men, and I do not want policemen." We conducted the election in 15 towns, without the aid of a policeman or a State trooper, and there was not a single act of violence. Those men voted a secret ballot, and in 13 out of the 15 towns they elected the outside union. That is how the outside union was born. They made a collective bargaining agreement the other day. There has been no strike since that time.

What I am concerned about is that I do not want to be one, in anticipation of some possible situation, to condemn these law-abiding workers, over 400,000 of them. So, it seems to me, if we are going to anticipate possible violation of law by them, and a disregard for the laws of their communities or of their country, that we ought at the same time to recognize the fact that there are many employers who have violated the law. Let them be told that they should obey the laws of the United States. That is my whole concern. I am not trying to defeat any of the Senator's noble efforts, but I want him to see both sides of the story.

Mr. BYRNES. Of course, I always desire to hear both sides of a story. I would not have the Senator think that I am entirely unaware of conditions in the coal mines. I have been down in coal mines; I have been in mines at a time when there was a labor controversy, when human beings were killed. I spent not days but weeks in the mines and saw the conditions that existed, and I would join the Senator in denouncing the conditions existing in some mines some years ago. I have no doubt that among the miners there are men who went to France and bared their breasts just as there are men in this body who went to France and bared their breasts, and men in the cotton mills and men on the farms and many employers also who went to France. The Army was not recruited from any one class of people. Certainly, I would not see any justification for believing that there was any reflection upon any man in a coal mine any more than on any other man or any other industry to say that a sit-down strike is illegal and contrary to sound public policy. If he has no idea of engaging in one, it certainly will not bother him. The miner who has no intention of taking possession of another's property will say, "It certainly does not affect me, for I have no intention of sitting down on another man's property; it has no application to me." If any man intends to take possession of another man's property, then he should know the view of the Congress as to such action.

I know the miners have improved their conditions since they organized. I am in favor of their being organized. A great industry in my State is the cotton-mill industry. I have always favored the organization of the cotton-mill employees. The manufacturers in my State do not approve of my attitude, for I have been just as strong an advocate of the organization of the cotton-mill employees as my good friend from New York has been of all the employees of this country. There is no excuse for saying this amendment reflects upon anyone. I call to the attention of the Senator from New York again what I read a few moments ago from today's New York Times. The gentleman who represents the C. I. O. in Texas stated at Houston that Mr. Lewis is not in favor of the sit-down strike. We know Mr. Green is not in favor of it——

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator does not think I am in favor of the sit-down strike, does he?

Mr. BYRNES. No; I never would make such a charge against the Senator from New York. I know he would not be in favor of it. No one is in favor of it. But, Mr. President, my difficulty is getting Senators to vote the way they talk. [Laughter.] That is the only purpose of the amendment, and that is the only excuse on my part for offering it. The Senator from New York indignantly resents the statement that he might be in favor of the sit-down strike; Mr. Lewis is opposed to it; Mr. Green is opposed to it; Mr. Fremming, who goes into Texas, is opposed to it. I cannot find anybody in favor of it, and yet we do have a little difficulty in getting a vote in condemnation of it.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. I understood the distinguished Senator from South Carolina to say, during the course of his colloquy with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] that he was ready to vote to denounce every violation of law, or words to that effect. Did I correctly understand the Senator?

Mr. BYRNES. I said that if the Senator from New York would draw an amendment, in a separate paragraph, denouncing violations of the law on the part of employers, because of the Labor Relations Board Act or anything else, I would certainly support him.

Mr. NEELY. Does not the Senator from South Carolina believe that lynching by mob is a violation of the law of the land?

Mr. BYRNES. That is murder; and if the Senator wants to introduce a resolution denouncing it, I will join him in the denunciation.

Mr. NEELY. Will the Senator from South Carolina join me in having an amendment adopted to his amendment to the effect that, as a policy of this Government, the Senate does denounce lynching?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; if the Senator will introduce a separate paragraph, I will do it. I have always denounced it. The Senator from West Virginia mentioned it the other day. I did not refer to it because I did not want to be diverted from the pending subject. As he again mentions it, let me say that on the floor of the House, when I was a Member of that body, and on the floor of the Senate, I have said that lynching is murder; and the only difference between murder, as it is defined in the law of every State, and lynching is that lynching is where, according to the definition of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], three or more engage in it; and when three or more men kill a human being, it is just three or more times worse than when one man takes the life of another with malice aforethought. The commission of one crime cannot justify the commission of another crime by three or more men. All my life I have denounced lynching, and I thank God there was no human being lynched in the State of South Carolina during the last year. The good people of South Carolina share the views I have expressed about the lynching or murder of a human being; and if the Senator will offer, as a separate paragraph, a denunciation of lynching, he will find no objection from me.

Mr. NEELY. Let me thank the Senator from South Carolina for the comfort and assurance that we will have his support in passing an antilynching measure at this session.

Mr. BYRNES. Oh, no, Mr. President. Murder is an offense against the laws of the State. That is different from a denunciation of lynching. My attitude will depend altogether on the measure offered. My amendment to the pending bill is merely a declaration of policy as to matters within the jurisdiction of Congress. I shall be glad to talk to the Senator if he introduces a paragraph denouncing lynching. I did not say anything about it the other day because I did not want to be diverted from the issue before the Senate. I think really the discussion of lynching has no more relevancy in this discussion than, to adopt the picturesque language of my good friend from West Virginia, a black snake has at a lawn party. I do not know why the black snake is picked on. A garter snake might cause more trouble at a lawn party than a black snake. But if the Senator from West Virginia should introduce an amendment to denounce the black snake he thought out of place at a lawn party, there would be argument on the floor of the Senate as to whether or not black snakes have not as much right on the lawn as have people, and it would be argued for a day that the party ought to be in the house and the snakes on the lawn; and, in any event, that there should be no discrimination against black snakes; that something should be said about garter snakes at a lawn party. It would be argued further that we should delay action until we had an opportunity to investigate and see what the snakes had to say about it. That would be the natural order of events if the Senator should undertake to denounce black snakes at a lawn party, as he did in his eloquent speech last Friday.

Mr. NEELY. I did not use the garter snake in making my comparison, because I knew that in any discussion that might arise about the article of wearing apparel to which the adjective before the word "snake" refers, my friend from South Carolina would have me at a great disadvantage. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I repeat that I am now offering the amendment containing the language of the President pro tempore of the Senate, language which last week apparently had the approval of all the Members of the Senate who were opposed to my amendment. Those Senators were against the sit-down strike, but did not like the form of my amendment; they liked the Pittman suggestion. I now give them their amendment, and I express the hope that it will be adopted. I was willing to make the change and to offer it in the words of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], because I believed it would get more votes on the floor of the Senate, and I did not want the American people to get the impression the Senate of the United States was in favor of the sit-down strike.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] a few moments ago, by an inquiry addressed to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], elicited a response to the effect that anyone who voted against the amendment would be voting for the sit-down strike, and that that was the impression which the country would rightly receive from any such vote. Then he stated the converse, that anyone who voted the other way, of course, would be considered as opposing the sit-down strike.

Mr. President, I do not intend to be blanketed by any such statement as that. I intend to vote against the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina. If I know my own mind, that is not a vote in favor of the sit-down strike. I do not want the impression to go out to the country that I am in favor of the sit-down strike merely because I vote against the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina. I am willing to meet that issue when it shall come before the Senate, to meet it fairly and squarely and to meet it without delay, but I am unwilling that the textile industry of the country shall compel me to cast a vote which might be construed as the Senator from Massachusetts indicated. I am unwilling, first, because the amendment is a one-sided proposal. It condemns only one side to the controversy involved in labor disputes, and that is the employees' side. I would not be a party to such condemnation where the employer was equally guilty.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I merely wish to ask the Senator if in saying that the textile industry would make a Senator vote a certain way the Senator means that the textile industry caused or induced me to present the amendment?

Mr. MINTON. No; I do not think so. I think the Senator had a perfectly good and valid reason sufficient unto himself for doing so, but I think the textile industry has a very vital interest in the Senator's amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. I think the Senator should yield to me to permit me to say that when I came to the Senate I am sure not a single cotton manufacturer in the State of South Carolina voted for me. When I was reelected to the Senate I think some of them did vote for me, and they did it only because they knew I was going to be reelected anyway. I know that 90 percent of the employees voted for me and supported me. I know that I am in favor of and have advocated the organization of the cotton-mill operatives of my State, and shall continue to fight for their organization. No manufacturer would ever assume to come and talk to me about offering an amendment of this kind.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, as to anything I may have to say about the textile industry I absolve the Senator from South Carolina from any connection with it at all. I am sure that he has offered his amendment to the bill because he thinks it is the thing to do and for reasons sufficient unto himself. However, I cannot but recognize what everyone else in the Chamber knows to be the fact, that the textile industry is vitally interested in the adoption of the amendment. I think I should not be asked to support the amendment to this particular bill, as I said a while ago, because it is one-sided and envisages only one side of the industrial dispute.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Does the Senator from Indiana mean to indicate that he favors the sit-down strike in the textile industry? Is that a fair inference from his remarks?

Mr. MINTON. Oh, no; I do not favor it in the textile industry or any other industry, and have never said so at any time or at any place, and never will say so.

I am opposed to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina for another reason, and that is because it is a slap in the face of 450,000 miners in the country who have never resorted to the practice of a sit-down strike. I know of no reason why the Senate should become so agitated about sit-down strikes, which have been going on for a couple of months in the country, that we should have to vote on the question just now. I am perfectly willing to vote on it as a separate proposition whenever it shall receive the consideration which Senators think it ought to receive, but I am unwilling, as I said in the beginning, to be blanketed in under the terms suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MINTON. I yield the floor.

Mr. BONE. I merely wish to ask the Senator if he thinks that in any definite and formal expression of this body we should confine that denunciation, or a denunciation by implication, to any group?

In the 5 years that I have served in this body, the bulk of the legislation considered by the Congress of the United States has dealt in no small part with defaults—the almost criminal defaults—of our captains of industry, with stock-jobbing deals, fake sales of stock, and the abuses of the holding companies in this country that have rooked and robbed Americans of billions of dollars. Rackets in our cities, crime itself, have taken an enormous toll. If there is to be a resolution expressing moral censure by the Congress of the United States, I think we ought to be good enough sports to condemn the Power Trust racket in this country, the stock-jobbing racket, and all the other rackets. At this moment, it is true, labor is occupying the spotlight; but there have been a number of very grave and serious abuses that merit challenge. Many of them have been met by legislation, and Congress has been passing legislation condemnatory of and attempting to correct those very abuses.

I desire to ask the Senator whether he does not think that if a resolution of this kind were adopted by Congress—a solemn declaration of public policy in the nature of a criticism, or an implied criticism—we ought to have sufficient good sportsmanship in our hides to include all the rackets of one kind or another that we have tried to correct by legislation?

Mr. MINTON. Of course, there is no end to the immoral things that we might denounce in a declaration of policy by the Senate of the United States. I do not suppose we shall attempt to denounce everything that is bad and commend everything that is good.

Mr. BONE. The point I had in mind in my question was, regardless of the merits of the strike, an attempt now by a formal resolution, which will challenge the attention of the whole country, to pick out one group. Assuming that things have been done that are not right, why should we now be so profoundly stirred that we pick out the acts that we consider challenging on the part of one group, instead of taking in the category of public evils which we all know to exist?

Mr. MINTON. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. BONE. I think the strike situation will clear itself up in time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. NEELY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Overton
Andrews	Copeland	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper
Austin	Davis	King	Pittman
Bachman	Dieterich	Lee	Pope
Bailey	Duffy	Lewis	Radcliffe
Bankhead	Ellender	Lodge	Robinson

Bilbo	George	Lonergan	Schwartz
Black	Gerry	Lundeen	Schwellenbach
Bone	Gibson	McAdoo	Sheppard
Borah	Gillette	McCarran	Steiwer
Bridges	Green	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Brown, Mich.	Guffey	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Brown, N. H.	Hale	McNary	Townsend
Bulkley	Harrison	Maloney	Truman
Bulow	Hatch	Minton	Tydings
Burke	Hayden	Moore	Vandenberg
Byrd	Herring	Neely	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hitchcock	Norris	Wagner
Caraway	Holt	Nye	Walsh
Chavez	Hughes	O'Mahoney	White

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is detained as head of a committee now engaged on the public business in the Senate Office Building.

I also reannounce the absence of Senators as announced by me earlier in the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on the pending amendment, I desire to state my position with regard to it, and also, very briefly, my position on the sit-down strike method.

I have said, and I most fervently believe, that the sit-down strike method is illegal and contrary to American policies and principles. I am against the sit-down strike method; but I shall vote "no" on this amendment. I think the amendment has no place in the pending bill.

In the State of New Mexico are thousands of law-abiding coal miners, decent, self-respecting citizens of my State. The way this amendment is presented to this particular bill, I take it as a reflection upon those residents and citizens of New Mexico. Later, on a separate issue, at any time, I am willing to voice my sentiments against the sit-down method by my vote. I am not willing to do so on this amendment.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, before the roll is called I desire to state briefly for the RECORD that I shall not vote for the pending amendment for the reason that I think it has no proper place in this bill, and because it does not go to the merits of the question. I should be very happy to see brought upon the floor of the Senate an independent and comprehensive resolution which could be carefully considered and debated and then acted upon; and I shall be very willing at that time to vote upon such a measure. I will say at the same time that I concede that the sit-down strike is illegal; but I think that this is not the proper way to declare the position of the Senate in this matter.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, on behalf of the coal miners of Wyoming, I wish to endorse what has been said by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]. For the reasons the Senator gives, I shall vote against the pending amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution, which I ask to have read.

The resolution (S. Res. 111) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that so-called sit-down strikes and the intolerable menace of industrial espionage are illegal and contrary to sound public policy.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that the resolution lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I am opposed to the principle of the sit-down strike, because it encourages the spirit of lawlessness from which all of us will suffer if it be condoned. The workers will be the greatest losers through this method of direct action, because human rights are inseparably linked with property rights, and a violation of the one is an attack upon the other. The ownership of property is recognized by law, and any method involving the use of property at variance with the law will completely upset the existing order of our economic life.

I was opposed to the original amendment offered by the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] because it applied only to coal miners. Now that it has been amended to apply generally, I desire to say that I shall vote for it.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish to say, principally for the RECORD, that the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] has stated my sentiments so perfectly that I desire to endorse what he has said.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask that the pending amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 44, after line 12, it is proposed to insert:

That it is the sense of the Congress that the so-called sit-down strike is illegal and contrary to sound public policy. The Congress only assumes to speak as to strikes in industries within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret that I have not had an opportunity to present the resolution which I suggested last Friday. I very much prefer it to the amendment now before the Senate, which was originally offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. I do not like to vote for a declaration speaking for the Congress itself, and I should very much prefer to have adopted a resolution expressive of the sense of the Senate.

I ask that my resolution be read, and then I shall ask that it lie on the table for further consideration if the pending amendment shall not be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 112) was read, as follows:

Whereas the so-called sit-down strikes are taking place in various parts of the United States; and

Whereas such strikes are resulting in disorders, interference with property rights and with interstate commerce, and result in a growing spirit of disrespect for law and the courts; and

Whereas the continuance of such strikes is inimical to the maintenance of a democratic form of government, and is subversive of the authority of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that sit-down strikes are illegal and are hereby condemned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. McNARY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. BYRD. I announce that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has a general pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]. I am authorized to state that if the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] were present and permitted to vote he would vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], who is in attendance on a meeting of the Committee on the Judiciary.

I also announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. If present and voting, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] would vote "yea", and the Senator from North Carolina would vote "nay."

I further announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] are detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained on important public business.

The junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] and the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained in Government departments on matters pertaining to their State.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] are absent because of illness.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 48, as follows:

YEAS—36

NOT VOTING—11

Ashurst	Donahey	Murray	Smith
Capper	Glass	Reynolds	Wheeler
Clark	La Follette	Shipstead

So Mr. BYRNES' amendment was rejected.

Mr. PITTMAN submitted a concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7), which was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the so-called sit-down strike is illegal and contrary to sound public policy; and

That the so-called industrial spy system breeds fear, suspicion, and animosities, and is contrary to sound public policy.

The Congress only assumes to speak as to strikes in industries within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 30, line 17, to strike out the period after the word "him", and to insert a comma and the words "and for the purpose of this subsection the term 'producer' also includes all individuals, partnerships, and corporations which are found by the Commission, upon the effective date of this act, bona fide and not for the purpose of evading the provisions of this act, to be owned by, or to be under common ownership with, a producer, provided such a producer does not sell any part of his production on the commercial market."

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I am authorized to say that the friends of the bill and those who have charge of the proposed legislation have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Ohio explain the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. BULKLEY. I shall be glad to do so. The purpose of the amendment is simply to extend the exception carried by subsection (l), on page 30, so as to include under the definition of the word "producer" a wholly owned subsidiary or other legal entity having identical ownership. That is the whole purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, on page 2 of this bill, in line 17, I move to strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one"; and in line 18, to strike out "producers" and insert "a producer." The purpose of that, Mr. President, is to give the public a majority of the board. As the board is now constituted, the coal operators and the people who are engaged in labor in the mines would have a majority of the board. I think a majority of the board ought to represent the public.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask the Senator where he proposes to insert his amendment?

Mr. BORAH. In line 17, on page 2, the amendment is to strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof "one"; and in line 18, to strike out "producers" and insert "a producer."

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I was unable to hear the Senator from Idaho. May we hear the amendment he proposes?

Mr. BORAH. The amendment is in line 17, on page 2. The word "two" should be stricken out and "one" should be inserted, according to my view. That would make a majority of the board representative of the public and not representative of either of those who are immediately concerned in the enterprise.

Mr. President, I suppose, as was said by the able Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], who opened the discussion upon this matter, that this is looked upon as the beginning of a system of establishing commissions and price-fixing machinery over different industries; and next will come, in all probability, such action with respect to textiles and steel, and so forth. We ought not to establish the precedent, it seems to me, in the very beginning, of putting a majority of those directly interested in control of the commission.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the provisions of the bill, these two members who are supposed to be experienced in the production of coal must have divested themselves completely of all interest in the coal business before they can be appointed. The bill merely provides that two members out of the seven shall have been experienced coal producers in the past, but not any longer interested in coal, and that two of them shall be experienced coal miners, so that there shall be four members experienced in the coal mining and production business, with three members representing the public. There is no reason why the two who may have been coal producers, but who no longer have any interest in that industry, or the two who may have been experienced miners, and who no longer have any personal interest in mining, may not represent the public as well as the three who are not supposed to have had any experience at all with the coal industry.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the appointing power is the President, and he would undoubtedly select competent men experts to perform the duties of the commission; but there must be a reason for putting a majority of this board in control of those who are closely and intimately associated with the production of coal and labor in the coal mines. There must be a reason for it. No one is so naive as not to know.

I wish to call the Senate's attention to another matter. How far can we go in limiting the discretion of the appointing power, when that is the President, as to whom he shall appoint to an office of this kind? For instance, in the Court reorganization bill, which we shall have before us shortly, should we say that the President shall not appoint a man over 50 years of age or under 50 years of age, or that he must appoint two men from admiralty practice and two men from criminal practice?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. We frequently say, when we create a board, that the President shall not appoint more than a certain number from any political party. If we can limit his appointing power with reference to politics, we can do it with reference to business. There is no fundamental difference.

Mr. BORAH. It has never been passed upon, to my knowledge.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think it has been to the Supreme Court. I do not know that it will ever get there. However, discretion in the matter of appointment has been exercised time out of mind, and there is no reason to suppose that it is not a proper exercise of power. Of course, no question ever gets to the Supreme Court unless someone takes it there.

Mr. BORAH. In all probability this question will never get there, I agree about that; but I am calling attention to the fact that we are undertaking to limit the President in the exercise of discretion as to whom he shall appoint.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Constitution provides that Congress may create minor offices and provides for the manner of appointment to those offices. The manner of the appointment might very well be interpreted to mean the type of men from whom they should be selected, their experience, and so on.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it is provided here that the President of the United States shall make the appointment. It is not provided that somebody else shall make the appointment. It is provided that the man in whom the Constitution rests the appointing power shall make the appointment; and having placed it in his hands, I ask again, Is it practical as a legal proposition to limit his discretion as to whom he shall appoint?

However, that is not the matter of most concern to me. The matter of most concern to me is to give the appointing power unlimited discretion with reference to the kind of board he shall appoint; and I certainly do not think we ought to confine him to the exercise of his discretion so that he must appoint men who are associated, sympathetically and otherwise, whether or not in actual dollars and cents, with the coal industry.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not wish to argue the amendment separately. The provision that two men shall be appointed from among those experienced as miners, and two from among those who have been producers of coal, had two objects in view. One was to have on the commission experienced men, men who know something about the coal business, who could give expert advice to this commission. Of course the President in his discretion could, if he saw fit, outside of the two who had not had experience as miners, appoint all the rest of them from among those who had been coal producers; or, if he appointed two coal producers who had experience, he could appoint the rest of them from among the coal miners. But that is not the intention. The object is to have men on the commission who have had experience from the standpoint of the producer as well as from the standpoint of the miner who goes down into the earth to dig out the coal.

If we are going to have experienced men representing both of these groups, they ought to be equal. They ought not to be one from one group and two from another. They ought to have equal representation. The bill provides that none of these men shall have any interest in the coal business or in any business competitive with the coal industry. They cannot be interested in gas or oil or any other industry that is competitive with coal. In order to qualify they must have divorced themselves completely from this business or any competitive business. Under all those circumstances, with this restriction hedged around the provisions, it does not seem to me that we ought to adopt the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it does not appear on the face of the bill whether there is any logical basis for the number of members of the commission provided for in the bill; whether it should be seven or five, for instance.

It occurs to me, as has just been suggested by another Senator, that probably it was desired by the committee drafting the bill and reporting it to have equal representation from those experienced in actual mine work and those who are known as producers. I am wondering whether—if the Senator from Idaho thinks it important—there might be one representative of the bituminous-coal miners, one representative of the producers, and three representatives of the public, which would accomplish the purpose the Senator from Idaho has in mind; namely, to place control of the commission in the public representatives rather than in the agents of the two interests, and at the same time preserve a parity between the representatives of the mine workers and the representatives of the mine owners.

I have not studied the subject, and I invite an expression of opinion from the Senator from West Virginia, who has done so.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, my experience as chairman of the subcommittee which considered the bill compels me to say that a change in the proposed membership of the commission would not be satisfactory to the sponsors of other friends of the legislation.

Those who have given the matter the most consideration believe that the commission should consist of seven members. Some thought there should be nine. But the committee finally decided upon seven as the minimum number to which it would agree.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who is always solicitous about the public in matters of this kind, probably fears that the two representatives of the operators would combine with the two representatives of the miners and thus out vote the other three members of the commission. But if the Senator had had experience in the coal fields of West Virginia, Kentucky, and Pennsylvania, he would know that the two members representing the industry and the two members representing the miners would be much less likely to agree among themselves than they would be to agree with the three members representing the public.

I hope that no change will be made by the Senate in the number of the commissioners.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 17, it is proposed to strike out "two" and insert "one", and in line 18, to strike out "producers" and insert "a producer", so as to read:

> Two members of the commission shall have been experienced bituminous-coal mining workers, one shall have had previous experience as a producer—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to offer another amendment. On page 14 I move to strike out the language found in lines 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18, reading as follows:

> (d) No action complying with the provisions of this section taken while this act is in effect, by its terms, or within 60 days thereafter, by any code member or by any district board, or officer thereof, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws of the United States.

I am satisfied, Mr. President, that the practical workings of this bill will permit the producers to agree upon prices, to fix prices, and they will be able to make any such agreement as they desire and still be exempt, of course, from the Sherman antitrust law.

I have expressed myself so often upon this phase of the matter that I do not care to discuss it again at this time, but it is proposed to create the machinery with power to administer the entire coal industry. Why should we exempt that commission, or any part of the machinery provided for managing the coal industry, from the operation of the Sherman antitrust law? Certainly all the machinery being provided to protect the interests of the producers—why should they be permitted to go outside of the Sherman antitrust law and make agreements and combinations which will be in direct contravention of the interests of the consumers?

I noticed a day or two ago that Mr. Lewis and the representatives of the coal interests had agreed upon an increase of wages of 50 cents a day, as I recall. Well and good; I have no doubt the miners deserve the increase; but I observed also that on the same day the increase went into effect for labor an increase went into effect against the consumers of the country in the price of coal. And they always increase the price far beyond the amount necessary to take care of the wage increase. That is precisely what they may do, with the machinery of Government backing such procedure and making it legal under this bill. The provisions of the bill relative to protecting the consuming public are a pretense.

Mr. President, there has been great excitement during the last 5 or 6 days with reference to the shooting up of certain prices, a situation which, it is thought, endangers the entire economic structure of the United States at this time. The President has taken notice of it; the press has taken cognizance of it; and I venture to say that there is a great deal of worry from top to bottom amongst those who think about the situation and as to what is going to happen under present conditions.

I wish to say that, so far as I have been able to ascertain, there is not a single price shooting up but what is under the control of some monopoly or trust. These prices are being increased, just as the coal operators, if we repeal the antitrust laws to them, will be permitted to sit down and increase their prices under this bill. Prices are now being increased because a few men sit around a table and determine what 130,000,000 must pay in order that they may live. What is disturbing the whole economic structure of the United States at this time is this reptilian monster of monopoly which is coiled up in this bill. We will not be able ever at any time to serve the consumers of this country so long as there is a power above the Government fixing prices which the consumers must pay.

Why should we give additional strength to that kind of depredation by giving it the sanction of law and permitting the machinery, which we are setting up here for the purpose of protecting the coal industry, to operate against the consumers of the country? I am not opposed to a just and fair bill to protect the producers of coal and the men who work in the mines. But this is a commodity which the poorest people must have, and I do not want the remorseless grip of monopoly to be fastened upon it. I submit this clause should, in the interest of the public, be stricken.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, to adopt the amendment which the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has just proposed would, in principle, be equivalent to our amending the Interstate Commerce Act so that the Interstate Commerce Commission could not fix railroad rates on the ground that its action might be prejudicial to the public.

Under the pending bill prices are to be determined not by a group of operators, but by a commission of seven persons to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. If the amendment of the Senator from Idaho should prevail, no operator would become a member of the code of fair practices which the bill seeks to establish, because no one would be willing to comply with a new law if his compliance subjected him to prosecution under an old one.

Without consuming further time to debate the matter, I express the hope that the friends of the bill will defeat the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator believe that it would have been fair to the American consumers, the shippers of freight and commodities, if the Interstate Commerce Commission had been constituted of four, as an illustration, employees of the railroads, four who owned a large part of the railroads, and two or three selected from the general public? That would give the employees and the owners of the railroads complete authority to fix rates so that very large salaries and compensation could be paid to employees and workers and very heavy prices charged to the consumer.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if the Interstate Commerce Act had provided as the bill before us does in effect provide that persons of particular professions or occupations could not be made members of the Commission until after they had divested themselves of all material interest in the subject matters over which they were to exercise jurisdiction, I do not believe the public would have been injured by the appointment to the Commission of those whom the Senator from Utah has indicated.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it had been my purpose to discuss some of the provisions of the bill, and particularly the amendments offered which in effect condemn sit-down strikes; but, as it is evident that Senators are desirous of disposing of this bill before today's adjournment, I shall occupy but a few moments.

While recognizing the unsatisfactory condition of the bituminous-coal industry, I am unable to give my support to the measure under consideration. I associate myself with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in the position which he has just taken with respect to the provisions of the bill, which in effect relieve the coal operators from the provisions of the antitrust laws.

For many years the American people suffered from monopolistic practices. Large corporations invaded fields of industry and controlled the prices of many commodities essential to the welfare of the people. Finally demands were made for legislation to restrain monopolistic practices, and the Sherman antitrust law was enacted. Later the Clayton Act was passed, and it was hoped that these measures would protect the consuming public from the injustices to which they had been subjected. It is true these acts have not been enforced as they should have been, but they have had a restraining influence upon corporations and have afforded some protection to the American people.

Coal is not only an essential but an indispensable commodity. It is imperatively required by rich and poor, by mills and factories, and in the homes. To create a coal monopoly would work irreparable injury to business and to the American people. The measure under consideration, in my opinion, does not consider the needs of the people and their general welfare; its chief concern seems to be to benefit the mine owners and, incidentally, to improve the conditions of those working in the bituminous mines. Insofar as the measure seeks to improve wages and working conditions of employees, it should meet with approval; but I fear that it is using that laudable purpose to materially advance the interests of the owners of mining properties. Certainly it will prove highly advantageous to the mine operators and will materially increase the price of coal to the consuming public.

I think it is conceded that the price of coal to the American people will be increased not less than $100,000,000, and probably $200,000,000, per annum if this bill is enacted into law. There are not adequate provisions in the bill for the protection of the consuming public, and it is impossible to predict to what extent the American people will be exploited because of the immunity for the maintenance of the monopoly which is granted under the terms of the bill.

I regret that the laws against monopolies and monopolistic practices are not constituent features of the bill, so that the American people may be protected from unfair and extortionate prices for this essential commodity.

Mr. President, the coercive features of the bill are most objectionable to me. I am advised that perhaps 40 percent of the producers of coal are opposed to this bill, but yet it is so drawn that they will be coerced into coming within its provisions. The so-called taxing provision is to be employed to compel coal producers to submit to the terms of the bill. Their wishes are to be ignored and the power of the Federal Government, through the agencies created by the bill, is to be exerted to coerce them to accept its terms and to be controlled by the instrumentalities created by the same.

Clearly the purpose of this measure is to nationalize the coal industry and to subject the industry and those connected with the same to national regulations, which, in effect, bear a strong resemblance to the cartel system of Germany, or the regimentation which finds expression in the economic life of Italy. I think it is conceded by the proponents of this measure that the rights of individuals to control their own property are not only interfered with but are materially abridged. Undoubtedly there are many coal producers who are willing to submit to this abridgement of their rights, because of the increased profits which may be expected under the policies to be formulated and carried into execution by agencies, more or less bureaucratic, which will be created under the terms of the bill; but there are other coal operators, as I have indicated, who will look with deep concern, if not resentment, upon this measure, which subjects private property to governmental control and the owners of the same to more or less bureaucratic regimentation; and there are still others who will see in this measure a movement to subject other industries to governmental control, if not complete nationalization.

I wonder if this Republic is to abandon the democratic principles upon which it was founded and for the maintenance of which it was established? Socialization of industry is rampant in many countries, and the virus of socialism may infect our industrial and political life. Measures of this kind, many fear, are preludes to still more drastic measures, the results of which will be the ultimate overthrow of our industrial system, under which this Republic has increased in wealth and influence and attained material and moral leadership among all the nations of the world.

That this measure contains provisions that are violative of the Constitution of the United States many believe; that these provisions may be challenged in the courts cannot be predicted, but in my opinion its operations will bring many regrets and disappointments to millions of consumers and, indeed, to many who are looking for material rewards under its operations.

Mr. President, some of the policies now being pursued by the Government I regard with no little apprehension. I fear that we are erecting an economic and industrial system upon insecure bases. These policies are unduly increasing commodity prices and are tending to create artificial business and economic standards, which will disastrously affect our export trade. Changing the simile, it has been said that we are building our industrial life upon stilts, which, of course, tends to insecurity, and obviously interferes with our trade and commerce with other nations. There are signs that give warning against some of the policies which are being advocated and measures which are being put into effect.

Mr. President, aside from the measure before us, and speaking in general terms, this is no time for hazardous experiments, for wide departures from democratic institutions, and from constitutional government.

I regret that the bill under consideration contains provisions which I regard as unsound and violative of constitutional rights and possessed of inequalities and injustices which will prevent the realization of the hopes and expectations of some of its advocates.

Mr. President, during the discussion of the bill reference has been made to a statement made by Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in regard to sit-down strikes. The statement appears in the New York Times under date of March 28. I ask permission to have it printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

The sit-down strike has never been approved or supported by the American Federation of Labor. Because there is involved in its application grave implications detrimental to labor's interests, it must be disavowed by the thinking men and women of labor.

First, public opinion will not support sit-down strikes. That means labor loses public support when any part of it engages in sit-down strikes. Without such support organized labor cannot win strikes or establish and maintain itself as a vital force in the economic and industrial life of the Nation. Labor cannot afford to lose the support of public opinion.

ADVANTAGES ONLY TEMPORARY

Second, temporary advantages gained through sit-down strikes will enevitably lead to permanent injury. The public generally will not long tolerate the illegal seizure of property. If persisted in, it will, through State and Federal lawmaking bodies, force the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory arbitration, the incorporation of unions, and other repressive forms of legislation which will deprive organized labor of freedom of association and liberty of action within the limitations of both moral and statutory law. Such action would be a severe blow to labor.

Labor should refrain from engaging in sit-down strikes and maintain its freedom of action and association rather than experiment with it and as a result be subjected to oppressive legal regulation and compulsory arbitration. Labor, therefore, runs the risk of losing more than can be gained by engaging in sit-down strikes. It must be free to strike against injustice and oppression and for higher wages and better living standards. It must be permitted to picket when strikes occur. It may be greatly restricted and perhaps denied the exercise of these elemental rights if it persists in engaging in sit-down strikes.

PUBLIC WARNING TO LABOR

I therefore publicly warn labor against this illegal procedure. Both personally and officially I disavow the sit-down strike as a part of the economic and organization policy of the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the section in which is found the language which the Senator from Idaho seeks to strike out constitutes the code set out in this bill. Section 4 is the bituminous-coal code. It sets out somewhat in detail what the coal operators may do, subject to the approval and under the jurisdiction of the Commission to be appointed by the President under the bill. It invites them all to do these things in order that the bituminous-coal industry may be stabilized. Yet the Senator from Idaho, if his amendment is adopted, would leave Congress in the position of inviting all the coal operators to join the code, to go along with the Government in the effort to stabilize the industry, and leave them subject to prosecution under another law if they accepted the Government's invitation to join the code which is designed to stabilize the industry.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. If the operators should meet together and discuss prices and agree upon prices as this bill contemplates they should as a district board subject, of course, to the supervision of a commission, that would be right in the teeth of the Sherman Antitrust Act unless they were relieved from it by the provisions of this bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course it would be a technical violation of the antitrust law by the members of the board who are coal operators, but, under the terms of the bill, all of them are coal operators, and, with the approval of the commission, could agree on maximum and minimum prices within the area. The bill provides that the commission shall fix maximum and minimum prices for coal within all areas, and the coal boards are to administer the act and to administer the orders promulgated by the commission here in Washington.

From a technical standpoint it might be that the carrying out of those orders would be a violation of the antitrust law, and yet we have invited them to do it. Insofar as we can compel, we are almost commanding them to do it, and yet it is proposed to leave them subject to prosecution under the antitrust law. The result would be, if the amendment should be adopted, as the Senator from West Virginia has already pointed out, that none of the coal operators would feel justified in going into that sort of trap, because that is what it would be. It would put the Government of the United States in the position of setting a trap and putting a bait in it, the bait being the possibility of stabilization of the coal industry, but the minute they put their foot into the trap it would be caught by the antitrust law.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, instead of trying to regulate the industry by the application of the Sherman antitrust law, we have suspended the operation of the Sherman antitrust law under the terms of the bill, and in its place we have put regulation by commission.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have gone through the provisions of section 4 rather carefully. I believe it will be found to be no more than the granting of permission by the express provisions of the bill to do certain things which will never come within the Sherman antitrust law. What I fear is that, the Sherman antitrust law being set aside, there will be found outside the express provisions of the bill plenty of room to accomplish that which ought not to be permitted.

Mr. BARKLEY. If they go outside the provisions of the bill, they go outside of the provisions of section 4 of the bill, and only the things done under section 4 are left free from the antitrust law.

Mr. BORAH. There is nothing in section 4, so far as that is concerned, which would violate the Sherman antitrust law if the producers perform their duties under that section. Then there would be no occasion for exempting them from the Sherman antitrust law unless they go beyond that section.

Mr. BARKLEY. If they do go beyond it the bill does not exempt them.

Mr. BORAH. They have the sanction of a board below and the sanction of a board above as to what they have been doing. If they go into court charged with a violation of the Sherman antitrust law, they have the sanction of two boards approving what they have done. I want them to be responsible to the court and not to the commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, on page 14, line 14, it is proposed to strike out paragraph (d), as follows:

(d) No action complying with the provisions of this section taken while this act is in effect, by its terms, or within 60 days thereafter, by any code member or by any district board or officer thereof, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Dieterich	Lee	Pepper
Andrews	Duffy	Lewis	Pittman
Austin	Ellender	Lodge	Pope
Bachman	Frazier	Logan	Radcliffe

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it occurs to me that before a vote is taken on the amendment the language sought to be stricken out ought to be amended; but before I offer an amendment to that effect I want to ask the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] or the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], or some other member of the committee, something about the language. I cannot understand why some of it is inserted in the bill. The provision sought to be stricken out by the amendment is subsection (d), on page 14. It reads as follows:

No action complying with the provisions of this section taken while this act is in effect, by its terms, or within 60 days thereafter, by any code member or by any district board or officer thereof, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws of the United States.

What is the meaning of the words in lines 15 and 16, as follows:

By its terms, or within 60 days thereafter.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, that language simply means that the commission which is set up under the terms of the bill will have the right, within the price areas established, to fix minimum prices for coal. It is the intention and purpose of the bill to save them from prosecution under the Sherman antitrust law for doing what the bill provides they may do.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that is the intention of the entire subsection which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] seeks to strike out; but before we vote on that question I wish to inquire why it is necessary to say "by its terms, or within 60 days thereafter." Suppose they take some action 65 or 70 days thereafter, or at any time thereafter? Why is it necessary to say "by its terms"?

Mr. NEELY. I do not recall why that particular language was inserted in the section.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, added significance is given to the inquiry of the Senator from Nebraska by the fact that the words "by its terms" are included in the subparagraph as an amendment. It is clear what it means if we leave out the words "by its terms", because then it would read:

No action complying with the provisions of this section while this act is in effect or within 60 days thereafter—

And so forth.

Mr. NORRIS. If we leave in the words "or within 60 days thereafter", then the action would have to be taken within the first 60 days of the life of the act.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; that is perfectly clear.

Mr. NORRIS. Why is that?

Mr. ROBINSON. They are given 60 days after the act expires.

Mr. NORRIS. No; after it goes into effect.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; after it expires. The point I am making is that the language is perfectly plain and there is no room for misinterpretation if we leave out the words "by its terms"; but with those words in the paragraph I do not understand what it means.

Mr. NEELY. The reason for providing that the law should continue in this particular for 60 days after the act by its terms expired was to protect those who had made contracts under the law which could not be completed before the 60-day period had elapsed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the words "by its terms" were inserted as an amendment, probably in the wrong place. The meaning intended was that—

No action complying with the terms—

That is, with the provisions—of this section, in the terms of the section, shall, during its effect, or within 60 days thereafter—

And so forth.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the 60-day period, therefore, mean that this law will pass out of effect?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Then this action is going to be taken after that time?

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill provides that, unless reenacted, it shall expire of its own terms in 4 years. The 60-day period mentioned here would give the code members, district boards, or officers thereof, that much time after the 4 years in which they would not be subject to prosecution for carrying out the terms of this section.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield for a moment?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. NEELY. Since the Senator propounded his original inquiry I have conferred with Mr. Hosford, the Chairman of the National Bituminous Coal Commission, who was present when the amendments were adopted that are in italics in this paragraph. He reminds me, and I now recall, that those amendments were made upon the recommendation of the American Bar Association.

Mr. NORRIS. That is not very much in their favor. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEELY. I agree to that; but the subcommittee accepted them on the recommendation of the American Bar Association.

Mr. BARKLEY. Perhaps that is why they are so confusing.

Mr. NORRIS. And will result in litigation later on.

Mr. NEELY. The representative of the Bar Association made quite an argument as to why he thought the amendments should be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 14, beginning with line 14, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

(d) No action complying with the provisions of this section taken while this act is in effect, by its terms, or within 60 days thereafter, by any code member or by any district board, or officer thereof, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On this question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] are detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] are detained in a meeting of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained because of important public business.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] are detained in important committee meetings.

I wish further to announce a general pair between the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD].

Mr. NORRIS. I announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] because of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 53, as follows:

YEAS—27

So Mr. BORAH's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on the passage of the bill, I desire to ask a few questions with reference to it.

I call attention to page 16, the minimum-price-area table. I understand that when the bill was originally introduced area 2 was included in area 1. The bill as now before the Senate makes a separate area of the localities mentioned in area 2. Upon what principle or theory or yardstick were these areas designated in the bill?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, those who favor the legislation endeavored to group in a particular price area all operations whose production costs are approximately the same. With this principle in mind, west Kentucky, district 9; Illinois, district 10; Indiana, district 11; and Iowa, district 12, were all included with Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Michigan, and certain other areas set forth on page 16.

But it was demonstrated to the subcommittee, that the conditions in west Kentucky, district 9, and the other three districts I have mentioned, were sufficiently different from the conditions prevailing in West Virginia, eastern Kentucky, and Pennsylvania to justify the transfer of those districts from minimum price area no. 1.

Mr. WALSH. Was the question of whether or not the mine employees were organized into labor organizations a factor in determining the areas?

Mr. NEELY. That point was not raised, and it was given no consideration, because practically all the miners in the territory in question are organized.

Mr. WALSH. So these areas were determined largely upon a basis of geographical units?

Mr. NEELY. Yes; and the various factors which enter into the cost of production. I hope it will not offend the distinguished Senators from Illinois to say that the coal produced in their State is inferior, for many purposes, to the coal produced in east Kentucky and throughout West Virginia and Pennsylvania. The same thing may be said of the coal produced in Iowa, and of the coal produced in western Kentucky. Therefore, it was felt that it was equitable to separate the four districts mentioned in lines 24 and 25 from the other areas which produce coal that is more accessible and of better quality.

Mr. WALSH. Is it or not a fact that the segregating of these mining localities into units has some relationship to determining the price of the coal to the consumer?

Mr. NEELY. The segregation will have no appreciable effect on prices to consumers.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator does not think, then, that it would make any more difference in price to the consumer than it does now whether a particular locality gets its coal from area 1 or area 2?

Mr. NEELY. No; I do not think so, because the Comsion will equalize prices so far as practicable. Furthermore, the bill provides for the appointment of a consumers' counsel with almost unlimited power to protect the public.

Mr. WALSH. No attempt was made to put into a particular area those sections of the coal-mining industry which were unionized and segregate them from those not unionized?

Mr. NEELY. No such attempt was made or even considered.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to two other parts of the bill, first, on page 7, line 17, and the following lines, the reference to the civil-service status of employees in the employ of the counsel, and on page 3 the same provisions relating to the employees of the Commission.

The Civil Service Commission have by letter informed me that the civil-service provisions of the bill have been much modified from the requirements for the application of the merit system by the bill that was passed at the last session of the Congress and found unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. They state, in effect, that the civil-service provisions of the pending bill will result in applying the merit system merely to clerks and other inferior positions.

I note on page 3 that "with the exception of the secretary, a clerk to each commissioner, the attorneys, managers, and employees of the statistical bureaus hereinafter provided for, and such special agents, technical experts, and examiners as the Commission may require, all employees of the Commission" shall be exempt from civil service. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. NEELY. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. And practically the same provision applies to the employees of the counsel. I should like to inquire whether the matter of the application of the merit system was discussed by the committee, and if so, what are its views?

Mr. NEELY. It was discussed by the subcommittee and by the committee as a whole.

Mr. WALSH. I think the Senator will agree that there would be more opportunity for persons to be employed without the application of the merit system under the pending bill than under any other law relating to permanent organizations of the Federal Government. What is the reason for that?

Mr. NEELY. The Senator has mentioned some of those who are to be appointed, attorneys, for example. Lawyers who are competent to represent the Commission are as a rule employed; they will not come to Washington to pass a civil-service examination in order to secure Federal employment. The same is true of the accountants, and statisticians, and other technical employees needed to carry on the work of the statistical bureaus. Consequently, the committee decided that the exemptions contained in the bill are necessary.

Mr. WALSH. After talking with members of the committee and urging that this feature of the bill be given reconsideration, I have reached the conclusion that it would be useless to offer an amendment, in view of what has happened to the other amendments which have been offered in the Senate. However, I do want the RECORD to show that the Civil Service Commission, and other friends of the merit system, regret that this bill has practically abandoned the merit system so far as concerns the employees under the Commission being required to pass civil-service examinations and tests before appointment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the sit-down strike in this chamber has terminated, and the Senate is now about to vote on the Guffey coal bill—the most important measure that has come before the Senate during this session of the Congress. It is as necessary to the solvency of thousands of coal operators; to the regular employment of half a million coal miners; to a proper standard of living for 2,000,000 women and children, and to the general welfare of the Nation, as the blood of the heart is essential to the life of man.

This country's most valuable commodity is bituminous coal; but, like the air we constantly breathe, the water we daily drink, the beauty of nature we hourly behold, its very abundance robs it of even a momentary abiding place in our appreciation. Excepting only food and clothing, bituminous coal contributes more generously than any other article of commerce to the comfort, the convenience, and the happiness of the American people.

To enumerate all the uses and benefits of coal would necessitate a reference to almost every species of national, State, and local activity. If the coal production of the United States should be miraculously, completely, and permanently suspended, every railroad would be paralyzed; every great city would be shrouded in darkness; every steel mill would be shut down; every factory would be locked up; every furnace fire would go out; every wheel of industry would stand still; millions would become idle; millions would become hungry; millions would suffer from the cold; disaster would march and countermarch all over the land; country-wide stagnation would wield the scepter; country-wide confusion would wear the crown.

Bituminous coal supplies 50 percent of all the power consumed by this Nation; 75 percent of all the primary energy used by our public utilities and manufacturing establishments; more than 80 percent of all the energy used by American railroads. It is the source of a fourth of all railroad traffic and a fifth of all railroad revenue. It supplies the raw material for more than 200 byproducts and chemicals—the most of which are indispensable to twentieth century civilization.

But in spite of this giant industry's unlimited utility, it has for three decades suffered more of the "slings and arrows of outrageous fortune" than have ever afflicted any other great enterprise in a similar length of time. Its ruinous and relentless foes have assailed it from every point of the compass; not occasionally, but continuously; not as "single spies but in battalions." Most conspicuous among these foes are overdevelopment and overproduction. Both are detested architects of affliction and manufacturers of misfortune. They owe their existence to many factors.

The first of these is the wide distribution of coal lands and the irresistible desire of their owners to transmute their property into money. The gratification of this desire invariably results in immediate overproduction and finally in ruinous competition.

The second factor is heavy taxation of coal properties which impels their owners to work out their mines in the shortest possible time in order to avoid bankrupting tax burdens.

Another factor in overproduction is found in the extension of railroads into virgin coal fields in search of additional revenue-producing freight. Along these extensions new coal operations spring up as if by magic and greatly intensify the disastrous struggle for markets.

By reason of the long-continued operation of the foregoing factors and others too numerous to mention, the coal industry, which is of outstanding commercial importance in 26 States of the Union, has been handicapped and harassed and cursed by the most vicious trade practices the world has ever known.

As a result of unparalleled competition, coal deposits of incalculable value have been wasted by their owners, who were forced to exhaust their most readily and cheaply available sources of supply, regardless of consequences to the remainder of their property, in order to withstand the unremitting assaults of their desperate competitors.

Mining communities without number have become the habitations of misery; the vast business and professional population dependent upon the coal industry has been impoverished, while thousands of operators have been reduced to bankruptcy by irrational and destructive operating methods which the bill before the Senate aims to end once and for all.

Because of the fact that labor constitutes 60 percent of the total cost of the production of coal, and because it is practically the only cost factor that is flexible, the wage earners in the industry and those dependent upon them have uniformly been the first, the last, and the most helpless victims of the intense suffering caused by the savage competitive warfare which has raged for 30 years in every great coal field in the United States. Times without number the wages of the miners have been generally reduced to levels far below those required to supply the bare necessities of life. The destitution which miners and their families have endured defies exaggeration and surpasses the possibility of belief by those who have not been eyewitnesses to the heartbreaking tragedy of miners' wives wading in snow knee deep in zero weather with their feet wrapped in rags and newspapers because they had no shoes, and the equally hideous spectacle of little children eating from neighbors' garbage cans in order to keep their souls and their tortured bodies together.

In a serious endeavor to heal the cancerous diseases of the bituminous coal industry the Congress has, through regular committees or specially constituted commissions, conducted 21 hearings and investigations during the last 24 years. The proceedings of these committees and commissions are set forth in more than 20,000 printed pages of testimony, exhibits, reports, opinions and recommendations.

The National Recovery Act and the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1935 both afforded substantial relief to the industry; produced high degrees of stabilization and established ethical standards of operation hitherto unknown in this field of activity. But, as all present know, the miners, the operators, and the public were long since deprived of all the benefits of these acts by the Supreme Court, which declared them unconstitutional.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator referred to the decisions of the Supreme Court. That reminds me that a few years ago there was pending a bill similar to this, introduced by Representative LEWIS and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. A committee was appointed consisting of the Senator from Arizona, Mr. Hayden; the Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. Davis; and the Senator from West Virginia, Mr. Hatfield. The committee made the most exhaustive investigation that I have seen. It held hearings for a long time. The question was then raised as to the constitutionality of the legislation. The Committee on Mines and Mining referred the question to three members of the committee, the late Senator from Montana, Mr. Walsh; the Senator from Indiana, Mr. Robinson; and myself. We made a very exhaustive investigation of the law, and the last statement I ever heard the late Senator Walsh make was his report to the Committee on Mines and Mining in which he said that the subcommittee had concluded that if the Supreme Court adhered to its previous opinion then the proposed legislation was not constitutional. I now want to ask the Senator from West Virginia, whose judgment I regard very highly, if in his opinion this bill, on which we are about to vote in a few minutes, is constitutional under the decisions of the Supreme Court as heretofore made?

Mr. LEWIS rose.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if this bill is not constitutional there is no talent available to the United Mine Workers of America, to the coal operators, or to the Congress that can draft a coal bill that will survive a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. Every principle or provision of the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1935, which the Court condemned, has been excluded from the bill now before the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield first to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia has just answered that which I would have made answer to, so I defer to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, since the question has been raised I should be very grateful to the able Senator who is in charge of the bill if he will undertake to discuss to some extent the question of using the taxing power of the Government by way of penalty to bring about control of an industry. That is what is proposed in this bill. I should like to hear something on the constitutionality of that.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if the distinguished Senator from North Carolina had been present during the earlier days of the debate, he would have heard me read authority in point both from the decision of the Supreme Court and the dissenting opinion in the Carter case, which I believe would be more satisfactory to him than any original contribution that I could possibly make to the subject of controlling or regulating industry through the power to levy taxes or fix prices. Unfortunately, it is now too late in the day to repeat what was read and said to the Senate last week on these highly controversial questions. But I venture to remind the Senator that the committee's report discusses the point which he has raised.

Mr. President, for many weary years operators have sacrificed, miners have suffered, and the officials of the miners' unions have fought to preserve the bituminous-coal industry. It has been worth while to sacrifice and suffer and fight for this great industry in the past. It is worth while to legislate for it in the present. And be not deceived. Though "prophecies shall fail" and "tongues shall cease" and "knowledge shall vanish away", the bituminous-coal industry will still be in your midst; it will continue to tread the corridors of the Capitol with tired and aching feet; it will continue to haunt your committee rooms by day and by night; it will continue to knock with heavy hands upon the doors of your legislative halls until you enact a law under which the industry's innumerable perplexing problems can be properly and permanently solved.

The bill on which the Senate is about to vote represents the last desperate endeavor of those who seek to enlist the services of the Government in the momentous task of saving from annihilation our greatest natural resource, the assessed value of which is today greater than the wealth of entire Nation was known to be at the end of the Revolutionary War. This is the industry which for a generation has languished in the valley of the shadow of death. This is the industry that entreats you to save it and save it now.

Multitudes of impoverished human beings, who are vitally interested in the production and distribution of bituminous coal, are, at this hour, hopefully and confidently looking to the Senate for relief and protection as they would in time of storm look toward the shelter of a mighty rock in a weary land.

Senators, will you not respond to your names on the approaching roll call with sympathy in your hearts, compassion in your breasts, and in the spirit in which the Master said:

> Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate at any great length, but I have some matters in my mind in view of this proposed legislation which I should like to discuss.

The bill is, first of all, a sales-tax measure, a tax on sales. I do not know of any sort of tax that is more abhorrent to our people generally than a sales tax. It is described very frequently as a tax on consumption. It may be said that the tax is small, being one-half of 1 percent of the gross sales price of the coal. The principle, however, is just as bad, and, of course, if we set out to use the taxing power which the Congress has by way of taxing sales and consumption we commit ourselves to a principle that will go very far. That is one suggestion.

Another suggestion is that the second tax in the bill is called a tax but, of course, it is a penalty. I refer to the tax of 19½ percent on sales. That is a very great tax, but, after all, I will agree that it is not a tax, because if the producer or the seller of the coal complies with the terms of the law, and the rules and regulations that may be laid down for him by the commission and the code authorities, he gets his money back.

So, insofar as it is a tax at all, the 19½ percent is not a tax upon sales; it is a tax upon the doing or not doing of something; it is a penalty upon compliance or noncompliance. There is a point of departure in my mind. Is it competent in the first place, and would it be wise in the second, for the Congress of the United States to set out upon a policy of exercising the taxing power by way of imposing a penalty upon the noncompliance with laws which it may lay down or codes which may be created under its laws? I do not think it takes any great consideration to see how far that goes.

Here is a producer of coal; upon selling it the Government takes 19½ percent of the proceeds of the sale from him and holds it and says, "If you will do what I say to do under the law, then, I will give you back 19½ percent." That is not a tax; that is extortion; the Government extorts from him compliance.

Now, let us go back to the taxing clause of the Constitution under which the Congress operates. There is nothing in that clause which gives such power to Congress. The Constitution says that—

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

Wherein do we get the conception that Congress has the power to use that taxing power to enforce compliance with a cartel system, with a scheme of things laid out by the Government? I do not see that it has such power.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. How does the Senator account for the fact that discriminations of the very kind he has described have existed from the very beginning of the Government? In the original revenue act, written by Alexander Hamilton, there was a provision that tariffs should be levied upon imports, but that if, in compliance with the law, the article imported were improved by manufacture and then reexported, the tariff would be rebated 99 percent. If the law were not complied with, the rebating provision would not take effect.

In the first Congress assembled after the Constitution was written there was enacted a provision granting a discrimination in the case of imports depending upon whether or not the goods were brought in in American ships. Again that was a discrimination.

It seems to me that, while the Senator is pointing out something that is very obvious in this bill, it is nothing new; we have had it; and many instances can be cited from the beginning of the Government to date where the same thing has been done.

Mr. BAILEY. I think there is a distinction to be drawn between the legislation which the very distinguished Senator from Arizona describes and the pending proposed legislation. The legislation in the early history of the Government to which the Senator has referred was by way of inducement to export after a manufacturing process had taken place, if I understand correctly.

Mr. HAYDEN. Nevertheless, the only way the rebates could be secured was by compliance with the directions laid down by the Congress.

Mr. BAILEY. But that was on the ground that the goods exported were not subject to the tariff because they were brought here wholly for the purposes of treatment; they were not in competition with American goods. I am speaking from memory, but, taking the Senator's own statement of facts, I think there is a very broad distinction to be made.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. I supplement the Senator's statement by saying it was with the expectation that it would furnish employment to a number of people in the United States by taking the raw material and converting it into finished products for exportation.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes. I go back to my point that here is an exercise of the taxing power, not with a view to revenue. The decisions of the courts say the taxing power must be used for the purpose of supporting the Government. Here is an exercise of the taxing power not to get taxes at all, not to get a dollar, but to enforce compliance with respect to labor and with respect to prices. Do I have to make that any more plain to Senators? Do I have to elaborate upon that point? What is there in section 8 of article I—the tax clause of the Constitution—upon which anyone can found that theory of the use of the taxing power?

In the opinion of the Court in the Carter Coal case, or in the opinion of the Chief Justice partly concurring and partly dissenting, or in the dissenting opinion of the other three Justices written by Mr. Cardozo, the other two being Mr. Justice Stone and Mr. Justice Brandeis, no Senator will find any justification for the proposition that we can employ the taxing power by way of a penalty to bring about labor conditions or to fix prices.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. MINTON. Is it not the Senator's understanding that if we are exercising a power admitted to be within the scope of the Federal authority, that to enforce regulations set up within that authority we may use the taxing power?

Mr. BAILEY. Provided the objective is constitutional. It must be within the Constitution.

Mr. MINTON. Of course. In this case we presuppose our right to regulate the coal industry in interstate commerce.

Mr. BAILEY. We come immediately there to the difficulty which I am endeavoring to point out, and we run directly into the Butler case, called the Hoosac Mills case. I agree the dissenting opinion in that case appeared to take the view, but really did not take the view, that the welfare clause in the taxing article could be read with a view to compulsion. But read the case, and it will be found that the dissenting opinion by Mr. Justice Stone reached its departure from the principal opinion on just the difference between the theory of compulsion, which Mr. Justice Roberts took, and the voluntary theory, which Mr. Justice Stone took. Mr. Justice Stone said that the taxes and the benefit payments were not compulsory, but were conditional gifts. That is the point on which the case turned.

Mr. MINTON. Does not the Senator believe if we admit we have the right to control the price of coal in interstate commerce that then, in order to enforce the regulations necessary to carry out that law, we may use the taxing power to do so?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not think so.

Mr. MINTON. Does not the Senator think that would be true under the doctrine laid down by the Supreme Court in the Bank Note case——

Mr. BAILEY. The Veazey case?

Mr. MINTON. Yes. The Federal power existed to set up banks and regulate the currency of the country. The Congress taxed the State bank notes out of existence. They used the taxing power to enforce regulations which were set up under the banking power of the Federal Government.

Mr. BAILEY. That was a case in which the tax was made very high. I read the case just this morning. I have no difficulty about that. The question there was the power of Congress to exercise its taxing power to the limit. The Court said that could be done. That is a question between the Congress and the people. The question here is the power of the Congress to exercise its taxing power by way of imposing a penalty upon the doing or not doing of something with respect to the conditions of labor in the mines or the prices in the markets. That is quite different.

Mr. MINTON. Was it not true that in the Bank Note case the Federal Government was exercising its power over currency and its banking powers under the Federal Constitution, and that ancillary to those powers and to enforce its regulations it laid a tax which taxed the bank notes out of existence? Obviously it could not have laid the tax if it did not have the power to regulate the subject of banking, because it could not use the taxing power otherwise; but if we once admit the Federal Government has the power to go into the field of regulation in any business, then if we use the taxing power to enforce the regulation the Congress is acting within its power.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not saying that Congress has not the power to levy a prohibitory tax. I am not saying there are any limitations upon the extent of the power of Congress to tax. It can make the rate on one's income 2 percent or 100 percent, provided it comes within the fifth and sixteenth amendments. I am raising the question of the power of Congress to exercise its specific taxing power, not to tax, not to raise revenue, not to support the Government, not to provide for the national defense or the general welfare, but to fix prices and to determine the conditions of labor in the mines. That is the question.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. I suggest that in the Veazey Bank Note case it was the declared purpose of the act to eliminate all bank notes. As a matter of fact, under the act no tax was ever collected. It was simply used to wipe out those bank notes which were in circulation.

Mr. BAILEY. Undoubtedly; and as I said in response to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], the Court frequently, in discussing the Veazey Bank Note case, has undertaken always to reconcile its position on the ground that the question there was not as to the purpose of the tax but as to the extent of the power of Congress to tax.

I think I should refer Senators to the Child Labor Tax case—Drexel against Bailey. In that case is a review of a great many tax cases.

I simply submit these considerations to Senators. I am raising the question in my own mind. The question is on our threshold here. If we use the taxing power by way of imposing a penalty, as the bill provides, with a view to accomplishing a social or an industrial purpose or fixing prices in the domain of coal, then the next step will be to take it up in the steel industry.

The Senator from West Virginia said rather eloquently that coal had a great deal to do with steel. So it does. If we lift the price of coal in the steel industry, we shall have the steel people under this open competition, and the workers in steel will go the same way that the Senator says the coal miners have gone; and they will go all the faster because here is an increase in the very base—that is, the cost of the coal. If we go into steel, we shall go into textiles. If we go into textiles, we shall go into furniture. This bill provides that there shall be some analogy and some consideration of the difference between the cost of producing energy by way of coal and the cost of producing it by way of water in the form of electricity. We shall have to go into the electric utilities.

So we are dealing, Mr. President, not merely with the situation in the coal fields. We are dealing here with a tremendous national policy. When we pass this bill, as we are surely going to do, it will not be long before we shall see the series coming on; and we might as well put them all in one bill and be done with it.

We propose to nationalize coal. We really mean we propose to nationalize labor. We really mean we propose to nationalize capital. We really mean we propose to nationalize industry; and I take it that if we go that far, we shall have to go the remainder of the way and nationalize agriculture. Why not? We cannot leave any considerable group of our people outside of the scheme of things. We cannot lift the prices of the things the farmer buys unless we agree also to lift the prices of the things the farmer sells. We create an artificial system for the coal-mine operator, and this bill provides that he shall have a profit. The coal-mine operators are not quarreling with us, as I understand. They like the bill. We provide the operator with a profit, and then we provide his worker with a profit. We lift the price. Then we are going to have to lift the price all the way through. We cannot give one group of Americans the benefit of an artificial situation without going all the rest of the way and giving it to them all.

That is all I have to say about the matter. I shall vote against the bill. I am unwilling to commit myself to that policy. It may be necessary, but I do not think so. Conditions in the coal fields may be very dreadful. If so, I deplore that fact; but I will stand for a great deal before I will make a national socialism of the American Republic.

I am not going to have to explain down in North Carolina my vote today against the sit-down strike. All I shall have to do is to say, "I voted against it." It will speak for itself. There will be no explanations. There will be no apologies. I am not going to have to explain my vote against this bill, either. If anybody raises a question with me about it, I shall say, "All right; you will find the explanation of my vote in the bill you pay for your coal the next time you buy it." That will be all I shall have to say; but we are going to have another explanation, I think, before the Congress adjourns. The whole American people are going to see that this is just the camel's nose under the tent. Behind the camel will come a great menagerie of similar bills; and, if I should vote for one, I should feel that I had to vote for the others. If I commit myself to this scheme of things, I must go all the way. If a sack of coal is affected with a national interest and is a natural resource, very well, so is land. So is iron. So is ore. So is water. We cannot draw the line there. We cannot make a distinction there.

Mr. President, that is all I have to say about the matter. I rose mainly to explain my view, to state my position, and simply to say that I am unwilling to commit myself to a policy the end of which no man here can possibly foresee.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BAILEY, Mr. McNARY, and other Senators called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when Mr. CAPPER's name was called). The senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] is absent on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. COPELAND (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. If he were present, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. BULKLEY (when Mr. DONAHEY's name was called). I understand that my colleague the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] has a pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] on this vote. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. GIBSON (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE's name was called). The senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. If the Senator from Wisconsin were present and voting, he would vote "yea" on the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY (when Mr. LOGAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. LOGAN] is unavoidably absent on official business. He has a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. If my colleague were present and voting, he would vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea." If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. VANDENBERG (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], who is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] and the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] are detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained on important public business.

The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] are detained on departmental matters.

I further announce the general pair between the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD].

I also am requested to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is absent serving on the Committee on the Judiciary, thus accounting for his inability to be present and vote on the bill.

Mr. KING (after having voted in the negative). On this vote I had promised to pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who is necessarily absent from the city. Unfortunately, I am unable to obtain a transfer, and therefore am compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. McADOO (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and not knowing how he would vote, I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 58, nays 15, as follows:

YEAS—58

So the bill (H. R. 4985) to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes, was passed.

PERMANENT ESTABLISHMENT OF CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS (H. DOC. NO. 196)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

On March 21, 1933, I addressed a message to the Congress in which I stated:

> I propose to create a civilian conservation corps to be used in simple work, not interfering with normal employment, and confining itself to forestry, the prevention of soil erosion, flood control, and similar projects. I call your attention to the fact that this type of work is of definite, practical value, not only through the prevention of great present financial loss, but also as a means of creating future national wealth.

The prompt consideration given to this message by Congress resulted in the enactment, on March 31, 1933, of Public, No. 5, to provide for the relief of unemployment through the performance of useful public work; and on April 5, 1933, by Executive order, I set up the Office of Emergency Conservation Work to carry the above act into effect.

It is not necessary to go into detail regarding the accomplishments of the corps. You are acquainted with the physical improvements that have taken place in our forests and parks as a result of the activities of the corps and with the wealth that is being added to our natural resources for the benefit of future generations. More important than the material gain, however, is the improvement we find in the moral and physical well-being of our citizens who have been enrolled in the corps and of their families who have been assisted by monthly allotments of pay.

The functions of the corps expire under authority of present law on June 30, 1937.

In my Budget message to Congress on January 5 of this year I indicated that the corps should be continued, and recommended that legislation be enacted during the present session to establish the corps as a permanent agency of the Government. Such continuance or establishment is desirable, notwithstanding the great strides that have been made toward national recovery, as there is still need for providing useful and healthful employment for a large number of our youthful citizens.

I am convinced that there is ample useful work in the protection, restoration, and development of our national resources upon which the services of the corps may be employed advantageously for an extended future period. It should be noted that this program will not in any respect reduce normal employment opportunities for our adult workers; in fact, the purchase of simple materials, of food and clothing, and of other supplies required for the operations of the corps tends to increase employment in industry.

I recommend, therefore, that provision be made for a permanent corps of 300,000 youths (and war veterans), together with 10,000 Indians and 5,000 enrollees in our Territories and insular possessions. It would appear, after a careful study of available information, that, with improved business conditions, these numbers represent the maximum expected enrollment. To go beyond this number at this time would open new and difficult classifications of enrollment, and the additional cost would seriously affect the financial position of the Treasury.

I trust that the Congress will deem it wise to enact legislation making permanent the Civilian Conservation Corps.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 5, 1937.

BOOKER T. WASHINGTON

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, today is the eighty-second anniversary of the birth of Booker T. Washington, one of the greatest educators the world has ever known. His life is a monument of service. With untiring efforts he carved out a bright destiny for his race by the foundation of the trail-blazing vocational center, Tuskegee Institute, and by his widespread interests on their behalf.

He spent his life in service to the people of both his race and my race. He realized that open manifestations of race prejudice merely serve to keep it ablaze, and he subtly sought to develop a wholesome understanding between the white and the colored people. No Negro ever lived who has been more respected and admired. He was a welcome guest at public ceremonies, both above and below the Mason and Dixon's line. He was in constant demand as a speaker, and his popularity commanded immense audiences.

Mr. President, Booker T. Washington had a tremendous capacity for accomplishment. He organized the National Negro Business League, broadened the educational opportunities of his people, improved their housing, aided many of his fellow men individually, and carried on a wide variety of other interests, including conservation of Negro health, while at the same time he was running a large institution whose annual budget exceeded $250,000.

We cannot truly say Booker T. Washington is dead. At Tuskegee Institute his ideals and principles live on. The number of educational centers patterned after this standard is steadily growing. His deep religious spirit has fired the imagination of America. He who brought so much of good to America, whose works live on in the hearts and minds of all people, can never be truly dead. The foundations he has laid will stand throughout the years as firmly as they stand today.

EXCHANGE OF INDIAN LANDS IN CALIFORNIA

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 5299, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange certain lands and water rights in Inyo and Mono Counties, Calif., with the city of Los Angeles, and for other purposes. It affects the water supply of the city of Los Angeles.

This measure merely authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to exchange certain land belonging to the Indians who are located in the water basin there with the city of Los Angeles for more desirable land, where the Indians can obtain better irrigation and make themselves self-supporting to a greater degree. There is no objection to the bill from any official source. It is approved by the Secretary of the Interior. It is a very important measure for the preservation of the purity of the water supply of Los Angeles.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether those having charge of the Indians upon the reservation in the territory involved, as well as those in Washington who have the Indians' interests at heart, approve of the bill?

Mr. McADOO. The Secretary of the Interior has approved it, and I assume it is satisfactory to the Indians. I think there is every reason in the world why it should be satisfactory to the Indians, because they are taken away from semiarid lands and transferred to lands which the city owns, and which would be irrigated. Therefore they would get better lands and would have a better opportunity to support themselves than they now have. The exchange is in every respect advantageous to the Indians, and will protect the purity of our water supply.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 5299) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange certain lands and water rights in Inyo and Mono Counties, Calif., with the city of Los Angeles, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to accept title on behalf of the United States to lands and water rights now owned and held by the city of Los Angeles in the counties of Inyo and Mono, State of California, if, in his judgment, the interests of the Indians in said counties will be benefited thereby; and in consideration therefor the said Secretary may issue a patent or patents to the said city of Los Angeles for lands, water rights, and buildings now held by the United States for the benefit of the Indians, provided that the lands, water rights, and buildings covered by the patent or patents shall not exceed in value the lands and water rights conveyed by the said city of Los Angeles to the United States: Provided, That the said Secretary may reserve the minerals of the lands conveyed to the said city and the said Secretary is authorized to accept conveyance by the said city of the lands and water rights, subject to a similar reservation in the city of the minerals of such lands, and in determining the relative value of the lands and water rights to be exchanged, consideration shall be given to any reservation made by either or both parties of any minerals or easements in the lands that may be exchanged.

SEC. 2. No allotted or other lands covered by trust patent or other instrument containing restriction against alienation by the allottee shall be involved in any such exchange except with the consent of the allottees or their heirs. Any such allottees or their heirs are hereby authorized to relinquish to the United States any lands covered by such patents or other instruments and accept in lieu thereof assignments of land within the new Indian reservations which are hereby authorized to be established by the Secretary of the Interior out of any lands accepted by him pursuant to section 1 hereof: Provided, That any such Indian may receive an area of equal value to the area of the allotment relinquished by him and receive similar title to that relinquished should any of the lands accepted by the said Secretary be outside of the boundaries of the new reservations.

SEC. 3. No tribal lands shall be involved in any such exchange except with the consent of a majority of the adult Indians entitled to the use thereof. All lands acquired pursuant to this Act, other than land to which title may be held by or in trust for individual Indians, shall be held by the United States in trust for the Indian tribe, band, or group concerned.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF UNOBJECTED BILLS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, following an executive session, it is my intention to move an adjournment until Wednesday next at noon.

I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, after the morning business shall have been concluded, the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations and an international convention, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers and citizens for appointment in the Navy.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported favorably the nomination of Carl Watson, of Ohio, to be State administrator for Ohio in the Works Progress Administration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Clifford Ross Powell to be brigadier general, National Guard of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Maj. Elmer Forrest Wallender for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army, to the Quartermaster Corps.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Second Lt. Charles Burton Winkle for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army, to the Air Corps.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the Executive Calendar.

ADJOURNMENT TO WEDNESDAY

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Wednesday, April 7, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, APRIL 5, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Homer E. Wark, Ph. D., pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Clarksburg, W. Va., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Father, Thou who art the light of all our seeing and without whose light we see nothing clearly, be Thou our light this day as we go about the tasks given to us.

In the faith of our fathers who laid the foundations of our Nation we seek Thy divine favor. Enveloped in confusion and dread uncertainty, they looked to Thee and were lightened. Give unto thy servants, the Members of this House, grace to bear the heavy obligations of this day, and undergird them with wisdom and strength. Endow them with vision and patience. Make them competent for their age.

Grant, O Lord, that in the midst of vast confusion we may find the consciousness of God. In that experience of God may we find wisdom for the performance of duties we are sworn to execute. Give unto us to see the dawning of an era of peace and justice. Make us unafraid in a world of many uprisings and undismayed by the tumults of the peoples.

We thank Thee for all who work for a warless world. May the crusade against war receive new impetus on this anniversary of our Nation's entrance into the fratricidal struggle of the recent World War. May the lessons of that war be not lost upon us who participated, nor upon the new generation. Beget in the heart of our people a stronger abhorrence of war and a deeper devotion to peace. Give Thy blessing to all who toil to lay the foundations of lasting peace.

In a world drunken with self-seeking may our people learn to be generous. May we entertain no dreams of conquest. Give us to know that real greatness in a nation is not a matter of far-flung frontiers but of a true spirit of fraternity, a keen sense of right and wrong, a growing intelligence in the use of material goods, and growth of moral character and neighborly services to others. May the strong nations cease to devastate the weak. May they have grace to share with others, and so establish trust and confidence among all peoples. Break up the evil machinations of dictators and bring to naught the plans of those who would drench the world in blood. "May the tumult and the shouting die; the captains and the kings depart; still stands Thine ancient sacrifice; an humble and a contrite heart." "Lord God of hosts, be with us yet, lest we forget, lest we forget." Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, April 2, 1937, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, after the address of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE], I be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Tomorrow the Private Calendar is to be called. There are approximately 100 bills on the calendar. Already there have been several requests for time to speak tomorrow, and I think there should be no more granted until after the calling of the calendar; and I therefore ask the gentleman from Indiana to modify his request so that the calendar may be called prior to his address.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I understood it was a short calendar, and that is the reason I preferred the request; but, on the gentleman's suggestion, I modify the request and ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of business on the Private Calendar I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana modifies his request and asks unanimous consent that after the disposition of prior orders and the Private Calendar he be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert therein a speech I delivered yesterday at Camp Headquarters 74, Criglersville, Va., celebrating the fourth anniversary of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a very good speech I made over the radio Friday evening on the President's Court proposal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a very good speech he delivered over the radio Friday evening. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to recommit the bill (H. R. 5295) to reserve certain public domain lands for the use and benefit of the Chippewa, Cree, and other Indians of Montana to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 5295 be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. What is the bill?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. This is an Indian bill which the Committee on Indian Affairs reported. It affects Indians in California. We have a member on the committee who comes from California and because of receiving additional information he asks that the bill be recommitted to the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on April 13, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] may have 15 minutes in which to discuss the life of Thomas Jefferson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is already a special order.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request for the present.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] for 30 minutes.

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, no greater honor has ever come to me than this privilege which I now enjoy, standing as I am before this great body of lawmakers in an humble effort to honor the name and memory of that great American, Booker T. Washington. I had the privilege and rare honor of knowing him personally and intimately. He was my teacher, my benefactor, and my ideal of real manhood and Christian citizenship. At the outset I desire to warmly thank our able and beloved Speaker, the majority leader, and every Member of this House for giving me this opportunity to deliver a eulogy on the life of that great teacher, patriot, statesman, and matchless leader of men.

I regard this as a most unusual occasion fraught with good will and recognition of an humble people who have for three centuries borne their burdens in making America the great country it is, but who have in a large measure been neglected by this country when honors were to be distributed. For a century and a half this Nation, through its Congressmen, has paid special honor to its white illustrious sons who gave largely of their lives and abilities to the building and maintenance of the Nation. Such great Virginians as George Washington, Patrick Henry, Thomas Jefferson, Madison, Marshall, Randolph, Lee, and many others whose names are household words with school children, have been eulogized from this Well time and again; but today we are doing honor to a great colored American. Like those whose names I have just called, he, too, was born in Virginia.

George Washington fitly bears the name of Father of his Country. Booker Washington might as fitly bear the name of Father of his Race in America. Take from American history the part played in its making by the patriots and statesmen who were born in the State of Virginia and you take from the Nation its brightest lights and most outstanding guideposts. Take from the history of this country the part played in its making by Booker T. Washington and you leave a blank which not only greatly impoverishes American history but you rob a deserving race of the largest single contribution it has made to those great leaders whose names adorn the walls of the world's hall of fame.

Be it known here and now that the 15,000,000 Negroes whose lives were touched and lifted by Booker Washington's life have already taken fresh courage because of the recognition this body is showing our late leader. I know if Booker Washington's voice could be heard in this Chamber today his solemn request would be in favor of a simple eulogy bereft of all oratorical effort and high-sounding phraseology, in keeping with the simple life he lived. I shall therefore speak only briefly of the birth and early struggles of this great man and pass to the activities of his life after he reached manhood.

He was born at Haleford, Va., April 5, 1856, of a slave mother, and spent his first 7 or 8 years working as a slave on the Virginia plantation where he was born. He knew nothing of his father save that he was a white overseer on one of the adjoining slave plantations. His mother he speaks of in the tenderest and most endearing terms as a Christian mother, deeply devoted to her children and constantly praying to God for the deliverance of her children from slavery.

After the emancipation was effective at the close of the Civil War, he went with his mother, an older brother, and a sister to live with his stepfather in Malden, W. Va. The trip was made partly by wagon team and partly on foot. Many hardships and great hunger attended the little group as it made its way through the hills and mountains of Virginia and later through West Virginia. Mr. Washington tells a story of how, after having traveled across the country for several days and sleeping out in the open they eventually came to an abandoned house, and there they happily sought to spend a night under shelter, but soon after kindling a fire a large snake crawled out from under the floor and frightened the little group away, so that the comfort which they thought they had found was changed into the worst type of discomfort and deathly fear.

After several days of most uncomfortable travel, hunger, and hardship the family arrived at Malden, W. Va., with no money, and cast their lot among strangers, where they began the struggle for bread and for existence. Booker worked wherever he could find employment, often receiving nothing more than sufficient food with which to keep body and soul together. Even then he showed adaptability and promise beyond that shown by other youngsters many years his senior. After doing odd jobs about the community for several months, he secured a place with a white family as general house and yard servant. He showed such interest in his work and proved to be so trustworthy and honest that the white lady for whom he worked took special interest in him. Through her interest he soon learned to read and write. Through the kind treatment and care he received at the hands of these new friends, he grew strong and healthy and soon developed into a large boy, able to take work in the salt mines in and around Malden.

He had gotten a taste of education, and was then burning up of a desire to receive more training so that he might help other boys and girls of the newly emancipated race by teaching them. He heard of Hampton Institute, and with only a few pennies in his pocket set out to find Hampton and to secure an education. On this trip he traveled among strangers, stopping on the way and working a few days in order to secure food and shelter. When he reached Richmond he secured a job helping unload ships; slept under the abutment of a bridge; saved his little money from the small wages he received, and finally completed his journey to Hampton.

When he presented himself to the registrar of the school for admittance there was grave doubt in the mind of that official as to whether or not this green country lad, uncouth and unsightly because of his long trip and lack of care on that trip, was worthy of the facilities of Hampton Institute. Booker Washington had no money and was in poor plight for acceptance, but the lady to whom he had applied for admittance decided to give him some sort of test. He was given a broom and dust cloth and told to clean a classroom. I have heard him tell the story time and again, emphasizing how he swept the room several times and dusted it as many times, even getting down upon his knees, carefully sweeping and dusting underneath every piece of furniture. After the job had been completed the lady inspected the room, passing a clean white linen handkerchief over the woodwork of the room and over the furniture. When she saw that the job had been done thorough and well, she said to the young lad: "I think you will do." Thus he had passed the examination and by carefully cleaning a classroom had matriculated for college.

His school days at Hampton were crowded with work not only in mastering his own studies but also in teaching and helping colored and Indian students with their studies and work. He graduated with honor and at once engaged in teaching in the country schools of West Virginia. He had done such fine work at Hampton that the attention of Hampton's president and founder, Gen. Samuel Chapman Armstrong, and all the teachers of the school had been attracted to him and his work was being watched with great care.

After teaching in the rural schools and doing graduate work for 6 years, the call came to Hampton for a teacher to organize a school at Tuskegee, Ala. In July 1881 Booker Washington, recommended by General Armstrong, reported to the trustees at Tuskegee and began the work to organize and build what is now the largest and most successful institution of its kind to be found in any part of the world. His work at Tuskegee and in the southland gave him the opportunity to render the service most needed in the South and for which he was perhaps better fitted to render than any man in the world.

The conditions that confronted him in 1881 to some men would have seemed discouraging, to him it was an opportunity to render service. At that time the wounds caused by the Civil War were still unhealed. The breach between the sections of the country had not been bridged; the bitterness engendered by the Civil War struggle was evident on every hand. The newly emancipated slave was experiencing the greatest difficulty in trying to adjust himself to his new environment where economic chaos and political strife were aggravating the conditions, and in many instances preventing, if not making impossible, the cool and deliberate consideration of a fair and just settlement of the intricate problems of this section of the country; which problems were before the people daily.

It was for Mr. Washington to do more than any other single individual to bring peace and happiness out of chaos and confusion. At that time the southern white man was fearful and distrustful of the newly emancipated Negro. In many instances even to opposing the Negro in his effort to seek education. This fear and distrust had been greatly heightened and increased by a certain type of political leadership furnished in many instances by men of designing purposes. Booker Washington's appearance on the scene from the very beginning not only promised but proved to be the great stabilizing influence so much needed to start the South on a safe and prosperous journey. He loved the South as only a few men could. Listen to his words spoken in his early career while delivering a speech to a great white audience in one of the Southern States. I quote:

> In saying what I have today, although a Negro and an ex-slave myself, there is no white man whose heart is more wrapped up in every interest of the South and loves it more dearly than is true of myself. She can have no sorrow that I do not share; she can have no prosperity that I do not rejoice in. She can commit no error that I do not deplore. She can take no step forward that I do not approve.
> Different in race, in color, in history, we can teach the world that, although thus differing, it is possible for us to dwell side by side in love, in peace, in material prosperity.

The interest of his race was always upon his heart. In this same speech he made this significant reference, which shows the deep feeling that he had for the people of his race, struggling as they were to find their place in this civilization. I quote:

> In all discussion and legislation bearing upon the presence of the Negro in America it should be borne in mind that we are dealing with a people who were forced to come here without their consent and in the face of a most earnest protest. This gives the Negro a claim upon your sympathy and generosity that no other race can possess. Besides, though forced from his native land into residence of a country that was not of his choosing, he has earned his right to the title of American citizen by obedience to the law, by patriotism and fidelity, and by the millions which his brawny arms and willing hands have added to the wealth of this country.

His courage, like his patience and kindliness of heart, knew no limitations. There was an occasion that arose early in the twentieth century that severely tested his courage to face physical danger, which courage had been shown upon a thousand occasions before. This was a climax. Mr. Washington was in the North seeking funds with which to carry on his work at Tuskegee. He had several important speaking engagements which meant thousands of dollars in contributions much needed in his work. Through newspaper reports he heard of a serious race riot in progress in Atlanta, Ga. He had a consultation with friends in New York and expressed a wish that he could be present and render some service in stopping the bloodshed and settling the difficulty. His friends, white and colored, strongly protested and told him of the grave danger of his entering Atlanta when the passions of the people were so inflamed and race hatred was being fanned into what at that time appeared to be an unquenchable fire. Mr. Washington, without further ado or expression, quietly slipped away, and when next heard from by his friends he was holding conferances with leading citizens in Atlanta, and was perhaps the dominating spirit through which peace and safety were again restored. There were race leaders, some of them in Atlanta, who in many speeches had declared themselves great champions of the rights and protection of the Negro, but while they were hiding in fear and rushing from Atlanta in secret, Booker Washington, the great and fearless leader that he was, was making peace, as was his custom; and who better than he could do this? A man who had in his heart no bitterness for any man; and if ever an American built his house by the side of the road and sought to be a friend to all mankind, it was Booker Washington.

Time and again he said to audiences that there is no man in the world can make me give up the principles of righteousness and brotherly love and substitute therefor the spirit of prejudice and hatred. Listen to his admonition to southern white people in sections where they were inclined to be unfair to members of his race. I quote:

> No man can keep another man down in the ditch without staying in the ditch with him. No race can keep another race down without remaining in the ditch with it.
> "The law of changeless justice binds
> The oppressor with the oppressed
> And as close as sin and suffering joined,
> They march to fate abreast."

As an orator he had few equals. His expression of thought was not only clear and simple but convincing and complete. His very facial expressions, every movement of his body was eloquent and served to drive home to his audience the thought emanating from his very soul. No person has ever put greater stress upon the importance of character and the necessity of a trained mind. Many times I have heard him quote these lines:

> Were I so tall to reach the pole,
> Or grasp the ocean with my span,
> I must be measured by my soul:
> The mind's the standard of the man.

With all of his seriousness, he was perhaps a greater story teller than Lincoln. Seldom would he advance a serious thought but what he could tell a humorous story to drive the thought home. I recall this story which he told on many occasions while encouraging the Negro to be thrifty and accumulate property and money. It was his theory that this would assist in securing for the Negro the respect and confidence and help of the white people. This is the story:

He once saw a colored and white man in a canoe fishing in the Alabama River. In some way the colored man lost his balance and fell into the river. Being a poor swimmer, he was in grave danger of drowning. The white man looked on for a moment and then plunged into the angry stream, seized the drowning colored man, and swam ashore with him in safety, when onlookers said to the white man, "You certainly must love this colored man to risk your life for him as you did." The rejoinder was: "I do not love him at all, but he had the bait in his pocket and we came out for a day's fishing."

In addressing southern white people he had a unique way of telling them of their faults without incurring their enmity or ill will. For instance, I heard him say on one occasion while speaking in a community where there had been much lawlessness and lynching, and where there was a scarcity of labor on the farms. I quote:

I have investigated the shortage of labor in this county and in other counties where Negroes are depended upon to work the farm lands. In every case where there is a shortage I find that Negroes have left the farms because they feel that their lives are in jeopardy. You white men must understand that you cannot lynch the Negro all the winter and work him all the summer.

As a leader he was true, intelligent, courageous but patient, long suffering, and tolerant. He believed in performance. Often I heard him say that there is no excuse in the world that will take the place of the performance of a task. Upon one occasion when our football team returned to Tuskegee from a tour of several States, where many games had been engaged in and lost by our team, we assembled in the chapel and Mr. Washington's foster brother, the manager of the team, spent almost an hour in explaining to the faculty and student body why the team had not won its games. The excuses offered were plausible, but Mr. Washington arose and in addressing the body said that no excuse in the world could take the place of performance, and that he who is good at making excuses is seldom good at anything else. He further said that the world will soon forget the excuses that are offered instead of performance, but it can never forget the score on the scoreboard. His efficient life was an example to all, but his words and his teachings were just as striking. He believed and taught that efficiency consists in a person doing the right thing in the right way at the right time without having anyone to tell him.

Many historians have said that his largest single contribution was the building of Tuskegee Institute and have attempted to tell the story of his achievements, setting forth the growth of the school from a log cabin and three students with no money, to a great university with more than 150 buildings, 2,000 students, 175 teachers, and an endowment of $8,000,000; but this is only a small part of his achievement.

Everywhere you hear the graduates and students of Tuskegee speaking of the spirit of Tuskegee. This is only their manner of speaking of that helpful and never-dying spirit of Booker Washington, which has not only entered but dominated every one of the more than 5,000 graduates and 30,000 students who have attended Tuskegee Institute; not only these, but the several million people—white and colored—throughout this Nation, all of whom knew and loved to worship at the shrine of this great leader.

It is said that up to the death of Mr. Washington only one graduate of Tuskegee had ever been convicted in the courts of our country and served a jail sentence. Anson Phelps Stokes, of this city, after commenting upon this fact, said—I quote:

When this remark was made, I was at the time secretary of Yale University, and I replied that, although very proud of my alma mater, I only regretted that Yale's record with its white graduates was not so good as Tuskegee's record with its black graduates.

In the language of the late J. L. M. Curry, who was asked to write the introduction for the story of Booker Washington's life and work, he said:

The life of Booker T. Washington cannot be written. Incidents of birth, parentage, schooling, early struggles, later triumphs may be detailed with accuracy, but his life has been so incorporated, transfused into such a multitude of other lives—broadening views, exalting ideals, molding character—that no human being can know its deep and beneficent influence, and no pen can describe it.

No man of our time has made a deeper impression on public opinion, softened or removed so many prejudices, or awakened greater hopefulness in relation to the solution of a problem encompassed with a thousand difficulties and perplexing the minds of philanthropists and statesmen.

In an address delivered by him in Atlanta, Ga., in 1895 to the Cotton States Exposition, he, by skillful words and wise utterances, sounded a new doctrine which has done more than any other to make real what Henry W. Grady characterized as the new South. He laid down the doctrine of constructive building, which was seized and carried out more largely than any utterance coming from the lips and soul of any human being in this country. He believed with Epictetus, who, being asked how a man should give pain to his enemies, answered:

By preparing himself to live the best life he can.

Booker Washington, though born a slave, mingled on easy terms with educators, dignitaries, governors, presidents, kings, philanthropists, and philosophers. They sought his counsel and enjoyed his presence. They admired his teachings and commended his example. It might well be that his life was a model for mankind. If Shakespeare had written about him he would have said:

His life was gentle; and the elements
So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up
And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

Please note with me that he, like the Savior of mankind, was not only a disciple but an apostle of peace. His greatness is in no measure attributed to his acts with the sword. Unlike many other great heroes worshipped by us today, he never encouraged the shedding of a single drop of human blood. He always preached love, peace, and good will to all mankind. This is the legacy he has left for you and me. To him—

On earth there was nothing good but man;
In man there was nothing good but character and mind.

If you ask me to take you to the monument erected to him, in a feeble manner attesting the love and devotion the world bears for him, I would not take you to the Tuskegee Institute with its great buildings, its thousands of students, and hundreds of teachers. I would not take you to the great bronze statue erected at the cost of many thousands of dollars, standing on the campus, the dream of artists, showing the manner in which he broke the shackles of industrial and intellectual slavery from the ankles and hands of the large number taught by him; but I would take you to the thousands of American firesides where his books are read and his examples and precepts are taught to millions of our young who had no opportunity to see him when he lived. This is a monument of the type which has been erected to the Christ. I would take you to the thousands of rural communities where better schoolhouses stand, where longer school terms have been made possible through his philanthrophy. I would take you to the millions of American citizens whose lives are nothing more than monuments to his greatness.

You ask me, How did he do it? With an apology to Longfellow, my answer would be largely in his words:

The heights by Booker Washington reached and kept,
Were not attained by sudden flight;
But he, while his companions slept,
Was toiling upward in the night.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 196)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Labor and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

On March 21, 1933, I addressed a message to the Congress, in which I stated:

I propose to create a Civilian Conservation Corps to be used in simple work, not interfering with normal employment, and confining itself to forestry, the prevention of soil erosion, flood control, and similar projects. I call your attention to the fact that this type of work is of definite, practical value, not only through the prevention of great present financial loss but also as a means of creating future national wealth.

The prompt consideration given to this message by Congress resulted in the enactment, on March 31, 1933, of Public, No. 5, to provide for the relief of unemployment through the performance of useful public work; and on April 5, 1933, by Executive order, I set up the Office of Emergency Conservation Work to carry the above act into effect.

It is not necessary to go into detail regarding the accomplishments of the corps. You are acquainted with the physical improvements that have taken place in our forests and parks as a result of the activities of the corps and with the wealth that is being added to our natural resources for the benefit of future generations. More important than the material gain, however, is the improvement we find in the moral and physical well-being of our citizens who have been enrolled in the corps and of their families who have been assisted by monthly allotments of pay.

The functions of the corps expire under authority of present law on June 30, 1937.

In my Budget message to Congress on January 5 of this year I indicated that the corps should be continued and recommended that legislation be enacted during the present session to establish the corps as a permanent agency of the Government. Such continuance or establishment is desirable notwithstanding the great strides that have been made toward national recovery, as there is still need for providing useful and healthful employment for a large number of our youthful citizens.

I am convinced that there is ample useful work in the protection, restoration, and development of our national resources, upon which the services of the corps may be employed advantageously for an extended future period. It should be noted that this program will not in any respect reduce normal employment opportunities for our adult workers; in fact, the purchase of simple materials, of food and clothing, and of other supplies required for the operations of the corps tends to increase employment in industry.

I recommend, therefore, that provision be made for a permanent corps of 300,000 youths—and war veterans—together with 10,000 Indians and 5,000 enrollees in our Territories and insular possessions. It would appear, after a careful study of available information, that, with improved business conditions, these numbers represent the maximum expected enrollment. To go beyond this number at this time would open new and difficult classifications of enrollment, and the additional cost would seriously affect the financial position of the Treasury.

I trust that the Congress will deem it wise to enact legislation making permanent the Civilian Conservation Corps.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 5, 1937.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARREN. Is the Chair at the present time in a position to state whether there will be any suspensions today; and if so, what they will be?

The SPEAKER. If sufficient time is available after the conclusion of the call of the Consent Calendar, the Chair is considering recognizing the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] to call up a bill if the bill is objected to when called on the Consent Calendar.

DISASTER LOAN CORPORATION

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask for this time now in the hope that what I may say will be of interest to those Members whose districts lie in the Mississippi or Ohio Valleys and who were sufferers from the recent disastrous flood.

The Disaster Loan Corporation that has been operating in this territory is not quite coming up to the standard that we hoped for it. I do not want to be caustic in my criticism, but I want you all to know that the people in my district at least are not satisfied with conditions. I want to be helpful and not unreasonably critical. I think those who represent the Disaster Loan Corporation in our respective territories as field investigators are doing the very best they can. I have had many letters commending them, and I have had some criticizing them because they do not go out into the rural sections up and down the river from the county seat towns. But, generally speaking, these men have done and are doing a good job. I think the trouble is here in Washington, and if there is any trouble it is due to the fact that this Corporation, being operated under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, is too strict, and this may be a result of the fact that the employees of this Disaster Loan Corporation are men accustomed to demanding the last cent in security that they can get, as most men who loan money are inclined to be. I think we made it clear when this bill was being considered in the House that it was the idea of Congress that this money should be loaned, not with the same strictness that they loan the money of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but rather that it should be loaned on character. I think it was clearly brought out that this money was to go to people in distress and that too many questions were not to be asked about it. I stated that we needed this money now, not 4 or 5 weeks from now.

In my district we have many who are complaining bitterly that the loans are held up here in Washington. If this is true those who are responsible here in Washington should not object if I call this to their attention. I am doing this in the hope that it will assist them in getting these loans out. In one country in my district, where more than half of the homes were under or surrounded by water, I understand that not one single cent has been paid. The loans have been approved by the local committee and by the investigators sent out from the Washington office, but they are lost here in Washington. The regulations of the Corporation are entirely too exacting and entirely too strict. If these regulations are not tempered with a little sympathy or if a little charity is not practiced, then the purpose of the Congress will have been thwarted by those here in Washington who probably never saw a flood and do not know what it means to flee to the second story of their home, there to remain without heat or light and in many instances without much food for a week, knowing that practically all their earthly possessions are gone. If only they could see our desolation they would be convinced just as all of those who have come into our midst as investigators for the Disaster Loan Corporation. The Congress intended by this law to bring aid and assistance to our flood sufferers, and no one can blame me for showing some zeal and earnestness in behalf of my people when I know that they are not getting what is coming to them.

How can we help this situation? How can you help the situation? I wish you would call up the heads of the Disaster Loan Corporation and encourage them to be more lenient and encourage them to be more speedy in bringing this relief. It is not necessary that we castigate or unduly criticize, but if we give this board to understand what we had in mind when we passed this law, then I feel sure that they will want to respect the wishes of Congress. If they do not show any inclination to cooperate, then we must change the law or else do whatever is necessary to get justice.

I find that the principal trouble comes from the attempt to get too much security. This money was supposed to be loaned as character loans, and what is a character loan? Does it imply that if a merchant or a private individual has a mortgage on his business or his home and owes a few bills he must get all of these to stand back while the Government can get a first mortgage on all he owns? No. A character loan is one loaned primarily on one's character. It is a loan in these cases to people who need assistance and who cannot easily get regular commercial loans, and who have sufficient good character to justify the statement that from their past records they will pay all their just debts when they can possibly reach them. This disaster loan legislation was intended primarily to help people who were in dire need of immediate credit. It was not intended that every cent of every loan should be secured by every possible bit of property that could be gotten together as a pawn. Those in charge of making these loans will not be held to the same strict accountability as they would be in making regular Reconstruction Finance loans. Congress said in effect that they should be liberal and charitable. I hope they will immediately change their regulations and proceed to get these applications approved and the money paid out where every dollar will do $5 worth of good. [Applause.]

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

ENTRY OF WIVES OF AMERICAN CITIZENS

The Clerk called the first bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 3471, to permit alien wives of American citizens who were married prior to the approval of the Immigration Act of 1924 to enter the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That part (4) of subdivision (c) of section 13 of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended by an act of June 13, 1930, is hereby amended so as to read as follows: "or (4) is the alien wife of an American citizen who was married prior to the approval of the Immigration Act of 1924, approved May 26, 1924."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

APPEARANCE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL IN CASES INVOLVING CONSTITUTIONALITY OF ACTS OF CONGRESS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2260, to provide for appearance on behalf of and appeal by the United States in certain cases in which the constitutionality of acts of Congress is involved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a very brief statement about this bill for the reason that we may try to call the bill under suspension of the rules.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. My reason for objecting was because the Committee on the Judiciary has the call on Calendar Wednesday, and I think the bill deserves careful consideration. That was my reason for objecting to it on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to make a 1- or 2-minute statement about the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. As I said, we may try to get this bill up under suspension as soon as we have an opportunity. As the gentleman from Michigan has just stated, it is an important bill, although it is a very simple bill. I make this brief statement in order that Members of the House, if they will be good enough to do it, may make some examination of the bill, against the time when we may get it up for consideration, with possibly not the time a bill of this importance ought to have for its entire discussion and consideration.

The provisions of the bill are very simple.

The bill provides that in private litigation where the constitutionality of an act of Congress is raised that the Attorney General on behalf of the Government may intervene to defend the constitutionality of the act of Congress and may appeal directly from an adverse decision to the Supreme Court. We are going to offer an amendment to give the Attorney General the right to appeal directly to the Supreme Court in those cases where the Government is originally a party or where some agency of the Government is originally a party and where such right to appeal does not now obtain.

The matter that I think the Members will want most to look into, however, will be the provision in the bill authorizing the intervention of the Attorney General in private litigation where the question of the constitutionality of an act of Congress is raised.

This is a very brief statement. It is the view of the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I think the view of probably all the members of the committee, that in the event in private litigation the constitutionality of an act of Congress is brought in question, that question becomes a major issue in the controversy. It is deemed not a proper or rational arrangement to have the defense of the constitutionality of an act of Congress dependent entirely upon private persons engaged in private litigation.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not have control of the time.

Mr. BEITER. The gentleman has stated that he expects to call this bill up under suspension. Does he mean after the Consent Calendar today or on next Wednesday?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We will not do it today if the Members would like to have more time to think about it.

Mr. RAYBURN. It cannot be done under suspension on Wednesday.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that one of the objections to the bill I have heard current in the House is that the resources of the Federal Government are pitted against a private litigant in cases where the constitutionality of an act is involved in private litigation. If the gentleman would amend his bill in some particular to award costs to private individuals, so that a private individual would not have to go to the tremendous expense of having to meet the Attorney General's office and the entire resources of the Federal Government in respect to constitutional questions, there might not be so much objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California renew his request that this bill be passed over without prejudice? [After a pause.] Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER, RULO, NEBR.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 192, to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Rulo, Nebr.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

PENSIONS TO CERTAIN SOLDIERS, ETC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5030, granting pensions and increases of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and nurses of the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, or the China Relief Expedition, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I personally believe that this bill is of such importance that it should be considered more fully in the House than we have an opportunity to do under Consent Calendar procedure. For this reason I think it might be well if the bill were passed over without prejudice.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1228, to amend the National Housing Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that a rule has been granted on this bill and that it is expected to take it up later in the afternoon. For this reason, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER AND TRIBUTARIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2565, to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and enter judgment upon the claims of contractors for excess costs incurred while constructing navigation dams and locks on the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the author of the bill, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF SOIL CONSERVATION AND DOMESTIC ALLOTMENT ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3687, to extend the period during which the purposes specified in section 7 (a) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act may be carried out by payments by the Secretary of Agriculture to producers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that this bill is too important to consider under the Consent Calendar. For this reason I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his request for a moment?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand that the gentleman is to be recognized later in the day to bring this bill up under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. JONES. If it is necessary; but I had hoped, in view of the fact that it was reported unanimously by the committee, that that would not be necessary.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have no particular objection to the bill but I think it should be considered. I hope the gentleman will take it up under suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PARTICIPATION OF THE UNITED STATES IN GREAT LAKES EXPOSITION

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 53, providing for a continuance of the participation of the United States in the Great Lakes Exposition in the State of Ohio in 1937, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. KLOEB. Mr. Speaker, owing to the absence of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. IMHOFF], and owing to the inability of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] to be here, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

USE OF EQUIPMENT BY NATIONAL ENCAMPMENT OF VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5554, to authorize the Secretary of War to lend War Department equipment for use at the 1937 National Encampment of Veterans of Foreign Wars, to be held in Buffalo and Niagara Falls, N. Y., from August 29 to September 3, 1937.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized to lend, at his discretion, to the Veterans of Foreign Wars for use at their national encampment to be held in Buffalo and Niagara Falls, N. Y., from August 29 to September 3, 1937, such tents, cots, and blankets, and other available stock out of the Army and National Guard supplies as such Department may require to house properly veterans attending such encampment: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of such property, the same to be delivered at such time prior to the holding of such encampment as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the Veterans of Foreign Wars: Provided further, That the Secretary of War, before delivering such property, shall take from such organization a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of such property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 26, ACT OF CONGRESS (41 STAT. L. 1225–1248)

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5559, to amend the last two provisos, section 26, act of Congress approved March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1225–1248).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, S. 1901 is an identical bill to the House bill, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last two provisos in section 26 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1225–1248), be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows: "That the State of Oklahoma is authorized, from and after the passage of this amendment, to levy and collect a gross production tax upon all lead and zinc produced on said lands in an amount not to exceed the present rate of three-fourths of 1 percent on the gross value thereof. In accordance with the uniform policy of the United States Government to hold the lands of the Quapaw Indians while restricted and the income therefrom free from State taxation of whatsoever nature, except as said immunity is expressly waived, and, in pursuance of said fixed policy, it is herein expressly provided that the waiver of tax immunity herein provided shall be in lieu of all other State taxes of whatsoever nature on said restricted lands or the income therefrom, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be paid out of the individual Indian funds held under his supervision, belonging to the Indian owner of the land, the gross production tax so assessed against the royalty interest of the respective Indian owner in an amount not to exceed the rate hereinabove set forth: Provided, however, That such tax shall not become a lien or charge of any kind or character against the land or other property of said Indian owner."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 5559) was laid on the table.

PAYMENT OF ATTORNEY'S FEES FROM OSAGE TRIBAL FUNDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5550, to provide for the payment of attorneys' fees from Osage tribal funds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Is there something about the bill I could explain?

Mr. TABER. I do not think the bill ought to be considered at this time.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I may say to the gentleman this does not involve the expenditure of any money by the Government. It involves only tribal funds.

Mr. TABER. We ought to be very careful about these tribal funds.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. It is tribal funds that they hope to recover through a suit they expect to file against a certain oil company for running oil lines over their property.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, for the time being I shall have to object.

VALIDATING A CERTAIN CONVEYANCE MADE BY CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILWAY CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2893, validating a certain conveyance heretofore made by Central Pacific Railway Co., a corporation, and its lessee, Southern Pacific Co., a corporation, involving certain portions of right-of-way in the town of Elk Grove, in the county of Sacramento, State of California, acquired by Central Pacific Railway Co. under the act of Congress approved July 1, 1862 (12 Stat. L. 489), as amended by the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. L. 356).

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the conveyance hereinafter particularly described and heretofore executed by Central Pacific Railway Co., a corporation, and its lessee, Southern Pacific Co., a corporation, involving certain lands or interests therein, in the town of Elk Grove, in the county of Sacramento, State of California, and forming a part of the right-of-way of said Central Pacific Railway Co., granted by the Government of the United States of America by an act of Congress approved July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes" (12 Stat. L. 489), and by said act as amended by act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes', approved July 1, 1862" (13 Stat. L. 356), is hereby legalized, validated, and confirmed with the same force and effect as if the land involved therein had been held at the time of such conveyance by the corporations making the same under absolute fee-simple title.

The conveyance, recorded in the office of the county recorder of Sacramento County, Calif., in book of official records, which is hereby legalized, validated, and confirmed, is as follows:

March 17, 1931: Nellie M. Kearns; volume 340, page 465.

Provided, That such legalization, validation, and confirmation shall not in any instance diminish said right-of-way to a width less than 50 feet on either side of the center of the main track or tracks of said Central Pacific Railway Co. as now established and maintained: Provided further, That nothing herein contained is intended or shall be construed to legalize, validate, or confirm any rights, titles, or interests based upon or arising out of adverse possession, prescription, or abandonment, and not confirmed by conveyance heretofore made by Central Pacific Railway Co. and its lessee, Southern Pacific Co.: And provided further, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, or other minerals in the land, and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PURCHASE OF ARTICLES OF ORDNANCE PROPERTY BY COAST GUARD OFFICERS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1442, to enable Coast Guard officers to purchase articles of ordnance property for use in the public service in the same manner as such property may be purchased by officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat. 732, 751; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 34, sec. 540), is hereby amended by inserting in line 15 of page 751 of volume 35 of the Statutes at Large of the United States, after the words "Marine Corps", the words "and Coast Guard."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPEAL OF AN ACT OF MARCH 3, 1933, IN RE EXPLOSIVE MATERIALS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1280, to repeal an act of March 3, 1933, entitled "An act to provide for the transfer of powder and other explosive materials from deteriorated and unserviceable ammunition under the control of the War Department to the Department of Agriculture for use in land clearing, drainage, road building, and other agricultural purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMENDMENT OF ACT OF MARCH 3, 1879 (20 STAT. L. 412)

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1285, to amend that provision of the act approved March 3, 1879 (20 Stat. L. 412), relating to issue of arms and ammunition for the protection of public money and property.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions relating to issue by the Secretary of War of arms and ammunition for protection of public money and property, contained in the act of March 3, 1879 (20 Stat. L. 412), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That upon the request of the head of any department or independent agency of the Government, the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue arms, suitable accouterments for use therewith, and ammunition whenever they may be required for the protection of the public money and property, and they may be delivered to any officer of the department or independent agency designated by the head of such department or independent agency, to be accounted for to the Secretary of War, and to be returned when the necessity for their use has expired: Provided, however, That hereafter the cost of all ammunition issued, the cost of replacing borrowed arms and accouterments which are lost or destroyed or are irreparable, the cost of repairing arms and accouterments returned to the War Department, and the cost to the War Department of making and receiving shipments under the authority of this act shall be covered by transfer of funds from the department or independent agency concerned to the credit of War Department funds."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF ACT OF CONGRESS TO PROVIDE FOR PROTECTION AND PRESERVATION OF DOMESTIC SOURCES OF TIN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5408, to amend the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the protection and preservation of domestic sources of tin", approved February 15, 1936.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, this bill is simply an amendment to a bill that was passed 2 years ago because the National Ammunition Control Board is in doubt whether the provisions of the original bill allowed them to prohibit the exportation of this tin scrap to some of the insular possessions of the United States. In other words, it is a bill requested by the National Ammunition Control Board so that this scrap may be lawfully exported to Hawaii, Puerto Rico, or other places.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is there anything in this legislation which affects the withdrawal of public lands from mining?

Mr. FADDIS. No; this only pertains to tin scrap.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved February 15, 1936, entitled "An act to provide for the protection and preservation of domestic sources of tin", be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto a new section, to be numbered 4, which shall read as follows:

"SEC. 4. The term 'United States' as used in this act shall include all Territories and possessions subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, except the Panama Canal Zone and the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands. For the purposes of this act, the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands shall be considered to be a foreign country."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXCHANGE OF EQUIPMENT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 462, to permit the exchange of used parts of certain types of equipment for new or reconditioned parts of the same equipment.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That used parts of mechanical refrigerators, hermetically sealed refrigerating units, temperature control devices, and watchmen's clocks may be exchanged in whole or in part payment for new or reconditioned parts to be used for the same purpose as those proposed to be exchanged.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 6, after the word "clocks", strike out "may be exchanged in whole or in part payment" and insert "as payment, in full or in part."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "An act to authorize any Government department to exchange used parts of certain types of equipment for new or reconditioned parts of the same equipment."

USE OF EQUIPMENT BY BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4659, to authorize the Secretary of War to lend War Department equipment for use at the world jamboree to the Boy Scouts of America, and to authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to remit the tax on steamship tickets, and further to authorize the Secretary of State to issue passports to bona-fide Scouts and Scouters without fee for the application or the issuance of said passports.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill (S. 1473) be considered in lieu of the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to lend, at his discretion, to the National Council, Boy Scouts of America, for use at the World Jamboree, Boy Scouts, to be held in the Netherlands, in the months of July and August 1937, 1,200 cots, 4,500 blankets, tentage for 1,200 Scouts, 25 fire cranes, 25 sets commissary storage shelves, 100 pot chains, 100 cook pots, 25 United States parade-size flags, 50 fry pans, 50 bake pans, 50 reflector ovens, 200 water pails, 250 tin serving pans, 250 pitchers: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of said property, the same to be delivered at such time prior to the holding of the said convention as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the National Council, Boy Scouts of America: Provided further, That the Secretary of War before delivering said property shall take from the said Boy Scouts of America a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and he is hereby, authorized under such rules and regulations as he shall promulgate to remit the tax on steamship tickets to bona-fide Scouts and Scouters certified by the National Council, Boy Scouts of America attending this jamboree. That, under such regulations as he may prescribe, the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue passports to bona-fide Scouts and Scouters of the Boy Scouts of America who are citizens of the United States or, if not citizens of the United States, who owe permanent allegiance to the United States upon certification by the National Council, Boy Scouts of America, as to their qualification to attend this jamboree as representing the National Council, Boy Scouts of America, without fee for the application or the issuance of said passports.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 4659) was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES COAST GUARD ACADEMY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1441, to authorize the establishment of a permanent instruction staff at the United States Coast Guard Academy.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, That the President of the United States is authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint not to exceed five professors to the United States Coast Guard as heads of the departments of instruction at the Coast Guard Academy. An original appointment as professor not made from a civilian instructor or regular commissioned officer in the United States Coast Guard shall be a temporary appointment; but a professor so appointed, after completion of a satisfactory probationary period of 2 years, may be regularly appointed as professor, to rank from the date of his original appointment: Provided, That any person who has served as a civilian instructor in the Coast Guard Academy for 15 years or more may be appointed to the office of professor in the Coast Guard Academy pursuant to this section without physical examination.

SEC. 2. A professor in the Coast Guard shall be a commissioned officer with rank not above that of commander, and shall receive the pay and allowances of a commissioned officer of the same rank and length of service. When any such professor is commissioned with rank less than that of commander, he shall be promoted through the successive ranks to a rank not above that of commander under such regulations as the President shall prescribe. A professor shall exercise command only in the academic department of the Coast Guard Academy.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to appoint in the Coast Guard, subject to the competitive provisions of the civil-service laws and regulations, not to exceed three civilian instructors, and the compensation of such appointees shall be fixed in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

SEC. 4. Service as a civilian instructor or professor at the Coast Guard Academy or as a commissioned officer in the Coast Guard (regular or temporary) rendered prior to an appointment as a professor pursuant to the provisions of this act shall be credited in computing length of service as a professor for purposes of pay and allowance.

SEC. 5. Professors in the Coast Guard shall be on the same footing as to retirement from active service for any cause as other commissioned officers of the Coast Guard: Provided, That service as a civilian instructor or professor at the Coast Guard Academy or as a commissioned officer in the Coast Guard (regular or temporary), rendered prior to an appointment as a professor pursuant to the provisions of this act, shall be credited in computing length of service for retirement purposes: Provided further, That the provisions of law relating to retirement for disability in line of duty shall not apply in the case of a professor until he shall have served 15 years in the Coast Guard.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to appoint an advisory committee of the Coast Guard Academy which shall consist of not to exceed five persons of distinction in the field of education who shall serve without pay. The members so appointed shall visit the Coast Guard Academy at least once during the academic year on the call of the chairman and may convene once each year at headquarters at the call of the commandant, for the purpose of examining the course of instruction and advising the Secretary of the Treasury relative thereto. The actual expenses of the members of the committee while engaged in these duties, including their actual expense of travel, shall be defrayed under Government travel regulations from any appropriation available for the authorized work of the United States Coast Guard.

SEC. 7. In addition to the advisory board there shall be appointed in January of each year a Board of Visitors to the Coast Guard, which shall consist of two Senators and three Members of the House of Representatives appointed by the chairmen of the committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, having cognizance of legislation pertaining to the Coast Guard Academy. The chairmen of such committees shall be ex-officio members of the Board.

(b) Such Board shall visit the Coast Guard Academy annually on a date to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury. Each member of the Board shall be reimbursed under Government travel regulations for the actual expense incurred by him while engaged upon duties as a member of such Board.

SEC. 8. Nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from assigning any commissioned officer, chief warrant officer, warrant officer, or enlisted man to appropriate instruction duty at the Coast Guard Academy.

SEC. 9. Any appropriation which is now or may hereafter be available for the payment of expenses for the authorized work of the Coast Guard shall be available to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 10. Section 4 of an act entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the Revenue Cutter Service", approved June 23, 1906 (34 Stat. 453; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 14, sec. 124), as amended by the act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat. 640), is hereby repealed, but such repeal shall not be construed to affect existing appointments: Provided, That no appointee, appointed prior to the enactment of this act, may be retained as an instructor in the Coast Guard Academy without appropriate civil-service status for a period longer than 6 months from the effective date of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5123) to provide for a preliminary examination and survey of Palarm Creek, a tributary of the Arkansas River, in Faulkner and Pulaski Counties, Ark., to determine the feasibility of cleaning out the channel and repairing the banks, of constructing dams and reservoirs where needed, and the cost of such improvement, with a view to the control of floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made of Palarm Creek, a tributary of the Arkansas River, in Faulkner and Pulaski Counties, Ark., to determine the feasibility of cleaning out the channel and repairing the banks, of constructing dams and reservoirs where needed, and the cost of such improvements, with a view to the controlling of floods, in accordance with the provisions of the Flood Control Act approved June 22, 1936, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such purposes.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "Arkansas", strike out the remainder of the line and all of line 7, and lines 1 and 2, on page 2, down to and including the word "improvements."

The committee amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill to provide for a preliminary examination and survey of Palarm Creek, a tributary of the Arkansas River, in Faulkner and Pulaski Counties, Ark., with a view to the control of floods."

BAYOU METO BASIN, ARK.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5128) to authorize a preliminary examination and survey of the Bayou Meto Basin, a tributary of the Arkansas River, in the State of Arkansas, with a view to control of floodwaters.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made of the Bayou Meto Basin, a tributary of the Arkansas River in the State of Arkansas, with a view to control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of the Flood Control Act approved June 22, 1936, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such purposes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

SULPHUR RIVER, ARK.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5129) to provide for a preliminary examination of Sulphur River in Arkansas, with a view to flood control and to determine the cost of such improvement.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Sulphur River in Arkansas to determine the feasibility of flood-control work on said river and the cost of such improvement in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the control of floods of Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, and the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and the contingencies of rivers and harbors.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "examination", insert "and survey"; line 5, after the word "Arkansas", strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 6 and 7 and insert "with a view to the control of its floods"; line 8, after the word "of", strike out the remainder of the line and all of line 9, and on page 2, all of lines 1 and 2 and insert "the Flood Control Act approved June 22, 1936"; and on line 5, page 2, after the word "for", strike out the remainder of the line and all of line 6 and insert "such purposes."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for a preliminary examination and survey of Sulphur River in Arkansas with a view to flood control."

POTEAU RIVER, ARK.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5130) to provide for a preliminary examination of the Poteau River in Arkansas, with a view to flood control and to determine the cost of such improvement.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Poteau River in Arkansas to determine the feasibility of flood-control work on said river and the cost of such improvement in accordance with the provision of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the control of floods of the Mississippi River and the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, and the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "examination", insert the words "and survey"; line 5, after the word "Arkansas", strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 6 and 7 and insert "with a view to the control of its floods"; line 8, after the word "of", strike out the remainder of the line and all of line 9, and on page 2, all of lines 1 and 2 and insert "the Flood Control Act approved June 22, 1936; page 2, line 5, strike out all of lines 5 and 6 and insert "such purposes."

The committee amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for a preliminary examination and survey of the Poteau River in Arkansas with a view to flood control."

NESTUCCA RIVER, OREG.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5180) to authorize a preliminary examination of Nestucca River and its tributaries in the State of Oregon, with a view to the control of its floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Nestucca River and its tributaries in the State of Oregon, with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "of", strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 8, 9, and 10 and insert "the Flood Control Act approved June 22, 1936"; page 2, line 2, after the word "for", strike out the remainder of the line and all of line 3 and insert "such purposes."

The committee amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize a preliminary examination and survey of Nestucca River and its tributaries in the State of Oregon, with a view to the control of floods."

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF FLATHEAD RIVER, ETC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5181, to provide a preliminary examination and survey of the Flathead River and tributaries in Flathead County, Mont., with a view to the control of its floodwaters.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made of the Flathead River and tributaries in Flathead County, Mont., with a view to control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of the Flood Control Act approved June 22, 1936, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such purposes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN PUBLIC WORKS ON RIVERS AND HARBORS FOR FLOOD CONTROL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4545, to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. This bill amends existing law, and it is my understanding that it does not comply with the Ramseyer rule. A bill which does not comply with the Ramseyer rule cannot be considered in the House, inasmuch as it has not been properly reported out of the committee.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that that objection comes too late. With the gentleman's permission, if he will yield, I would like to make a statement.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think we should settle the point as to whether my objection comes too late.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. No, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The point of order does not come too late. The bill and report evidently do not conform to the provisions of the Ramseyer rule, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Flood Control.

POST-OFFICE SITE, HUDSON FALLS, N. Y.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3135, for the exchange of land in Hudson Falls, N. Y., for the purpose of the post-office site.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to convey to the owner of the land abutting the easterly side of the post-office site at Hudson Falls, N. Y., the following-described piece or parcel of land forming a part of said post-office site:

Lying and being in the city of Hudson Falls, county of Washington, State of New York, and described as follows: Beginning at a point in the northerly side of Pearl Street, distant eastwardly 145 feet from the intersection of the easterly side of Main Street with the northerly side of Pearl Street, said point being the southeast corner of the present post-office site; running thence along the northerly side of Pearl Street, south 81°57′ west a distance of 10 feet to a point; then north 5°48′ west a distance of 36.67 feet to a point in the westerly side of lands now or formerly of D. S. Griffin; thence along lands of said Griffin south 21°12′ east a distance of 37.62 feet to the point or place of beginning; in consideration of the conveyance to the United States of the following-described piece or parcel of land as an addition to the said post-office site:

Lying and being in the city of Hudson Falls, county of Washington, State of New York, and described as follows: Beginning at a point 85 feet north and 145 feet east of the intersection of the easterly side of Main Street with the northerly side of Pearl Street, said point being the northeast corner of the present post-office site; running thence north 81°57′ east a distance of 12.59 feet to a point; thence south 5°48′ east a distance of 46.18 feet to a point in the easterly side of the present post-office site; thence along the easterly side of said post-office site north 21°12′ west a distance of 47.38 feet to the point or place of beginning.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OLD POST-OFFICE BUILDING, OAKLAND, CALIF.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3683, authorizing and empowering the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the old post-office building at Oakland, Calif., and to convey to the city of Oakland portions of the site for street-widening purposes in accordance with the provisions of public act approved August 26, 1935 (49 Stat. 800).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the bill S. 1470 for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved April 11, 1936 (49 Stat. 1202), to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes", approved May 25, 1926, authorizing and empowering the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of the old post-office building and to sell all of the site thereof at Oakland, Calif., is hereby amended by canceling the second sentence thereof and substituting the following: "The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby further authorized to sell the old post-office site situated at Broadway, Seventeenth, and Franklin Streets, in Oakland, Calif., at such time, for such price, and upon such terms and conditions as he may deem to be to the best interest of the United States, and to convey such property to the purchaser thereof by the usual quitclaim deed, the proceeds of said sale to be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from favorably considering an application of the city of Oakland for the conveyance to said city of such portion or portions of the site as the Secretary may agree are necessary for street-widening purposes in accordance with the provisions of public act approved August 26, 1935 (49 Stat. 800; U. S. C., title 40, sec. 345b)."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 3683) was laid on the table.

CAPITAN GRANDE BAND OF MISSION INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5551, to reserve certain public domain in California for the benefit of the Capitan Grande Band of Mission Indians.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described public domain be, and it is hereby, withdrawn from entry, sale, or other disposition and set aside as an addition to the Barona Ranch, a tract of land purchased for the Capitan Grande Band of Mission Indians under authority contained in the act of May 4, 1932 (47 Stat. L. 146): Lots 1 and 2 of section 23, township 14 south, range 1 east, San Bernardino meridian, California, containing 12.19 acres: Provided, That said withdrawal shall not affect any valid rights initiated prior to approval hereof.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR CEMETERIAL PURPOSES IN VICINITY OF SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5136, to authorize the acquisition of land for cemeterial purposes in the vicinity of San Francisco, Calif.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, such suitable lands in the vicinity of San Francisco, Calif., as in his judgment are required for the enlargement of existing national cemetery facilities, and the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated for this purpose from any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which sum shall remain available until expended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXPENDITURE OF SUMS FROM TRIBAL FUNDS ON INDIAN IRRIGATION WORKS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4950, to credit certain Indian tribes with sums heretofore expended from tribal funds on Indian irrigation works.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

TO SIMPLIFY ACCOUNTING

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5757, to simplify accounting.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter, in making payments for commodities or services the quantity of which is determined by metered readings, such as gas, electricity, water, steam, and the like, where the period covered by the charge begins in one fiscal year or allotment period and ends in another, the entire amount of the payment may be regarded as a charge against the appropriation or allotment current at the end of such period.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2297, to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the northern district of Georgia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice there are two bills on the Consent Calendar authorizing additional judges.

Inasmuch as some of these bills need consideration, and inasmuch as last year the Judiciary Committee reported these out in an omnibus bill, I am of the opinion that they should do likewise this year in order that we may have some further consideration.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that this particular bill is one that passed the House last year, after considerable discussion, and passed by a vote of the House. It was one of several similar bills brought up under a rule last year. The Senate failed to pass the bill because of some differences between the Georgia Senators. This is the same bill we had up here last year which was considered under a rule and voted on by the House. I hope the gentleman will let it go through so that the Senate may have time to consider it.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. This is the bill that provides for one of the judgeships included in the omnibus bill which was brought up under a rule last session. The bill passed the House but it was too late to have it considered in the Senate. This bill was passed at the last session.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there is no particular reason why I should be responsible for the policy of the majority and the manner in which these bills are brought up.

Mr. WALTER. I am very well acquainted with the gentleman's position, and I think he is right. At the last session, when objection was made to the consideration of these bills on the Consent Calendar, we finally secured a rule and all these bills were included in an omnibus bill. It was considered, however, late in the session.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand that there are vacancies in district judgeships at the present time that have not been filled for some months. In this particular case a new judgeship is created. Perhaps they need it, but I notice that the work of the court has been decreasing each year since 1932.

Mr. WALTER. That is not the fact in this particular district.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That, of course, does not necessarily mean that there is not a need for an additional judge; but I think that because of the situation which confronts us here concerning the reform of the judiciary there is ever so much more need for discussing these bills at length now than there was last year before we had this question. I know the gentleman understands my position. If a new judge is needed in this district, I am in favor of providing for one.

Mr. WALTER. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that of all the bills that were considered by the Committee on the Judiciary at the last session that in this particular case there seemed to be a greater need than in any other in the United States. That is due to the fact that the Federal penitentiary at Atlanta is located in this district. Last year, I believe, seven additional judges were asked to assist the judge in this particular district. There were approximately 2,700 petitions for writs of habeas corpus filed, with the result that one of the judges devoted practically all of his time to hearing these writs of habeas corpus.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That would come within the classification of criminal cases, would it not?

Mr. WALTER. Yes; that is right.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In 1932 the criminal cases disposed of were 1,145; in 1933, 921; in 1934, 954; in 1935, 608; in 1936 there were only 599.

Mr. WALTER. But they are trials of criminal cases and are exclusive of the writs of habeas corpus.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Those figures do not include writs of habeas corpus, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. This includes, of course, pleas of guilty as well as trials.

Mr. WALTER. But not the hearings on writs of habeas corpus.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. We might as well understand that the need for an additional judge does not depend entirely on the number of cases appearing on the docket, for it all depends upon the type of the cases. There are districts in the United States where there are very few cases pending; but, for instance, there might be a patent case which would take 2 or 3 months to try. So the number of cases is at no time a conclusive criterion.

The Judiciary Committee has considered this case very carefully. I happen to be one of those who oppose additional judges where they are not needed; and we have adopted the policy that where the Chief Justice of the United States, the judicial counsel, and the Department of Justice advise that a new judge is needed, the new judge is recommended. There is no partisanship in it. There is certainly but one motive actuating the Judiciary Committee, and that is to make the courts function. Some of us believe that we should at this particular time do everything that we can to make the courts function; and the best way to do that is to pass a bill allowing a district judge where that judge is needed, and without any fuss on the floor of the House or any indication that we are trying to hold up something. People want justice; they want their cases decided.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say, if the Speaker please, that I absolutely refuse to be responsible for the policy of the majority with respect to these new judgeships. I am not willing to take the responsibility. The Committee on the Judiciary say in this case they need a new judge; but I have said what I have to say, having in mind that we should adopt some policy now when these cases are fresh on the calendar rather than to wait until a month from now.

I am willing to give credence to what the gentlemen have said with reference to it and therefore withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Georgia.

AMENDMENT OF THE FEDERAL REGISTER ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5721, to amend the Federal Register Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. WALTER. This bill will make unnecessary the gathering together of a great many documents that the Department feels are unnecessary to file. It will mean a great saving in the case of the administration of this particular agency.

Mr. TABER. I am inclined to think the whole act should be repealed. I permitted it to go through by unanimous consent on representations which turned out to be incorrect. It has worked out just as I expected, and it has been a bad bill. I have not had a chance to go into this thoroughly to know what this does to the other act. I am afraid of the bill all the way through, and any operations in connection with it because of the way we have had it put over on us.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. I am inclined to believe that the gentleman is right with respect to the entire proposition. However, in the compilation of some of this data it was discovered there were a great many records pertaining to Indian affairs and the Department of the Interior did not feel that a lot of work, together with the expenditure of large sums of money, ought to be undertaken in connection with that particular matter. It was with the idea of relieving the Interior Department and some of the other departments of the necessity of compilation of a lot of data that this amendment to the Federal Register law was reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee. I feel this will result in cutting down the cost of administering that particular agency.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I am a member of the Appropriations Committee and chairman of a legislative subcommittee. The testimony that appeared in the record covering this year's hearings shows it would cost more than $300,000 to bring the Federal Register up to date. We spent a considerable sum under the terms of the bill—I believe $150,000. This is a tremendous expense. I feel as the gentleman feels, that the whole Federal Register might be revamped or the act repealed entirely. It is costing too much money for the quantum of value we get out of it. Nevertheless, if this bill will relieve the Appropriations Committee from the obligation of appropriating so much money, as we will have to do next year or some time, this might be a step in the right direction.

Mr. TABER. I think this is a pretty big question. I really believe the act should be repealed entirely.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not know but what the gentleman from New York may be right. The Federal Register was a most important thing and would have been a most valuable thing if the N. R. A. and a number of agencies had continued by virtue of which the departments or agencies had authority to make regulations with the power of law which sent people to jail. The people had no way of knowing what the law was that they were supposed to obey. However, when those agencies ceased and the necessity for the publicity of orders of that type ceased, and, again the act is possibly more comprehensive than was ever intended. I feel, as suggested by the gentleman from California [Mr. DOCKWEILER], if we want to approach repeal and we do not want to go any further than we have gone, that perhaps this is good legislation to enact.

Mr. WALTER. Does not the gentleman feel this is a step in the right direction?

Mr. MICHENER. I am sure if the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], who is the watchdog of the Treasury, understood thoroughly, as we understand, what this means in the way of retrenchment he would be the first man for it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF ACT MAKING APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE NAVAL SERVICE FOR THE YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1910

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1133, to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1909, to extend commissary privileges to widows of officers and enlisted men of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard and also to officers of the Foreign Service of the United States at foreign stations.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc, That that part of the act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat. 768; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 533), which provides "That hereafter such stores as the Secretary of the Navy may designate may be procured and sold to officers and enlisted men of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, also to civilian employees at naval stations beyond the continental limits of the United States and in Alaska, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe", is hereby amended to read as follows: "That hereafter such stores as the Secretary of the Navy may designate may be procured and sold to officers and enlisted men of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard; to the widows of such officers and enlisted men; to civilian employees of the Navy Department and to officers of the Foreign Service of the United States at naval stations beyond the continental limits of the United States and in Alaska, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "Marine Corps and Coast Guard" and insert "and Marine Corps."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARKETING AGREEMENTS AND ORDERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5722, to reenact and amend provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, relating to marketing agreements and orders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, for the same reason I gave when we considered no. 94 on the calendar, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

RELIEF OF THE STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5895, for the relief of the State of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 1684, which is identical with the House bill, may be considered in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 3646, as amended, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the chief disbursing officer of the Treasury Department is authorized and directed to issue, without the requirement of an indemnity bond, a duplicate of original check no. 65451, symbol no. 79088, drawn January 25, 1935, in favor of "State treasurer of Pennsylvania, trust fund", for $11,315.93 and lost, stolen, or miscarried in the mails.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 5895) was laid on the table.

CLASSIFICATION OF COTTON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 256, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to provide for the classification of cotton, to furnish information on market supply, demand, location, condition, and market prices for cotton, and for other purposes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Mississippi please explain his bill?

Mr. DOXEY. May I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that my bill amends the present Grade and Staple Estimates Act by inserting another section authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture, upon request of a group of people organized for the purpose of growing a better staple and grade of cotton, to grade this cotton and put a standard grade on it, with Government findings and gradings. The machinery for this purpose is already set up, at least partially. The estimates of expenses have already been submitted to the Director of the Budget and have been approved, and the bill has been approved not only by the subcommittee of which I am chairman, with a unanimous report from the Committee on Agriculture, but the Senate has passed a similar bill and the Senate bill is already over here. It is S. 1500.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This is simply a grading bill?

Mr. DOXEY. It is simply a grading bill. It is a cotton-grading amendment to the grading acts which already exist. The purpose behind it is to promote the distribution of our cotton in the world market, so that the producer of cotton will be encouraged to increase his staple sold either at home or abroad, which will result in a better world market.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman means that if certain people know exactly what grade of cotton they are getting, and if we are marketing a better grade of cotton, we will have a better chance in the world market?

Mr. DOXEY. Not only that, may I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, but the producer in a number of instances is not encouraged to grow a better staple cotton. He will plant half-and-half, which will turn out quantity but not quality. Then, when the producer sells it, he is at the mercy of the cotton buyer, as he does not know whether his cotton is of a grade which is full seven-eighths or an inch and a quarter. The cotton producer now just has to take the word of the cotton buyer as to grade, and so forth, of the cotton he sells.

If a group of persons request a standard grade be furnished, the Government grades the sample of cotton they furnish, and the sample, which is retained by the Government, may amount to as much, possibly, in value as the expense attached to the work. That depends upon how the Government administers the act.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How much expense is attached to it?

Mr. DOXEY. There is likely to be some expense—I do not know how much. It is owing to what mechanism the Secretary of Agriculture sets up. He may use his present set-up. The Secretary may set up a different program.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What amount would the gentleman estimate as a rough guess?

Mr. DOXEY. I would not attempt to guess, because I do not know how the Secretary of Agriculture is going to handle it, and no one else does at the present time. The amount will be very small, in my judgment. The Government keeps the samples of cotton, and that will bring in some revenue to the Government, because the Government has the right to convert the cotton samples into money. I appreciate the gentleman's position, and I am sure he will not object to this bill. It is a meritorious bill in the interests of the cotton producer. It is designed to help cotton producers to know the grade of cotton they grow and its market value, to stimulate the production of a better grade of cotton, and to secure for American-grown cotton a better price in the world markets.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. DOXEY. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill (S. 1500) may be considered in lieu of the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to collect and publish statistics of the grade and staple length of cotton", approved March 3, 1927, is amended by inserting between sections 3 and 4 thereof the following new sections:

"SEC. 3a. The Secretary of Agriculture, upon request in writing from any group of producers organized to promote the improvement of cotton who comply with such regulations as he may prescribe, is authorized and directed to determine and to make promptly available to such producers, the classification, in accordance with the official cotton standards of the United States, of any cotton produced by them. The Secretary of Agriculture is further authorized to pay the transportation charges and to furnish tags and containers for the samples of cotton submitted for classification under this section, and all samples of cotton so classified shall become the property of the Government, and the proceeds of any sales thereof after classification shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

"SEC. 3b. The Secretary of Agriculture is also authorized and directed to collect, authenticate, publish, and distribute, by telegraph, radio, mail, or otherwise, timely information on the market supply, demand, location, condition, and market prices for cotton, and to cause to be prepared regularly and distributed for posting at gins, in post offices, or in other public or conspicuous places in cotton-growing communities, information on prices for the various grades and staple lengths of cotton.

"SEC. 3c. The Secretary of Agriculture is further authorized to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 256) was laid on the table.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the report on this bill printed in connection with my remarks in order that I may explain it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

The Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 256) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to provide for the classification of cotton, to furnish information on market supply, demand, location, condition, and market prices for cotton, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass.

OBJECT OF BILL

The object of this bill is to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to provide for the classification of cotton and to authorize the Secretary to furnish timely information to cotton producers with respect to market supply, demand, location, condition, and prices for cotton.

ANALYSIS OF BILL

This bill amends the act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to collect and publish statistics of the grade and staple length of cotton", which was approved on March 3, 1927, by inserting between sections 3 and 4 of the act three subsections.

The first subsection which this bill proposes to add to the act of March 3, 1927, authorizes and directs the Secretary of Agriculture, upon request in writing from any group of producers organized to promote the improvement of cotton and who comply with such regulations as he may prescribe, to determine and make promptly available to such producers the classification of any cotton produced by them. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to pay transportation charges and to furnish tags and containers for the samples of cotton submitted for classification under this subsection. The samples of cotton which are submitted for classification to the Secretary become the property of the Government, and the proceeds of any sales of such samples after classification will be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

The second subsection which this bill, if enacted, would add to the act of March 3, 1927, authorizes and directs the Secretary of Agriculture to collect, authenticate, publish, and distribute, by telegraph, radio, mail, or otherwise, timely information on the market supply, demand, location, condition, and market prices for cotton. The bill provides that this information relating to prices for the various grades and staple lengths of cotton shall be prepared regularly and distributed for posting at gins, in post offices, or in other public or conspicuous places in cotton-growing communities.

The third subsection which this bill proposes to add to the act of March 3, 1927, merely authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act.

Below is quoted a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, under date of March 16, 1937, making a favorable report on the proposed legislation:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, March 16, 1937.

Hon. MARVIN JONES,
Chairman, Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. JONES: We have your letter of February 4, in which comment is requested on the bill (H. R. 256, by Mr. DOXEY) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to provide for the classification of cotton, to furnish information on market supply, demand, location, condition, and market prices for cotton, and for other purposes.

This bill would amend the Grade and Staple Estimates Act of March 3, 1927, by the addition of language which would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture upon request in writing from any group of producers organized to promote the improvement of cotton quality who comply with prescribed regulations, to determine and to make available the classification of any cotton produced by them. The Department would also be authorized to expand its cotton market news service and to cause market news information to be posted regularly at gins, post offices, or in other conspicuous places in cotton-growing communities.

This Department favors constructive measures to improve the quality of cotton produced and to better conditions among growers generally. To do this, direct assistance to growers associated in one-variety communities would seem to be a desirable procedure. Studies made by the Department in recent years have shown that for the most part growers market their cotton without knowledge of its quality or the price at which equal qualities are selling in larger central markets. Moreover, prices paid to growers in local markets do not as a rule reflect the premiums and discounts prevailing on the central markets. On the contrary, there is a definite tendency for growers on a given day and in a given market to receive the same prices without regard to differences in the quality of their cotton. The consequence is that growers' incentives for the improvement and maintenance of quality are largely destroyed.

In world competition, superior quality is one of the greatest advantages which American cotton possesses. This fact has been rather clearly brought out in the experience of European spinners who have undertaken to substitute other growths. To preserve this advantage we should be seeking ways to make it worth while to growers individually to improve the quality of their cotton and to cooperate with each other in order to make the production of high-quality cotton general throughout the Belt. Furnishing classing and quotations services to growers who would improve the quality of the cotton they produce by participating in one-variety community organizations would definitely help in this direction.

Large-scale improvement in the quality of cotton produced is dependent, also, upon making available to growers at moderate cost adequate supplies of relatively pure planting seed of superior varieties. Efforts to accomplish this result are being made in other countries, especially in Egypt and Russia, through legislation prohibiting the sale of planting seed not supplied or approved by the Government.

In this country the stocks of desirable planting seed are now far short of the annual requirements for planting the entire crop. There are, however, large supplies of excellent seed stock available that are not being utilized to best advantage because of failure of local markets to pay the grower premiums commensurate with the quality of the improved cotton. It is believed that in the United States the results which other countries hope to accomplish through compulsion may be achieved through voluntary community organizations, if properly encouraged and assisted by the Government. In fact, the Department is now proceeding on such a program. Already it has aided in the organization of more than 300 such communities in 156 counties, embracing close to 800,000 acres of cotton. The Department anticipates that with concerted and intensive efforts upward of 80 percent of the Cotton Belt could, within 5 years, be so organized.

Experience with one-variety communities has shown that cotton classing and market news services are essential to these organizations. When the growers are unable to bargain for and obtain better prices for the better qualities produced they become discouraged and tend to abandon efforts to improve quality. For these reasons and because of the dependence which is being placed in the one-variety community organization as an instrument of permanent crop improvement the Department recommends the enactment of H. R. 256 as desirable legislation in this field.

Upon reference of this bill to the Bureau of the Budget, as required by Budget Circular 336, the Department was advised by the Acting Director thereof, under date of March 8, 1937, that "there would be no objection on the part of this office to the submission to Congress of your proposed report on this bill."

Sincerely,

H. A. WALLACE Secretary.

CHANGES IN EXISTING LAW

In compliance with paragraph 2a of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, changes in existing law made by the bill are shown as follows: Existing law in which no change is proposed is shown in roman; new matter is printed in italics.

"Public, No. 740, Sixty-ninth Congress

"SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of every owner, president, treasurer, secretary, director, or other officer or agent of any cotton warehouse, cotton ginnery, cotton mill, or other place or establishment where cotton is stored, whether conducted as a corporation, firm, limited partnership, or individual, and of any owner or holder of any cotton and of the agents and representatives of any such owner or holder, when requested by the Secretary of Agriculture or by any special agent or other employee of the Department of Agriculture acting under the instructions of said Secretary to furnish completely and correctly, to the best of his knowledge, all of the information concerning the grades and staple length of cotton on hand, and, when requested, to permit such agent or employee of the Department of Agriculture to examine and classify samples of all such cotton on hand. The request of the Secretary of Agriculture for such information may be made in writing or by a visiting representative, and if made in writing shall be forwarded by registered mail, and the registry receipt of the Post Office Department shall be accepted as evidence of such demand. Any owner, president, treasurer, secretary, director, or other officer or agent of any cotton warehouse, cotton ginnery, cotton mill, or other place or establishment where cotton is stored, or any owner or holder of any cotton or the agent or representative of any such owner or holder, who, under the conditions hereinbefore stated, shall refuse or willfully neglect to furnish any information herein provided for or shall willfully give answers that are false or shall refuse to allow agents or employees of the Department of Agriculture to examine or classify any cotton in store in any such establishment, or in the hands of any owner or holder or of the agent or representative of any such owner or holder, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than $300 or more than $1,000.

"Sec. 3a. The Secretary of Agriculture, upon request in writing from any group of producers organized to promote the improvement of cotton who comply with such regulations as he may prescribe, is authorized and directed to determine and to make promptly available to such producers, the classification, in accordance with the official cotton standards of the United States, of any cotton produced by them. The Secretary of Agriculture is further authorized to pay the transportation charges and to furnish tags and containers for the samples of cotton submitted for classification under this section, and all samples of cotton so classified shall become the property of the Government, and the proceeds of any sales thereof after classification shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

"Sec. 3b. The Secretary of Agriculture is also authorized and directed to collect, authenticate, publish, and distribute, by telegraph, radio, mail, or otherwise, timely information on the market supply, demand, location, condition, and market prices for cotton, and to cause to be prepared regularly and distributed for posting at gins, in post offices, or in other public or conspicuous places in cotton-growing communities, information on prices for the various grades and staple lengths of cotton.

"Sec. 3c. The Secretary of Agriculture is further authorized to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act.

"SEC. 4. The Secretary of Agriculture may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, District, or possession, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or any person; and shall have the power to appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, not in conflict with existing law, and make such expenditures for the purchase of samples of cotton, for rent outside the District of Columbia, printing, telegrams, telephones, books of reference, periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel, and other supplies and expenses as shall be necessary to the administration of this act in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and there are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for such purposes."

The SPEAKER. This concludes the call of all bills on the calendar in order today.

SOIL CONSERVATION AND DOMESTIC ALLOTMENT

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 3687) to extend the period during which the purposes specified in section 7 (a) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act may be carried out by payments by the Secretary of Agriculture to producers.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) section 8 (a) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, is amended by—

(1) Striking out "January 1, 1938" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1942"; and

(2) Striking out "December 31, 1937" and inserting in lieu thereof "December 31, 1941."

(b) Section 7 (g) of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out "apportionments of funds available for carrying out the purposes specified in this section for the year 1936 may be made at any time during 1936, and apportionments for 1937 may be made at any time during 1937" and inserting in lieu thereof "any such apportionment of funds available for carrying out State plans during any year prior to 1942 may be made at any time prior to or during the year to which such plans relate."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] is recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, when the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act was passed it provided for administration by the States whenever the necessary legislation for administration by the States should be formulated and the necessary agencies made available. In the meantime the act stipulated that for a period of 2 years the Secretary of Agriculture might make payments directly to the farmers for purposes of soil rebuilding, soil conservation, and soil preservation. The act also stipulated the program must be turned back to the States within a period of 2 years; that is, prior to 1938.

The program has been administered in large measure in a satisfactory fashion up to the present time. It now appears that the States cannot possibly secure the necessary legislative action and set up the proper legislative machinery for conducting the program within the remaining time. This measure simply defers the period of compulsory return to the States from 1938 to 1942, extending it for a period of 4 years. In the meantime the program may be returned to the States at any time legislation is enacted and facilities are available for carrying out the program.

I think there could not possibly be any objection to extending this period. This bill simply makes it possible to continue the administration of this program until such time as proper steps are taken or until further disposition is made by Congress of the farm program.

I think this is sufficient explanation, Mr. Speaker, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. How much money has been disbursed under this activity?

Mr. JONES. I believe the appropriation last year was $440,000,000. I do not think anyone can tell exactly. Part of that is obligated and not yet expended. However, it will be approximately this amount.

Mr. TABER. Is not this rather a large sum of money for the Federal Treasury to be passing out as easily as this?

Mr. JONES. May I state to the gentleman it depends somewhat on the viewpoint. According to my philosophy and the philosophy of a number of others who seem to believe as I do, as long as the tariff system prevails in this country—and I am not discussing the merits or the demerits of the system—the producers of the great farm crops are entitled to a reasonable offset to the tariff. I believe this is largely in line with the declaration of both political parties, and is most generally recognized. I feel this amount of money is justified on that basis. I feel it is further justified on the basis that the entire country is interested in the conservation of our soil, looking down the range of the years. If we can preserve the fertility of the soil of this country for future generations, protect the streams, the soil, the valleys and the hills throughout the country, the money will be well spent.

Mr. TABER. Is it not a fact this money is simply paid out to farmers all over the country on an acreage basis largely, and not for the purpose of erecting or maintaining specific structures or for real soil-conservation purposes?

Mr. JONES. I do not quite agree with the gentleman on that. If the gentleman had occasion or opportunity to go out over the country as I have had to some extent, although not as much as I would like to, he would find they have done some very valuable work both in the areas which are subject to erosion by wind and the areas which are subject to erosion by water.

It has not been strictly on an acreage basis, though there have been several elements taken into consideration—the number of tilled acres, the productivity of the land, the nature of the land, the need of treatment, its location, and a number of other things. In practically every instance I have been able to check there has been real work required of the farmer as a condition to receiving these payments. He does not get them simply by varying his production or leaving some land out of production. He must treat the land, and there are different methods of treatment applying in different sections of the country; in some places contour listing, strip planting, cover crops, and various forms of soil-building crops suitable to the community. I think they have done a pretty good job of it.

Mr. TABER. Does he not get these payments largely without doing a single thing?

Mr. JONES. No; I do not think so.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman know of cases where he actually does something because he gets these payments?

Mr. JONES. I have known of many instances in the sections that I have visited. Of course, in some instances he gets paid by virtue of foregoing certain things, but in practically every place I have had an opportunity to investigate they required soil-building crops and practices, and the farmer must do these things. They check up through local committees and through the administrative officers to see that he has complied as a condition to receiving his payments.

Mr. TABER. My information is they simply make these payments to these people for the number of acres they have in certain crops, such as grass.

Mr. JONES. Such crops are taken into consideration, depending on whether they are soil-depleting or soil-building crops, and they require changes in them. They do not make the payments at the time they make the offer. They wait to see that the man has complied with the conditions before they make the payments.

Mr. TABER. Last fall they were making the payments without any previous contract whatever.

Mr. JONES. Yes; they cannot have contracts. They make the offer and the man shows compliance. Then they make payments in accord with the offer.

Mr. TABER. Without any previous contract with the farmer.

Mr. JONES. As was generally recognized in the light of the Supreme Court decision, they could not have an outright contract, or, at least, it was feared they could not, and this is the reason they did not have contracts. Under the old program, they had contracts; but in the light of the decision of the Supreme Court, it was not thought wise to put it in the form of a contract; in fact, the bill itself states there shall not be contracts. In order to avoid any question about it, it was so stipulated in the bill.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOPE. I simply want to ask the gentleman this question: As far as the amount of money is concerned, there will be just as much money required if this plan is turned over to the States for operation as will be needed if it is operated by the Federal Government?

Mr. JONES. Exactly. As the gentleman states, that factor is not involved.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the situation as I get it is somewhat like this: The Soil Conservation Act was passed a little over a year ago with the idea of paying out to the farmers certain benefits on somewhat of an acreage basis. Without any consideration of the facts relating to the market for a very large portion of agricultural crops and without definite requirements as to what the farmers are to do for this money, and without, so far as I can find from what investigation I have been able to make, any definite action on the farmer's part different from what he would pursue in his own interest in the development of his ordinary work, we are asked to continue a program which means the paying out of nearly $500,000,000 a year.

Frankly, if we are ever to get anywhere toward balancing the Budget, we ought to think very seriously about passing such a bill as this. I feel the farmer should be encouraged in every possible way, but when you have a situation where you are told we will have a dollar-and-seventy-five-cent wheat and that corn will be over $1 and the price of other crops in proportion, frankly, I do not see why we should be required to make an authorization of this character, extended over a period of 4 years from this date, and I feel the House should not go into this matter now.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman understands, as stated by the gentleman from Kansas, this does not extend the bill at all. It simply extends the period within which the National Government will handle it rather than turning it back to the States. The original act carries on throughout the years regardless.

Mr. TABER. Of course, the States would only act insofar as they wanted to in each State, and there would not be any compulsion on any State to carry on any program unless it felt it was in the interest of the people of that State to carry it on.

Mr. JONES. That is correct. The bill is not compulsory in any event.

Mr. Speaker, I do not agree in any sense that this is a subsidy for the farmer, nor do I regard the soil treatment as useless. If any man will go to China and see how they wasted their soil in that country so that as a result practically the entire population lives upon rice, I think we will reach the conclusion that we need a soil-conservation program. These gentlemen claim that they do not think that this is a soil-conservation program. I take issue with them on that, and I believe they will change their minds because they are both reasonable men, if they will visit other sections of the country. There may be a few instances where it has been abused, but in the main the farmers have been required to and have done some real conservation in farm practices in soil treatment and in crop planting as a condition to receiving these payments.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman not realize that this bill and the operations under it in no possible way takes care of soil conservation, and the way it is being handled it will accomplish nothing whatever along that line?

Mr. JONES. I disagree with the gentleman. The bill says that the payment shall be measured by and conditioned upon, first, their treatment or use of their land or a part thereof, for soil restoration, soil conservation, or the prevention of erosion; second, changes in the use of their land; third, a percentage of their normal production of any one or more agricultural commodities designated by the Secretary which equals that percentage of the normal national production of such commodity or commodities required for domestic consumption; and fourth, any combination of the above. That shows the purpose, and it is written into the law. I have heard for years men get upon the floor of this House and say if it is a matter of giving something to the farmer, if it is a matter of giving them a hand-out because they need it, "I do not know of any group that I would rather do it for."

I submit that is not the basis upon which this is asked.

The patron saint of the tariff-protection system of this country was Alexander Hamilton. In his Treasury report dated December 5, 1790, in what is known as his report on manufactures, he advocates a protective system, as far as I know for the first time in this country; but he at least was honest enough to follow his reasoning to its logical conclusion. As a part of that report he said that in that system in order to be fair to the farmer it would be necessary to take a portion of the receipts collected from tariff importations, or to take money out of the Treasury and make up to the farmer the unfairness that that system develops as to him.

Now, I ask these gentlemen or anyone else on the floor just how, if you do away with the farm program, the cotton grower, for instance, or any other surplus-producing farmer, who sells on a world market, whose prices are fixed by the world market, is going to be put on a basis of equality with the man who manufactures a tariff-protected article which that producing farmer must buy? That is one of the things that brought about this condition that made this kind of legislation necessary.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. FULMER. Is it not a fact that Hamilton, in that statement, made the statement that unless something was done to take care of the farmer's interest the results would be just what we have today?

Mr. JONES. Yes. He practically predicted this exact thing, as the gentleman suggests.

The most fundamental principle in this country is the principle of equality. That was written in the Declaration of Independence before we had a Constitution. In the very first paragraph of the Declaration of Independence, we find the statement that all citizens of this country, all men are created equal in the eyes of the law. We adopted a tariff system—right or wrong, I will not discuss that—that upset this balance; and the farm measure is simply an effort to bring back the balance; and in bringing it back also to do a fine national thing that every man, woman, and child in America is interested in—that is the protection and rebuilding of the soil of this country, and its maintenance, so that future generations who live in this coutnry will have the basic natural wealth that is necessary to any industry or any people.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Talking about equality, does the gentleman figure he is getting it by taking the taxpayers' money and paying it to one class?

Mr. JONES. Does the gentleman believe in the tariff system?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I asked the gentleman a question.

Mr. JONES. If I have $5 that belongs to you, and I hand it to you, I do not give you anything. I am simply making restitution. Our tariff system has taken from the farmers a part of what is due them, and we are simply returning to them their own, in a free country.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, assuming that the $5 you have belongs to you, is it right to give it to me?

Mr. JONES. I want to state this: If there are four people in a partnership and three of them draw something out of the firm's proceeds, does not the gentleman think the fourth one should be given his portion, to make them equal?

Mr. HOFFMAN. But if it belongs to the three and it is theirs, are you going to make it equal?

Mr. JONES. Does not the gentleman think the cotton grower and the wheat grower and the other surplus-producing farmers are also stockholders, interested in the Government? It is their fund as well as the others'. But industry has drawn its dividends indirectly through the tariff system. We ought to do one of two things: We ought to do away with the tariff system or give an offsetting payment to the farmer who produces our world market crops.

Mr. HOFFMAN. But are you helping it when you allow Argentine beef to come in here in competition with your own farmers?

Mr. JONES. The gentleman again is going into a defense of the system that would provide that of the four men, three should have dividends and the other should not. You cannot defend such a situation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I presume the gentleman would contend that the poultry raiser, who is an important part of agriculture, is entitled to his share of the money to rehabilitate agriculture. What has the committee done to help him?

Mr. JONES. I want to state that any farmer who is tilling the soil can have the benefits of this act.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But I said the poultry farmer is a large part of the farming industry. When is he going to get his share?

Mr. JONES. Most farmers in most sections raise a little poultry. If they are raising poultry as farmers, they get their benefit of the Soil Conservation Act as well as the others. Of course, if the man has made an industry, it may be on a somewhat different basis, depending on whether it involves the land. However, the poultry farmer has also been benefited by the improved conditions. But, of course, Mr. Hamilton did not pick out special types. He merely referred to farmers.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Never mind about Alexander Hamilton. Let us get down to times nearer than Alexander Hamilton; let us consider the present plight of the poultry farmer.

Mr. JONES. I think it is altogether fitting that the gentleman from Massachusetts should refuse to listen to the doctrines of Alexander Hamilton. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Oh, I will listen to that at some other time.

What I am trying to find out is what has been done for the second largest group in the agricultural industry, the poultry raisers.

Mr. JONES. Does not the gentleman know that the price of poultry is nearly twice as high to the producer as it was when his party went out of power?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Where does the gentleman get that information?

Mr. JONES. I get that information from the census records.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. He will find it is not true.

Mr. JONES. Let me say this to the gentleman: Here are farm prices: March 1933, poultry, 9.6 cents; eggs, 10.1 cents per dozen. March 1937, poultry, 14.4 cents; eggs, 19.9 cents. These are prices to the farmer.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I want to make a statement along that line.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield. Let me say to the gentleman that I was told of a fine rooster, a high-bred rooster—one that had character and personality [laughter]—that sold at 15 cents in 1932. He would bring much more than that now.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Now, if the gentleman will yield——

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. He knows that the Department of Agriculture itself said last November this industry was at the lowest ebb in 25 years in comparison to prices and feed costs.

Mr. JONES. Oh, the gentleman is in error. It said in relation to the price of feed they were temporarily adversely affected, but it did not say that prices of poultry and poultry products were lower.

Under the farm program there have been purchases of poultry and eggs, and I am sure that those in charge will do everything within reason to improve the situation for the producers of poultry.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] spoke of the high price of poultry feed. I would ask the gentleman from Texas if, in view of the very high prices the poultrymen are paying for feed, he does not think the recommendation I received in a letter yesterday from a poultryman that he should be paid back the tariff that he has himself paid on Argentine corn is worthy of consideration. I wonder if it is not wholly in line with his program as outlined in this act.

I wonder, too, if the gentleman has told the House how many States have already acted on their own responsibility under this plan, whether they intend to act, or if it is just merely a way to get around the situation. We, of course, are interested in that feature of it.

Lastly, I would say that I desire and have voted generally for these farm aids, but in the gentleman's pleading for this further assistance I am reminded that he is intending to report out a farm-tenancy bill. The farmer already can get his first mortgage, his second mortgage, his crop-production loan, and his seed loan. Now, if you are going actually to buy a farm for him and finance it further and permanently through this Soil Conservation Act, I ask him at this time is there anything else that can possibly be thought of that you could request Congress to do for the farmer?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. A moment ago the gentleman from Texas and I had a little argument about the condition of the poultry industry. I call attention to a statement made by one of the bureaus of the Department of Agriculture last November:

> The relation of chicken and egg prices to feed prices on November 15 this year (1936) is the most unfavorable to poultry producers since 1917.

That is the official record from the Department of Agriculture, and it is not at all in harmony with the statement of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. JONES. Talking about poultry prices, the poultry prices are nearly twice what they were in 1932. The report from which the gentleman read spoke of the relationship between feed prices and poultry prices.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Are not prices relative?

Mr. JONES. The gentleman understands, of course, that there was a drought last summer and a shortage of feed due to that cause, but that does not have anything to do with the fact that the prices of poultry and poultry products are nearly twice what they were in 1932.

Mr. GIFFORD. Let us not go back to 1932 and that date March 4 of 1933 so often sought for shelter, but let us go back to 1926, the recognized normal year.

Mr. JONES. Neither do I want to go back to 1932. I should like to help the gentleman forget it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the suspension of the rules and the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMPACT BETWEEN THE STATES OF IDAHO AND WYOMING

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 150, to permit a compact or agreement between the States of Idaho and Wyoming respecting the disposition and apportionment of the waters of the Snake River and its tributaries, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is this the bill about which the gentleman spoke to the Chair?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman consulted the official objectors on both sides?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I have.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not see any of the members from the Republican side of the committee. They are temporarily out of the Chamber. I must object to calling this bill up now. Perhaps if the gentleman will withhold his request until later there will not be any objection.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] that I have consulted the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH], and the objectors on that side as well as on this side, and I am informed there is no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Did the gentleman speak to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I spoke to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH]. Mr. Speaker, in deference to the request of the gentleman, I withdraw the request at this time.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BURDICK asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

REPORT OF JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Mr. MURDOCK or Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Judiciary Committee of the House may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the bill H. R. 2251.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, following the address of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], who will address the House at the conclusion of the call of the bills on the Private Calendar, that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] may be allowed to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] has concluded his address, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on April 13 following the address of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN], the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ANDERSON] may be permitted to address the House at this time for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

THE SIT-DOWN STRIKES

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, for the past 2 weeks we have heard from the floor of this House a great many speeches, both pro and con, pertaining to the sit-down strike situation and its various phases and aspects, and I, for one, listened with great interest to the placing of the blame and cause of this serious and unhappy condition. I have heard some expound the views that the Supreme Court, in its failure to pass on the Wagner Labor Act, was responsible; I also heard the Secretary of Labor, Miss Perkins, accused for her failure to act sooner; I have heard it said this was a communistic movement; labor blames capital, and in turn capital blames labor, and last but not least, some of the speakers blame our President.

It is easy to blame the President, just as easy as it is to overpraise him, and as a well-known correspondent recently said, there seems to be but two parties for factions in this great land of ours. Those who refuse the President any credit whatever for the many great accomplishments that he has fostered since the dark days of depression that we, the Democratic Party, inherited on the 4th day of March 1933, and then there is the class who put their brains in escrow and let him do all of their thinking. There is no middle class who are willing to admit the President's nobility of purpose and his sincerity in his many efforts to lift this country out of the depression and to once again restore confidence and tranquillity to this democratic Government of ours, and also to take issue with him when they believe him to be in error.

The one great object that is the main cause and real reason of the sit-down situation is that labor has lost confidence in capital and capital has also lost faith in labor, and both are walking hand in hand with fear and uncertainty.

I know from whence I speak. For years I represented labor in my section of the country. I have seen laboring men and their families go hungry day in and day out. I have seen them locked out of mills and factories, and in some cases have seen their families ejected from company-owned homes. I have seen them slugged and beaten unmercifully at the hands of paid thugs and strikebreakers when the strikers were carrying on a legal strike and picketing in an orderly manner. I have also seen strikes that I thought were unjustifiable, in some cases where working conditions were excellent and labor was paid a fair return for their labor, and, as a matter of fact, labor themselves were satisfied, but were led and inspired by worthless agitators, whose interest in labor was not foremost or paramount but second only to their own financial gain and greed for power. I am of the opinion that capital, on the whole, desires to pay a living, decent wage to labor, and labor is entitled to more than the bare necessities of life and a God-given right to enjoy a freedom that our forefathers fought for that we, all of the people, should enjoy without class or creed distinction or discrimination.

But in the last analysis the people of this Nation look to Congress as the great policy-determining and law-giving body. They have turned their attention upon us to inquire whether we approve, condone, or scorn the great national problem, or, I might say, national disgrace of the day. I refer to the crippling and deadly disease of sit-down strikes that are disrupting our economic order and causing untold losses to all parties concerned.

This is not a question of justifying the right of labor to strike in order to effectuate its demands, for the justice of striking as a means of helping labor to attain its ends has long been recognized, especially by progressive minds.

Neither are we called upon to discuss the merits or justice of collective bargaining. We recognize collective bargaining not only as just but as necessary and indispensable for labor to insure a decent respect for its rights and privileges. In short, we recognize and approve both the right to strike and to bargain collectively. Hence, if this present epidemic was merely a strike for the right to bargain collectively, or for any other lawful purpose, there would be little need for a prolonged discussion of the problem on the floor of this House.

But this present strike wave presents to us an entirely different problem; not only a problem but I say a challenge of the gravest nature. The time has come when we must officially decide whether a practice that is flagrantly unlawful shall be condoned and thereby approved, or if steps will be taken to preserve the dignity of law and the rights of property.

It is especially urgent that those in official positions, whose duty it is to treat with problems of labor, take action. It is all too evident that these persons are in a large measure responsible for the continuance of this epedemic either because they are incompetent or suffer from a lack of fortitude to use their official position that was intrusted to them for just such purposes.

The majority of us here present were never hesitant to condemn certain practices of big business, or to heap calumny upon the heads of great corporations because we believed they were not according fair treatment to the so-called "little fellow" or to labor.

We were never loath to loudly decry and denounce in the bitterest tones every act of big business that was even tainted with the stigma of foul play.

The basis of all our charges was that certain inalienable rights of men were being disregarded or even trampled in the dirt of economic servitude. But what are we doing today in the face of the most open and notorious disregard for law and inalienable rights in the whole history of the Nation?

Let us examine into the probable causes of the present crisis. First, there is the economic cause, the justice of which I do not question. No thinking person can, nor do I attempt to evade the frightful conditions that motivated the workers of the auto industry to strike. Their grievance was of the first magnitude. It was expedient that the employer recognize their right to bargain collectively with him, for only by that means would labor be a fit contestant in the struggle between labor and capital. These workers, no doubt, were entitled to a greater percentage of the fruits of their skill and labor, and they were equally entitled to employ every lawful means to win their fight.

The second factor to be considered in the justification of a strike is the gravity of its results. Too often we are wont to overlook entirely the importance of this element. In defending the justice of the great auto strike we should consider the effects thereof. First, there is the enforced unemployment of thousands of men in dire need of work for the sustainment of themselves and their families. Secondly, there are losses and vast inconvenience to millions of people depending upon prompt and uninterrupted delivery of motor cars and parts. And, thirdly, is the tremendous loss sustained by the employer who is forced into idleness.

The gravity of this strike no one can question. But in spite of the loss to employers, to employees, and the general public, probably a strike was justified.

Now we come to the third element in the justification of a strike—the means used in conducting it.

The sit-down strike is indefensible from a legal standpoint. There is no law to support it or precedent to sustain it. It is an unlawful conversion and seizure of another's property, even to the extent of violence. It is a shameful disregard for legal authority and the rights of property.

It has even gone to the point where the strikers vote whether they will comply with a decree of our courts.

My friends, we cannot permit a continued disrespect for our courts, lest we revert to rule by violence of the mob, which we so greatly abhor in other countries. That the elements of violence are present in these strikes is not to be denied. The intrusion upon property to which you have no right of entry and the unlawful retention thereof can be construed as violence.

But it has even gone further than that. These strikers have actually appropriated the property of their employer to their own use, and have refused to recognize the rights of ownership even to the point of denying the owner the right to enter his own premises. How can we sit idly by while such acts are threatening the very foundations of our legal and social order?

No consideration of this strike crisis would be complete without a brief review of its legal aspects.

As I have already stated, let us assume that the purposes of the sit-down strike are lawful—that is, to secure better working conditions or more desirable wages. Now, then, the question is whether the method adopted to carry out this strike is legitimate. If there were statutes dealing directly with the subject, the answer would depend almost entirely upon the construction of those statutes. But since the sit-down strikes are novel, at least, from a legal standpoint, we can only have recourse to analogy to establish the legality of this method of striking. We all know that the government of this country is founded upon the basis of the private ownership of property. Our Constitution specifies:

> No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

And that has been the basis of our legal doctrine of property and the rights of ownership. This idea has long been recognized as a personal heritage of every citizen.

The sit-down strike begins with a physical seizure of another's property. The truth of this no man can deny. The strikers have no right whatsoever to retain possession of the employer's property any more than the employer would have a right to forcibly hold the employee's home to compel him to meet his demands. The principle is identical. Therefore there can never be a legal justification for a sit-down strike under our system of law as it now stands.

These strikers are trespassers and may even be guilty of extortion, for they hold the property of another under threat of permanent occupancy unless he accedes to their demands. The conduct of these strikers operates to cancel every right they have to be on the premises of the employer, because they have ceased to discharge their duties as employees and are assuming a position never contemplated within the purpose for which they were employed.

Many people assert that the sit-down strikers are not trespassers because they have entered the employer's property under his permission. This position is legally indefensible. Even though one may enter under license or even invitation he may, by subsequent conduct become a trespasser. The law is not only clear on this point but it is universal.

In recent decisions the courts have held that the sit-down strikers were wrongfully in possession of the property of another and were ordered to vacate therefrom. But what happened? The strikers voted whether they would obey the decree, decided they would not, and remained in possession. Therefore, they have become conspirators under the law.

In Twenty-sixth New Jersey Law Reports, page 313, a conspiracy has been defined as—

> A confederation of two or more persons wrongfully to prejudice another in his property, person, or character or to injure public trade, or to effect public health, or to violate public policy, or to obstruct public justice, or to do any act in itself illegal.

Therefore, it is clear that a continuation of a sit-down strike after a court order has been issued on the ground of trespass is a combination to obstruct public justice, and becomes actionable not only as a contempt of court but as an indictable conspiracy.

In conclusion, I will truthfully admit that there is little by way of direct precedent as to the legality of a sit-down strike. The recent decisions represent the only attempts to discuss the basic legal principles. It is at present largely a matter of analogy.

In the light of the fundamental ideas of property rights and laws pertaining thereto, the following conclusion is warranted, namely: Sit-down strikes, which involve the physical seizure of another person's property, are in themselves illegal.

Therefore, I believe the time has come when this body should do all that it can to ascertain the causes of this continued and protracted lawlessness, and to do what we can to ebb the tide of this disease which threatens to impair or destroy the fiber and life of our legal system. If we fail in this crisis our democratic form of government may perish.

COMPACT BETWEEN THE STATES OF IDAHO AND WYOMING

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 150, to permit a compact or agreement between the States of Idaho and Wyoming respecting the disposition and apportionment of the waters of the Snake River and its tributaries, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Idaho if this joint resolution creates an obligation on these two States beyond giving them the right to enter into this compact?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. This is simply an authorization permitting these States to meet and agree, if they can. This gives the official Government sanction.

Mr. GREEVER. Is there anything in here which would affect the waters of the Yellowstone Lake?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Yes; that has been especially taken care of by amendment to the joint resolution, which reads as follows:

Provided further, That nothing in this act shall apply to any waters within the Yellowstone National Park.

That is specifically taken care of.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas the Snake River and its tributaries are interstate streams flowing through the States of Idaho and Wyoming; and

Whereas the above-named States are vitally interested in the possible development of the Snake River and its tributaries for irrigation, power, domestic, and navigation uses; and

Whereas the plans for future reclamation development must take into consideration the needs of the States and the water-right problems of interstate streams, and an agreement must be reached by the States concerned regarding the economic apportionment of waters of said interstate streams; and

Whereas it is desirable that a compact for the economic apportionment of the waters of the Snake River and its tributaries for irrigation, power, domestic, and navigation purposes be entered into by and between the said States of Idaho and Wyoming, and that the interests of the United States be considered in the drawing of said compact, by authorized representatives of each of said States and of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That consent of Congress is hereby given to the States of Idaho and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement not later than January 1, 1938, providing for an equitable division and apportionment among said States of the water supply of the Snake River and of the streams tributary thereto, upon conditions that a suitable person shall be appointed by the President of the United States, from the Department of the Interior, who shall participate in said negotiations as the representative of the United States and shall make report to Congress of the proceedings and of any compact or agreement entered into: Provided, That any such compact or agreement shall not be binding or obligatory upon any of the parties thereto unless and until the same shall have been approved by the legislatures of each of said States and by the Congress of the United States: And provided further, That the rights of other nonparticipating interested States shall not be jeopardized by such compact.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 3, line 2, after the words "compact", insert the following proviso: "Provided further, That nothing in this act shall apply to any waters within the Yellowstone National Park or the Grand Teton National Park or shall establish any right or interest in or to any lands within the boundaries thereof or any subsequent additions thereto."

Strike out the preamble.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 1245. An act for the relief of Malinda J. Mast and William Lee Mast.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 6, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

512. A letter from the Chairman, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, transmitting report of its activities and expenditures for the month of February 1937 (H. Doc. No. 197); to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. BLOOM: Committee on Foreign Affairs. H. J. Res. 304. Joint resolution authorizing Federal participation in the New York World's Fair, 1939; with amendment (Rept. No. 556). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ENGEL: A bill (H. R. 6141) to amend sections 2 and 3 of title I of the Social Security Act approved August 14, 1935; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mrs. NORTON (by request): A bill (H. R. 6142) to authorize the furnishing of steam from the Central Heating Plant to the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. DIES: A bill (H. R. 6143) to amend section 9 of Public Law No. 198 of the Seventy-fourth Congress; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. BLAND: A bill (H. R. 6144) to amend the Canal Zone Code; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6145) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to accept title to a certain parcel of land at Gaithersburg, Md.; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. RANDOLPH: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 313) to provide for the designation of the road (truck trail) being constructed by Civilian Conservation Corps enrollees through the famous Smoke Hole region, traversing a scenic area in the Monongahela National Forest, as the Robert Fechner Trail; to the Committee on Roads.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to consider their Senate Joint Resolution No. 27, concerning reforestation; to the Committee on Agriculture.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALESHIRE: A bill (H. R. 6153) to provide for the erection of a monument to the memory of Gen. Frederick Funston; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. BULWINKLE: A bill (H. R. 6154) granting a pension to Mary E. Councill; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6155) for the relief of Sadie N. Pike and Edward W. Pike; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BOILEAU: A bill (H. R. 6156) for the relief of George J. DeRouchey; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CANNON of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 6157) to authorize Austin H. Clark and Ellsworth P. Killip, of the United States National Museum, to accept certain decorations, respectively, from the Danish and French Governments; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. DEMPSEY: A bill (H. R. 6158) granting a pension to Osa Creley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DOWELL: A bill (H. R. 6159) granting an increase of pension to Matilda E. Richards; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. EDMISTON: A bill (H. R. 6160) granting an increase of pension to Lelia M. Marple; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GWYNNE: A bill (H. R. 6161) for the relief of George Wilson Lemmon; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HAMILTON: A bill (H. R. 6162) for the relief of Robert James Allen; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6163) granting an increase of pension to Annie S. Wynne; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McGROARTY: A bill (H. R. 6164) for the relief of John Micklos; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 6165) for the relief of Francis M. Dent; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6166) for the relief of Frank Peters; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1578. By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petition of the House of Representatives of the Ninety-second General Assembly of Ohio, endorsing the President's Supreme Court proposal; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1579. Also, petition of Mrs. Eli Friedl, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Finnell, and Lilias Decius, of Roscoe, Ohio, urging that no law be passed to disturb or abridge the religious rights and privileges of all our people; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1580. By Mr. CULKIN: Petition of Thornton Chard and others, of Cazenovia, N. Y., opposing the proposal of the President for changes in the United States Supreme Court; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1581. Also, petition of Mrs. J. H. TenEyck Burr, of Casenovia, N. Y., opposing the proposal of the President for changes in the United States Supreme Court; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1582. By Mr. COFFEE of Washington: Petition of the Twenty-sixth District Democratic Club, Pierce County, Tacoma, Wash., endorsing the President's proposals for reform of the Federal judiciary and opposing any amendment to the Constitution in connection therewith; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1583. Also, petition of the Northside Grange, No. 727, of Seattle, Wash., endorsing the President's proposals for reform of the Federal judiciary; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1584. Also, resolution of group of prominent citizens of Tacoma, Wash., Ross Nisonger, chairman, urging Congress forthwith to vote for the President's judiciary reform proposal; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1585. By Mr. COLDEN: Resolution adopted by the Compton Chamber of Commerce, Compton, Calif., urging the appropriation of funds in the bill for flood relief now pending in the House for the completion of flood-control work already begun on West Compton Creek, in Los Angeles County, Calif.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1586. By Mr. CURLEY: Resolutions of the New York Printing Pressmen's Union, No. 51, representing 3,000 members, in support of the President's proposal to reform the judiciary; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1587. By Mr. FITZPATRICK: Petition of the New York Printing Pressmen's Union, No. 51, I. P. P. and A. U., supporting President Roosevelt's proposal affecting the Supreme Court of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1588. By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Petition of J. D. Edmundson, of Waxahachie, and F. E. Thompson, of Itasca, Tex., favoring House bill 5030; to the Committee on Pensions.

1589. By Mr. KEOGH: Petition of Lehr & Lehr Truckmen, Inc., Long Island City, N. Y., concerning the Pettengill bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1590. By Mr. MARTIN of Colorado: Senate Joint Memorial No. 7 of the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, favoring increased Federal relief; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1591. By Mr. PFEIFER: Petition of Lehr & Lehr Truckmen, Inc., Long Island City, N. Y., concerning the Pettengill bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1592. Also, petition of Kindergarten-6B Teachers' Association of New York City, urging favorable action on the Harrison-Black-Fletcher bill (H. R. 2288); to the Committee on Education.

1593. By Mr. THOMASON of Texas: Petition of residents of Valentine, Tex., urging favorable action on House bill 2257, relating to old-age pensions; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1594. By Mr. KING: Concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, requesting the Secretary of Agriculture to render aid to coffee planters under the Soil Conservation Act; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1595. By the SPEAKER: Petition of Abraham Rosenberg, concerning patents; to the Committee on Patents.

1596. Also, petition of the Board of Commissioners of the City of Newark, N. J., urging the enactment of the United States Housing Act of 1937, being Senate bill 1685 and House bill 5053; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1597. Also, petition of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Monroe, N. Y., requesting consideration of their Resolution No. 73, with reference to prohibiting sale of and shipments in interstate commerce of goods produced with child labor; to the Committee on Labor.

1598. Also, petition of city of Cleveland, requesting consideration of their resolution file no. 106218, with reference to Work Progress Administration; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1599. Also, petition of the North Dakota Labor Association, Inc., with reference to the change of the United States Supreme Court; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1600. Also, petition of the National Automobile Dealers Association, with reference to seizing and holding possession of private property; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, APRIL 6, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We draw near to Thee, our Heavenly Father, with grateful testimony for Thy goodness and mercy. All through the ages Thou hast been striving with the spirits of men. It is not the unity or the potency of steel, but the spirit of the divine Carpenter that works in transfigured lives and in nations reborn. We pray for the divine blessing to rest upon all powers which are counseling together to disarm the bloody hand of war. Merciful God, we pause where poppies grow row upon row. Upon our ears fall the sounds of marching streets; there are the widows, the mothers, and the orphans broken and alone, the agonizing victims of war's unbridled fury. Oh, that bread should be so dear and flesh and blood so cheap. May the arms of the Republic never fail them. Be Thou the repose of their minds, the joy of their hearts, and the rest of their souls. Almighty God, we pray Thy benediction may be with all races, and may the ends of the earth come together in the name of the brotherhood of man. Oh, may peace rest like a white shaft across the breast of the world and may the drumbeats of our own land be unity, brotherhood, and good will. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5299. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange certain lands and water rights in Inyo and Mono Counties, Calif., with the city of Los Angeles, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 4985. An act to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes.

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Disabled American Veterans is an organization composed of World War veterans who suffered disability or injury during the World War and whose disabilities and injuries are a matter of record in the Army and Navy Departments. They are all service-connected veterans and necessarily their membership is small compared with other veterans' organizations. Notwithstanding this limited membership the Disabled American Veterans is one of the most active and effective veterans' organizations. Although I am unworthy of membership in this great organization, I have the honor of being an humble member. Without criticizing the publication of any other veterans' organization—they are all good—I can truthfully say that the Disabled American Veterans has the best publication that is issued on veterans' affairs. It is published at national headquarters, Cincinnati, Ohio, semimonthly. Recently this official organ, carrying out its unselfish object of giving all veterans—whether members of their organization of not—the very best and latest available information on veterans' affairs, had prepared a digest of all State laws; the compilation discloses all the benefits veterans and their dependents are entitled to receive under the laws of all the States. I am preparing a similar compilation disclosing benefits to veterans extended by the Federal Government.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that I be permitted to revise and extend my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and to insert therein the digest of State benefit laws as compiled by the Disabled American Veterans and the compilation of Federal benefits to veterans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

The was no objection.

GUFFEY-VINSON COAL BILL

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4985) to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. DOUGHTON, CULLEN, FRED M. VINSON, TREADWAY, and CROWTHER.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein extracts from speeches of Hon. Jesse Jones, extracts from the writings of Joseph B. Kennedy, former Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, and extracts from the publications of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, how much of the RECORD will these extracts occupy?

Mr. BULWINKLE. About two typewritten pages.

Mr. RICH. That is a good deal of the RECORD.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Oh, no; it is not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute to ask the majority leader a question in regard to the program.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, on tomorrow, Calendar Wednesday, the call rests with the Judiciary Committee. I wish the majority leader would inform the House what bills the committee expects to bring up tomorrow.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I do not have complete information, but I will make such a statement before adjournment today. My opinion is it will be the so-called court bill, concerning matters involving constitutional questions coming before the courts. I do not know definitely, as I have not talked with the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman from Texas will give us the full program before we adjourn tonight, I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. RAYBURN. I will be pleased to do that. I may say further to the gentleman from New York that the chairman of the Rules Committee, Mr. O'CONNOR, will present some rules on Thursday.

Mr. SNELL. I thank the gentleman.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech I delivered over the radio last night on the necessity of passing an antilynching bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter received from a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

(Mr. MAVERICK and Mr. RIGNEY asked and were given unanimous consent to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement of my own published in the United States News on the 5th of this month.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the call of the calendar and the special orders heretofore entered I may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA MINIMUM-WAGE LAW (H. DOC. NO. 198)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered printed:

APRIL 6, 1937.

The honorable the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: Fourteen years have elapsed since the Supreme Court by its decision in the case of Adkins v. Children's Hospital (261 U. S. 525), rendered the District of Columbia minimum-wage law inoperative. I submit herewith the opinion of the Attorney General which makes clear that the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the case of West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, overruling the previous decision, has rendered the statute once more effective.

In view of the long interval during which it was impossible to administer the statute many developments have taken place, and the Congress may desire to consider whether the act should be administered in accordance with its present terms or whether any amendments or other changes are desirable. Under these circumstances I have suggested to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia that they delay, at least until the first of May, the appointment of the Minimum Wage Board for which the act makes provision.

Should no action be taken by the Congress in regard to this matter, I assume that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia will appoint a Minimum Wage Board and that such other steps as may be necessary to administer the act will be taken, including the preparation of estimates for a suitable appropriation.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ENTRANCE INTO WORLD WAR AND THE PROPOSED REORGANIZATION OF THE FEDERAL JUDICIARY

The SPEAKER. Under the special order the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BIGELOW] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BIGELOW. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in addressing the House this afternoon is to suggest what I think to be a happy and a right way out of the Supreme Court mess that we are in, but first I want to pause to recognize this twentieth anniversary of our entrance into the World War.

NEVER AGAIN

There will soon be marchers out on the Avenue as though we were still proud of having entered the war. I am proud of the heroism with which our boys entered that inferno, but I am also proud of the heroism of a little group of men, three of whom are still left in this Congress, who, 20 years ago, faced a war-mad mob outside and voted "No" on the question of entering the war. The moral courage of their votes is comparable with the physical courage of facing fire on the battlefield. The verdict of mankind, I believe, will give immortal palms to these men who voted "No" 20 years ago. As for the rest of us who were swept along with the hysteria of the times, I think the best way for us to commemorate this day is to bow our heads in penitent contrition and make atonement by a vow to ourselves, the Members of this House, our constituents, our country, and the God of our fathers that we shall never again vote for a conscription act to send American boys into war slavery, and never ship any more American soldiers overseas to fight in other people's wars. [Applause.]

WHY RIDE ROUGHSHOD?

As for the Court issue, I have been impressed of late with a fact I did not realize at first. It has been borne in on a great many people, as the result of their long training and education, that the Supreme Court, at least in their minds, is a very sacred institution, and, aside from the economic royalists, these sincere people are shocked and deeply troubled by the President's proposal. They feel as though we are assailing something almost as sacred to them as their religion. It seems to them, to use a slang phrase, the President has pulled a fast one, that what he proposes has the character of legislative legerdemain, that by a surprise move he is trying to put something over on the people. I do not feel this way, but it has impressed me, through the mail and from other sources, that there are far too many people who do feel this way to be ignored. I may feel they are foolish, I may feel they are in a minority, but I have been asking myself of late, why ride roughshod over them? Why not have consideration for their sensibilities? What are they asking? The most they ask is that this proposal be formulated as a constitutional amendment, and that it be submitted to the people of this country for a vote.

TAKE THE VOTE THIS SUMMER

I had not favored this, because I think in almost all our minds we have thought of this process of submission as a vote by the State legislatures, and it did seem to me very likely that if this course were taken, it might be a matter of 10 years or more, although the proposal itself might be overwhelmingly popular, as I think is the case with the child-labor amendment now. But on reflecting, and particularly on reading the history of the debates in connection with the submission of the twenty-first amendment, I have come to the conclusion it is entirely within the power of this Congress to have what would be substantially a referendum vote of the people of this country on this proposal and to have it this summer.

As you know, the Constitution gives us the alternative of submitting amendments to legislatures or to conventions to be held in the States. There are law students who contend that article V of the Constitution gives us the power, as a Congress, on our own authority to go into the States, organize, and hold these elections without regard to the State legislatures. I am not proposing this. This is an uncharted sea. It would raise controversies that we had better avoid, but I do want to present briefly to the House the suggestion that it is still possible for us to pass an act by which we can contrive to have what would be virtually a direct referendum on this proposal.

CONGRESS HAS THE POWER

This is not new. It was thrashed out when the twenty-first amendment was submitted. My proposal is that we formulate the amendment to abolish the life term of judges and provide that Congress may have the power to fix an age for the compulsory retirement of judges, and then pass an act providing that this proposal shall be submitted to conventions—not legislatures but conventions—within the States. When we did this in the case of the twenty-first amendment, we fixed a limit during which these conventions had to be held. If it was constitutional for us to fix a limit then, we can fix it now, and so I am proposing an act of this Congress to say that this proposal shall be submitted to conventions in the States and that it shall be submitted this summer.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BIGELOW. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The gentleman refers to "passing an act." As I recall it, the proposed constitutional amendment provides for its being referred to conventions in the States.

Mr. BIGELOW. Oh, yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I do not understand why we would have to pass any legislation in addition to the constitutional amendment.

Mr. BIGELOW. There would have to be some enabling act. We would have to indicate by some action that it should be referred to conventions in the States.

We would have to exercise the alternative the Constitution gives us.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIGELOW. I am afraid that my time will not permit me to yield. In this act what I propose is this, that while we shall not assume the authority, though some people say we have it, to dictate to the States as to how this election shall be held, we might in the act suggest to them, and the suggestion, if they felt it was reasonable, they would probably follow, that nominations be by petitions for delegates to these State conventions, and that in the petition the candidate state whether he is for or against the proposal. Then let the statement of the candidate be printed directly upon the ballot under his name so that when the voting occurs the people will be not really voting for the candidate but be voting directly on the proposal. In that event the delegates would have much the characters of Presidential electors. They would be mere automata in the convention to ratify the verdict of the people at the polls. It seemed to me that if in this act we went a step further and agreed to pay the expenses of these conventions out of the Federal Treasury, there could be no doubt that without assuming the authority, which is questionable, for us to hold these elections ourselves, the State legislatures would respond.

LET THE PEOPLE DECIDE

All over the land they are saying let us vote on this thing, let us vote on it. Suppose we say to them, very well, then, let us have the vote, and suppose we have it in this way. It seems to me that the Members of this House would be very glad to have that solution of the problem, that the country would be glad to have the solution, and in view of the fact that we might have this virtual referendum this summer and have it disposed of with all reasonable dispatch, it is a great responsibility for us to turn that possibility down and solve it the other way by our own vote. And if it were done in the way that we are now thinking of doing it, it might well be that the new Court that is organized will not have the cordial support of the people as it might enjoy were we to consult the people and let them decide.

For my part, I am with the President in his proposal. I think the thing should be done, but I am an old referendum man. Twenty-five years ago, with ROBERT CROSSER, now in this House, I helped to put the referendum provisions into the Constitution of the State of Ohio, and it has seemed to me that if there is a referendum way of settling this court issue this way should be taken. [Applause.]

SUPPOSE THEY DON'T WANT A VOTE

But it may be said that I overestimate the numbers of those who are sincerely troubled about this matter. Well, suppose this is so. Suppose that the opposition is chiefly the opposition of economic royalists and die-hard partisans and that this opposition would prevent the State legislatures from calling these State conventions and thus frustrate the plan I have outlined. Then I would say: If we offered the opposition a fair plan of going directly to the people, and if they scorned it and blocked it, we would come back to this House next January and the very first thing done should be to put through the President's proposal without scruple. If we are dealing with those who refuse a chance for an honest, popular vote when it is offered to them, we should deal with them as the exposed foes of democracy. We would no longer listen to their lachrymose defense of the Court. We should know that they like the Court because it happens to be a refuge for their privileges, and that they hate democracy as the leveler of exploited wealth.

But, though a Democrat, I do not think so ill of Republicans, nor even of many who may be classed as economic royalists.

I believe that democracy is the honest faith of the most of us, and that whatever the outcome, we would all be reconciled to any changes in Court or Constitution for which the verdict of the voters had been given.

THE SPIRIT OF OUR FATHERS

It is right that men should be anxious to hold what is good in our world. But, if there is no progress, what is good cannot remain good. The true conservatives must be venturing progressives. Our forefathers were that kind of men. Had the fortune of war gone against them, they would have been the traitors of Old England, not the patriots of New America. King George said to them, "I was born to be your King, and you were created subjects of mine." Our fathers said, "That's a lie; all men were created equal." Think what their courage did for us.

They were men who broke with the past to win a better future. They dared to rule themselves. Their advice to us, if they could speak, would be not to follow the letter of their laws but the spirit of their example.

When we find ourselves drawing apart into classes, or growing bitter over our differences of opinion, what better solvent can we find, what surer basis of accord and social reconciliation, than to submit ourselves to that supreme authority which our fathers named in the first words of their Magna Carta: "We the people of the United States."

So, my friends, I would like to see the President's proposal held in abeyance, while giving the people a chance this summer to say what changes they want in Court or Constitution. If the President's proposal comes before this House, I shall vote to substitute this plan for it, if I have opportunity; but, if this plan cannot be substituted, I shall vote to enlarge the Court, but I shall do so reluctantly. I prefer the more democratic way.

POWER OF CONGRESS TO CALL CONVENTIONS

In the proposed plan there is no assumption of the power of Congress to acutally conduct the election of conventions in the States.

This was avoided, not because I am not well persuaded that such power is reasonably implied in article V, but because it is a disputed matter and would invite controversy.

In a brief which was published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD December 7, 1932, Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer said:

> It follows that, having the expressed power to choose the convention method of ratification, the Congress has by implication all powers necessary and proper to make the exercise of its choice effective and to assure that its selected course will not be frustrated. This necessarily would include the enactment of all appropriate provisions to enable the organization of the conventions as representative assemblages, able and qualified to receive and vote upon the proposed amendment.

Mr. James M. Beck, whose speech on the subject appears in the RECORD on the same date, controverted this view.

Below are listed others who have contributed to this discussion.

TWO VIEWS OF THE AMENDING PROCESS

According to one view, an act of ratifying an amendment is an act of States. All Congress may do is to propose amendments. It is for the States to say whether or not, in the exercise of their residual sovereignty under the Constitution, they shall ratify, reject, or ignore the proposals of Congress. For the Congress to conduct elections of conventions would therefore be regarded as an invasion of States' rights.

According to the other view, the process of amending the Constitution is a Federal process the authority for which is derived wholly from the Constitution. It is not States that ratify amendments but the people, who may act through State legislatures or through conventions in the States, as Congress may determine.

THE PRACTICAL USE OF CONVENTIONS

Whatever may have been in the mind of the framers of the Constitution in providing two different ways of ratification—by State legislatures or by conventions—we can see a practical advantage in having an alternative.

Suppose legislatures refused even to consider amendments proposed by Congress. Yet when the Constitution says that Congress may propose amendments, it must be presumed that there is some way of making sure that there shall be some competent body to which the proposed amendments may go. Otherwise Congress would be frustrated, and the power granted by the Constitution could not be exercised.

Congress cannot demand ratification. It is the right of the people to ratify or reject. But Congress, it would seem, has a right to an answer from the people. The right to propose is the right to propose to somebody.

LEGISLATURES CANNOT BLOCK THE PROCESS

Though State legislatures might refuse even to notice the proposals of Congress, Congress would still have the right to resort to the convention method of ratification. Whether the people of a State were assembled in convention under State law or by act of Congress, if the election process insured full democratic representation, the action of the convention would be the act of the sovereign people within the State. It would not be a State action. It would be the act of the sovereign people within the State, and would seem to satisfy both the letter and the spirit of the Constitution. Though it has never been done, it would seem that Congress could do it; that it could call these conventions and conduct the election on its own authority and without the cooperation of the State legislatures. Thus this alternative method holds the way open for Congress to complete the amending process despite any possible indifference or opposition from State legislatures.

States are sovereign for many purposes. Congress, of course, could not invade these sovereign rights of States. It could not go into States and hold elections of State legislatures.

WOULD THE COURT OBJECT?

But if we agree that, once the Constitution was adopted, the right of amendment provided in the Constitution became a right to be exercised not with the consent of States as such but with the consent of the people within the States, then it would seem that it could make no difference whether these conventions were organized by State legislatures or by Congress, so long as they were true democratic assemblages in the creation of which all the voters had a voice. Since the Constitution is completely silent and gives no hint as to how these conventions are to be created, either way of creating them should be permissible. If Congress did exercise this power, and if an amendment were ratified by admittedly democratically elected bodies, it is hardly conceivable that any court would declare such a verdict of the people invalid.

POWER NOT NOW ASSERTED

This posing of the question is introduced here because a situation might at any time and soon occur when Congress would feel impelled to assume and use this power. It is well that we should have in mind the possibility of such action. But it is not proposed at this time for the reason that the State legislatures would probably act at this time in calling these conventions in the States if Congress were to request it. The opponents of the President's Court proposal have been so loud in their demand for a chance to have something to say about it that they could hardly back away if they were offered a vote on the issue. They would know that if they did not readily agree to a popular vote on the subject the insincerity of their opposition would be exposed and Congress would certainly act and give the President what he asks.

Those interested in a further study of this question of the power of Congress to call conventions into being for the consideration of amendments will find some direction to the study in the following references.

Roy L. Deal, pamphlet.

The SPEAKER. Under a prior order of the House, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, 21 years ago I first visited Washington. The occasion was my return from Lake Mohonk, N. Y., where I had taken part in a college contest on the subject of peace.

My effort was entitled "The Modern Paradox." In it I held that war was a paradox, condemned in the abstract, but accepted and explained when it came to us. Declaimed against one day but enlisted for, the next. Within a year the Congress voted for a declaration of war. And before the war was over the paradox was proved in my case, too. I went, but I hold no wounds before you today. War left me untouched, except for the deep, deep passion that time has not erased to carry on the war to end war itself.

It matters little to anyone else the hesitancy with which I approach this subject today. In the presence of men whose names in this Chamber have become one with the work for peace, I confess I feel very, very small for the task I have set for myself, that of offering a few remarks on the twentieth anniversary of the declaration of war.

But I am steeled for the task by the memories of men who, in the words of Woodrow Wilson, "were once our comrades and are now gone." This body, the Congress, the Nation, responded to an appeal "to fight for those things which we had always carried nearest to our hearts—for democracy, for the rights of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own governments, for the rights and liberties of small nations * * *." And I have no words of censure for those who voted for that resolution 20 years ago today.

But after the war was over, on Memorial Day 1919, when Woodrow Wilson visited an American cemetery in France, he said:

> I beg you to realize the compulsion I am under. * * * I advised Congress to declare that a state of war existed. I sent these lads over here to die. Shall I—can I—ever speak a word of counsel which is inconsistent with assurances I gave them when they came over? It is inconceivable. There is something better, if possible, that a man can give than his life, and that is his living spirit to service that is not easy, to resist counsels that are hard to resist, to stand against purposes that are difficult to stand against, and to say, "Here stand I, consecrated in spirit to men who were once my comrades and are now gone, and who have left me under bonds of eternal fidelity."

Those bonds today compel us on many matters. Fair treatment for the widows and orphans of those who bore the brunt of battle? Yes. Decent treatment for those whose bodies will never be the same again? Yes. But no less compelling are the bonds we took to carry on a war to end war. And because I feel as I think Woodrow Wilson felt, that those men sealed their part of the compact with their lives, we have an irrevocable contract. They performed their part.

Peace, like liberty, is not the birthright of an indifferent people. War will never be abolished by a single stroke, but there are measures which lessen the likelihood of war and which increase the chance of peace. And in this frame of mind—deep obligation to those who gave their all and frank confession of the feebleness of my efforts—I want to call your attention to House Joint Resolution 238, the unknown-soldier amendment, which proposes to restore to the people the right to declare war abroad.

This unknown-soldier amendment grew out of a pre-Christmas talk given before the Fortnightly Club in Rapid City a few years ago. I had been asked to talk on the psychology of peace. In developing the topic I said that it seemed to me there was a psychology of peace, there was a will for peace, but it needed a means of expression. To provide that means I suggested what I have since come to call the unknown-soldier amendment. Since then I have come to know how far behind originality I was. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BIGELOW], I understand, years ago organized a league for a war referendum. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], at least before I ever proposed the form of my amendment, had introduced in Congress proposals for a referendum on declarations of war. To them and to other distinguished Members of this body I frankly yield all claims of priority and I here acknowledge my great admiration for their sincere, earnest, effective work in the cause of peace.

And yet, because of the wartime lesson that "each must do his bit", and because I believe that in great causes final success comes from merging the efforts of many people, I introduced the unknown-soldier amendment some days ago. I want to call your attention to the text of it, not with the idea that it is perfect but with the idea that possibly it will help to hammer out the form in which an acceptable war referendum can be written.

The unknown-soldier amendment starts with this simple sentence:

> The right to declare war abroad is hereby restored to the people.

Then it has three brief sections designed to make that effective and practical. They are:

> 1. The Congress shall not declare war, except the territory of the United States be actually invaded or attacked, until a proposal for a declaration of war shall have been approved by a majority of those voting in a special national election in which all citizens over the age of 18 years may participate.
> 2. The President, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, shall not send armed expeditionary forces in excess of 25,000 men more than 500 miles beyond the territory of the United States except in movement between portions of that territory until after such a declaration of war by the people.
> 3. The Congress shall provide for carrying out the provisions of this article by appropriate legislation.

This amendment does not interfere with defensive preparedness. On the contrary, it makes clear that our preparedness is for defense and not aggression.

As Calvin Coolidge said in his last Armistice Day address, a speech widely circulated by the Navy League, "to be ready for defense is not to be guilty of aggression." But you know and I know that the difficult thing in preparedness is to convince the other fellow that you are not arming against him. Indeed the very fact of your arming is a spur to him. Witness the madness in Europe today.

But in that same Armistice Day speech Coolidge also said:

> The whole essence of war is destruction. It is the negation and the antithesis of human progress. No good thing—> ever came out of war that could not better have been secured by reason and conscience.

He said—

The unknown-soldier amendment—as do all the war-referendum proposals—points to the road away from war. It accepts the statement, made over and over by so many people, that the people want peace. "More of peace and none of war," Harding said at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier. "I hate war," the President has said, and the common people have echoed that the world around.

Well, this unknown-soldier amendment proposes to implement the will of the people in this country for peace. This gives the people a way to say they are for peace or to say if the issues are worth war. It lets the people who will pay—the boys; yes, even those of 18; the fathers and mothers whose homes will be broken—it lets them say whether issues in any contest are worth sending America's sons to a foreign battlefield again.

"WHY QUIT OUR OWN?"

The particular wording of this amendment overcomes the objection that we would wait in case of attack until an enemy had come to our shores. It creates a zone 500 miles at sea in which America's first line of defense could prevent any invading force from ever reaching an American harbor. One boat might slip by, two boats might slip by, but England has never been invaded in almost a thousand years with only a narrow channel from the enemy. An army to damage America would have to come in hordes or the city police would march them from the gang plank to the town jail.

George Washington saw that situation many years ago, and in his Farewell Address said:

> Our detached situation invites and enables us to choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel. Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand on foreign ground?

The text of this amendment permits America to take its place in the family of nations. The time may come again when some mad leader may draw the sword against humanity itself. I realize full well that Maude Royden, brilliant English woman, has said that if war should come again, America can do most and best for humanity by staying out. And probably that would be the people's verdict if we let them speak. But if not, if again the conscience of America should speak in terms of force, then America could, under this amendment, let the still small voice of conscience speak in the mighty mandate of a whole people, determined and unafraid.

The simple device of the 25,000 expeditionary forces would permit cooperation in an international police force, would permit participation in controlling such a thing as the Boxer uprising. But the prohibition that no more than 25,000 armed men could be sent more than 500 miles from our shores without a mandate from the people would prevent our going into war without the express consent and choice of the people.

GIVES TIME TO COOL OFF

At first the idea of a war referendum had to run the gantlet of arguments about delay. But that has largely passed. Under modern methods of communication a referendum could be held in short time, only too short a time, I would fear. For no great danger could come to America because we delayed sending soldiers abroad until we had a referendum. Indeed, history would say that a little reflection, a little time to cool off, would have saved humanity many heartaches. The delay argument is especially avoided under the 500-mile-zone feature of this amendment, coupled with the fact that no declaration of war is needed to repel attack or invasion.

Many proposals for peace are concerned with war profits. And every attempt runs into trouble when it comes to curbing the conscienceless greed of those who dabble in devices of death. Only a new heart can ever cure that. But as near as anything can, this amendment will put a stumbling block in the way of the war profiteers. It will say, "Sell, sell all you please, but remember that before you get American boys to go out again as bill collectors at a dollar a day and the risk of their lives you have got to justify your cause to them. You will never again send them off singing 'I don't know yet what the war's about, but I'll bet, by jings, I'll soon find out.'" They did not find out; but if you do not tell them the next time, they can vote "no" if you restore this power to the people.

NO ROOM FOR PARTISAN PROFIT

My time is nearly up. There is among us no division of purpose. I claim no loyalty to the ideals of peace that I do not freely concede to every Member of this body. On no subject that comes here for debate is there less partisanship than on this question. The cause is too great; our common ties of human fellowship too sacred.

This intense earnestness leads me to a great hope. It is this: That the Members I have mentioned, Mr. BIGELOW and Mr. LUDLOW and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. MCREYNOLDS; the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, Mrs. ROGERS; the gentleman from New York, Mr. FISH; the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. KNUTSON; the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. BOILEAU; and all others who are devoted to the cause of peace, may agree upon the text of some war-referendum amendment that can be passed by the Seventy-fifth Congress in this session and submitted to the people.

There is no room for pride of authorship, no room for partisan profit, in such a matter as this.

We went into the World War—the war to end war—on a nonpartisan basis. That was the way we waged the fight. And the men who went there went under the pledge of a united effort, sealed their compact with their lives, and left us all "under bonds of eternal fidelity."

We could not have played our part in that war on the basis of partisanship; we cannot win the battle for peace on a basis of partisanship. They tell us that another world war is in the making. The correspondents are off to the wars again. But there is yet time in America to do this thing: To give back to the people this delegated power—the power to declare war abroad—and to let them say whether the issues are ever worth sending our sons to the shambles of a foreign battlefield again. This is government by consent of the governed, for which we went to war 20 years ago today.

WAR DOES THESE THINGS

Sometimes I wonder if we have forgotten. Twenty years is a generation. Boys born since the armistice would be called in a draft tomorrow. And it would take them—take young boys and make them old men before their time.

It would take their sensitive nervous systems and stretch them out so that they could never be the same, creating a debt that nothing compensates.

It would take the swiftest boy on the football squad and turn him into a shuffling, unwanted wreck of the man that might have been. War does that.

It takes the keenest mind in the class and returns him with a slow stare and a palsied brain to spend the rest of his days in a neuropsychiatric ward.

It takes bright, happy women and makes them lonely mothers with bright gold stars on their cloaks but dull, deep wounds in their hearts that never heal.

It takes a whole world's economic structure and puts it out of joint with money debts to pay and public morals to rebuild and a shattered society to restore.

But why go on?

A nice war? There is no nice war. War is dirty, damnable business always. Wars end? Wars do not end while wounded men live on; not while orphaned children miss the counsel and help an uncrippled father could give.

We shall never abolish war by a single measure. Peace, like liberty, is won only by eternal vigilance. But if we keep the channels of information open, if we let the people know the truth, and then give them the power to speak, we will have gone a long way on the road away from war.

Let us give control of the war power back to the people. We can do this, now! [Applause.]

RETURN OF ENROLLED BILL

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 8

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to return to the House of Representatives the enrolled bill (H. R. 1089) entitled "An act for the relief of Charles M. Perkins."

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR of New York). Under the rules today is set apart for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. The Clerk will call the first bill on the calendar.

MILO MILLISER

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3954) for the relief of Milo Milliser.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HALLECK and Mr. HANCOCK of New York objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

GOLDIE DURHAM

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 937, for the relief of Goldie Durham.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $50 to Goldie Durham, on account of injury sustained in an automobile accident caused by a truck driver employed with the Civilian Conservation Corps on Highway No. 69 near Lindale, Tex., August 2, 1936.

With the following committee amendments:

In line 6, after the word "Durham", insert "of "Tyler, Tex."

In line 10, after the figures "1936", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BURTON P. CORDLE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 988, for the relief of Burton P. Cordle.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Burton P. Cordle, of Memphis, Tenn., the sum of $5,000. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages sustained by the said Burton P. Cordle on account of personal injuries received by his minor son, Otis Cordle, when struck, on October 18, 1935, in Memphis, Tenn., by a United States mail truck.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "to", strike out "Burton P. Cordle" and insert "the legal guardian of Otis Cordle, a minor."

Line 9, after the word "States", strike out the remainder of the line.

Line 10, after the word "by", strike out "his minor son" and insert the word "said."

Page 2, line 1, after the word "truck", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill for the relief of Otis Cordle, a minor."

WILLIAM A. M'MAHAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1254, for the relief of William A. McMahan.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William A. McMahan, of El Paso, Tex., the sum of $10,000 for permanent disability resulting from disease contracted in line of duty while in the employ of the Federal Government.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That notwithstanding the provisions and limitations of sections 15 to 20, both inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to receive and consider, when filed, the claim of William A. McMahan, of El Paso, Tex., for disability alleged to have been incurred by him during the period from September 1923 through February 1924, while in the employment of the Post Office Department as postmaster at Sidon, Ark., and to determine said claim upon its merits under the provisions of said act: Provided, That claim hereunder shall be filed within 6 months after the approval of this act: Provided further, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RALPH RIESLER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1690, for the relief of Ralph Riesler.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. FLANNERY objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

EXPLOSION AT LAKE DENMARK, N. J., JULY 10, 1926

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2333, to provide an appropriation for the payment of claims of persons who suffered property damage, death, or personal injury due to the explosion at the naval ammunition depot, Lake Denmark, N. J., July 10, 1926.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill (S. 713) be considered in lieu of the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $59.53 is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Comptroller General of the United States to make payment of the claim of J. Harvey Blanchard for property damage due to the explosion at the naval ammunition depot, Lake Denmark, N. J., July 10, 1926, as recommended by the Acting Comptroller General of the United States and as fully set forth in his letter of January 7, 1937, to the Congress pursuant to the act of March 2, 1927 (44 Stat. (pt. 3) 1800), and the act of February 2, 1929 (45 Stat. (pt. 2) 2047): Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to make the Senate bill conform to the House bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: At the end of the bill insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That any payment made hereunder shall be accepted in full settlement of this claim against the United States: Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The House bill (H. R. 2333) was laid on the table.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2352, for the relief of Donald L. Bookwalter.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $90, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States, to Donald L. Bookwalter, of Dayton, Ohio, due him, during the year 1935, while engaged at the invitation of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration of the United States Government in transporting clients from the Dayton (Ohio) Transient Service Bureau to United States Government transient camps at Patterson Field, at Fairfield, Ohio, under and in pursuance of a plan formulated by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, and whose loss was sustained as he was then acting in the course of the performance of his duties as an employee of the Government.

SEC. 2. That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 5, page 1, after the figures "$90", strike out the word "in" and all of line 6 and the words "United States" in line 7, also all of line 8, and insert "in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for services rendered from April 1 to June 12, 1935, to."

Page 2, strike out lines 6, 7, and 8 and insert "while he was an employee thereof."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

M. K. FISHER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2987, for the relief of M. K. Fisher.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, there is on the Speaker's table a similar Senate bill (S. 544), and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill may be considered in lieu of the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to M. K. Fisher the sum of $500, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for damages arising out of personal injuries of his wife and two minor children, and damages to his automobile, suffered when such automobile was struck by a Forest Service truck, near Jerome, Ariz., on August 4, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer a clarifying amendment to make the Senate bill conform to the House bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: After the words "M. K. Fisher", insert "of Clarkdale, Ariz."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JURISDICTION TO DETERMINE THE CLAIM OF THE OWNER OF THE COAL HULK "CALLIXENE"

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4778, conferring jurisdiction on certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim of the owner of the coal hulk Callixene, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of A. Mateos & Sons, owner of the coal hulk Callixene, against the United States for damages alleged to have been sustained by the Callixene as the result of a collision with the U. S. S. Seneca and Ophir in the harbor of Gibraltar, Spain, on February 10, 1919, may be determined in a suit to be brought by said claimant against the United States in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court in admiralty cases, and that such court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine said suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found due against the United States in favor of the said A. Mateos & Sons, or against the said A. Mateos & Sons in favor of the United States, by reason of such collision, upon the same principles and under the same measures of liability as in like cases between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and upon such notice it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That such suit shall be begun within 4 months of the date of the approval of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to confer jurisdiction on the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York to hear, determine, and render judgment on the claim of A. Mateos & Sons, owner of the coal hulk Callixene."

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with further business on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time today in order that I may advise Members of the House——

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I think we should have a quorum present, and I therefore make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and four Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. RAYBURN, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time today in order that I may advise the Members of the House that I have filed a discharge petition at the Speaker's desk, known as Discharge Petition No. 11, to bring before the House for consideration and a vote House Joint Resolution No. 199, which proposes an amendment to the Constitution to provide that except in the case of invasion or attack, war shall not be declared until the question has been submitted to the people and approved by a majority of the voters in a national referendum.

This is a simple war referendum proposal, detached and disassociated from all collateral questions, and its effect would be to prevent American boys from being sent to fight in wars in foreign countries until the question has been submitted to the people and approved by a majority of all the voters in a national referendum, women having equal voting rights with men. The amendment proposes to insert the following article in the Constitution:

SECTION 1. Except in the event of an invasion of the United States or its Territorial possessions and attack upon its citizens residing therein, the authority of Congress to declare war shall not become effective until confirmed by a majority of all votes cast thereon in a Nation-wide referendum. Congress, when it deems a national crisis to exist, may by concurrent resolution refer the question of war or peace to the citizens of the States, the question to be voted on being, Shall the United States declare war on ———? Congress may otherwise by law provide for the enforcement of this section.

I plead earnestly with every Member of the House to sign the discharge petition, if for no other reason than to permit the resolution to be brought up in the House as a basis of peace discussions out of which I sincerely hope may come some peace legislation which, to a measurable degree at least, will meet the expectations of the country.

I believe there is a widespread—I may say general—feeling throughout the land that American boys should not be sent abroad to fight in quarrels of alien origin, at least not until the people have a chance to vote on the proposition; and that is one of the principal objects sought to be accomplished by this resolution.

WHAT THE PEOPLE ARE THINKING ABOUT WAR

If ever I prayed that I might be given the gift of expression, I pray for it now, because I want to make perfectly clear and understandable what I believe the common people of America, the people Lincoln said God must like because He made so many of them, are thinking on the subject of war. They are thinking this: They are thinking that they love their country and that they would pour out the last drop of their blood, if necessary, to defend it from attack or invasion by a foreign foe, but they are bitterly denouncing and resenting the idea that if a world war comes their sons shall be conscripted and sent away to die in foreign slaughter pens in the settlement of quarrels of other nations.

Furthermore, the common people are tired of being eternally the buffer in the game of war, and since they have to do the suffering and the dying, and to furnish war's cannon fodder, they are asking why they should not have something to say as to whether war shall be declared. They are asking why a question so tragic in its nature, so intimately interwoven with life and death, which involves the very existence as well as the welfare and happiness of the millions of our people, should not be submitted to the people for decision in a national referendum.

I ask Members who do not favor the resolution in its present form to sign the discharge petition, anyway, in order that the subject may be brought up as the basis of some sort of peace action at this session. The rule that is proposed permits 6 hours of general debate and unlimited opportunity to offer amendments. Signing the discharge petition, therefore, will be a move in the direction of giving the House an opportunity to take up peace legislation and work out a solution that will be acceptable to a majority.

House Joint Resolution 199 has sunk deeply into the consciousness of America and it has the approval of millions of individual citizens, besides groups and organizations too numerous to mention. A poll taken by the Institute of Public Opinion some months ago showed 71 percent of all the people—81 percent of the women—to be in favor of the war referendum principle. My resolution has been endorsed unanimously by the American War Mothers, whose sons fought in the World War; the 21 railroad brotherhoods, comprising the flower of organized labor; the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union; the Church of the Disciples of Christ in America; and 65 presidents of universities and colleges.

It has the approval of such leaders as Frank B. Kellogg, coauthor of the Pact of Paris; James E. Van Zandt, former commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars; Archbishops Curley, Drossaerts, and McNicholas, and numerous bishops of the Catholic Church; many eminent leaders of Protestant denominations; Rabbis Stephen S. Wise, Israel Goldstein, Curry, and Feuerlicht, and many other prominent rabbis and outstanding men of the Jewish faith; and almost innumerable other groups and leaders of thought and purpose.

WILL KEEP AMERICANS OUT OF FOREIGN SLAUGHTER PENS

My war-referendum resolution will do more, I believe, to keep American boys out of slaughter pens in foreign countries than any other measure that could be passed, and it would do that without in any way interfering with complete and adequate national defense. It is based on the philosophy that those who have to suffer and, if need be, to die and to bear the awful burdens and griefs of war should have something to say as to whether war shall be declared. I believe that if this amendment is adopted it will keep us out of all foreign wars, and, indeed, out of all wars except possibly a righteous war of self-defense.

Mr. GEARHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I have only a very few minutes, but I will gladly yield to my friend.

Mr. GEARHART. I would like to ask the gentleman one question, and I want him to understand I do not doubt for a moment his sincere devotion to the cause of peace, and ultimately I share his views. But in view of the fact that in recent years all nations who have engaged in warlike enterprises have refrained from making formal declarations of war, I was wondering what safeguard to peace there is in the gentleman's proposal in that respect? The gentleman will remember that Japan invaded China, Italy invaded Ethiopia, and the United States invaded Nicaragua. In each instance no declaration of war was made.

Mr. LUDLOW. In a case of that kind we cannot anticipate, but insofar as a declaration of war has any effect at all, I say it ought to be by the decree of all the people of the United States, meeting in the privacy of the ballot box, voting in the presence only of their Maker. Then we will have a judgment and decision that will truly reflect America's public opinion.

As I said before, I sincerely believe this proposed constitutional referendum on war would do more to keep America out of war than any other proposition that might be enacted. Under this proposal women have the right to vote in a referendum the same as men. Why should not women have the right to vote on a question of declaration of war? They go down into the valley of the shadow of death to bring our boys into the world. Why should they not have something to say as to whether their own flesh and blood shall be hurled into the hell of a foreign conflict?

Under the system of declaration of war as provided in the Constitution there is practically no way by which the women's viewpoint may be reflected. In the Congress today there are only six women Members. So you can see how utterly negligible is the opportunity now given to express a woman's viewpoint on any particular war proposal.

The discharge petition will not become effective unless or until it is signed by 218 Members of the House.

War, with its awful possibilities of human suffering, is today humanity's cross, and whatever we may do to try to lift that cross is certainly a worthy endeavor for the Congress of the United States to engage in, even though it may seem hopeless.

I am sure it does not require any reminder by me to quicken the interest of Congress in this subject. I know that with war clouds lowering, with dictators thrumming the strings of war and preparing for another mass slaughter, and with every sign and portent pointing to the approach of another world war that will eclipse all other wars in destructiveness, there is no lack of sincere purpose on the part of Congress to do its very utmost to protect our country in the face of this threatened cataclysm, if only God will give us the vision to see and do.

I know that there rests on every man and woman in this House today a feeling of solemn responsibility to do everything possible to keep America out of war. I know that there is burning in the breast of every Member of this House a sincere, a passionate desire to be of service to humanity in safeguarding our country from involvement in a war which, if it comes, will inflict immeasurable and endless suffering and imperil civilization itself.

The entire country relying on the peace planks adopted by the two national political conventions last year, is expecting us to enact some legislation at this session that will keep America out of the next holocaust, if another war of foreign origin should break out and threaten to consume the world.

BOTH PARTIES PLEDGED BY PLATFORMS TO WORK FOR PEACE

Let us pause to review the planks of the last two national conventions on the subject of peace. At Cleveland the Republicans said:

> We pledge ourselves to promote and maintain peace by all honorable means not leading to foreign alliances or political commitments.

At Philadelphia the Democrats said:

> In our relationship with other nations this Government will continue to extend the policy of the good neighbor. We reaffirm our opposition to war as an instrument of national policy and declare that disputes between nations should be settled by peaceful means. We shall continue to observe a true neutrality in the disputes of others; to be prepared, resolutely to resist aggression against ourselves; to work for peace and to take the profits out of war; to guard against being drawn, by political commitments, international banking, or private trading, into any war which may develop anywhere.

Here are two direct covenants with the people which we as representatives of the people cannot in conscience overlook or neglect, the Republican pledge, "to promote and maintain peace by all honorable means," and so forth, and the Democratic pledge, "to work for peace."

To make this effort, therefore, let me say to friends on both sides of the center aisle, is our common duty and our common problem. Let us as legislators charged with executing the popular will approach the task courageously, unfalteringly, and without any purpose of evasion. Let us take up the problem in an atmosphere of cooperation and in the spirit of high regard which we cherish one for another. Let us reason together and try to work out a result in this most important of all matters that will measure up to the highest aims of statesmanship.

TWENTY YEARS AGO TODAY

Twenty years ago today, Mr. Speaker, a drama of superlative historical importance was enacted in this Chamber. As a member of the press gallery upstairs it was my privilege to witness it. On that day the United States, with an impressive debate and overwhelming vote in the legislative halls of this Capitol, adopted the declaration that sent America into the World War. I have nothing to say in criticism of the action then taken, nor do I for a moment doubt the pure motives of the leader who guided the Nation into that conflict. The great Creator and Lord of all, who controls the destinies of men and nations, has closed the chapter; and what was done in this room 20 years ago is now a matter of history, beyond the power of any mortal to add to or detract, but it may be said in passing as a statement of fact, known to all men, that the high aims and purposes of our participation in that war were never realized.

We entered the war to make the world safe for democracy; but since it ended 19 democracies have died, and with them have died the liberty of their peoples. There is less democracy in the world today than ever before. We taxed the earnings of our citizens to send billions to our allies in loans which they have repudiated; and, to make matters worse, they have used these vast resources to build up armaments with which to slaughter human beings in future wars, while millions of our own people, reduced to the starving point, have been forced to accept the handouts of charity and have walked the streets vainly seeking employment. Although 20 years have elapsed, I can still hear the clear, resonant voice of the gentleman from Minnesota, HAROLD KNUTSON, as he answered "No" on the roll call that declared America at war with the Imperial German Government. Just as he has met every issue in his life, he met that greatest of all issues foursquare, as bravely as a lion, without any hesitation or evasion. Let it be said to his everlasting credit that although the storms of passion beat fiercely upon him, he stood true to his convictions and registered the verdict of his judgment and his conscience. There may be those who think he should have voted for war, but all who witnessed his conduct on that occasion agree that he acquitted himself like a man. It is no wonder that Minnesota honors a son of such sterling character by repeatedly electing him to this Chamber. As the sole surviving Member of the House who voted against entering the World War, he holds a position of unique distinction. He will follow me on today's program, and I know that we shall be glad to hear him.

WAR SETTLED NOTHING

The war that was to be a "war to end war" settled nothing. War at this moment broods over three-quarters of the globe. The inconclusiveness of our efforts to serve the world in the late war points to us the unerring lesson that henceforth our highest aim and duty as a legislative body should be to protect America from being drawn into future wars.

Adherence to the wise but neglected advice of Washington, "Cultivate friendly relations with all nations; entangling alliances with none", would keep us out of war and would point the way to our highest prospects of a magnificent national destiny.

It is in the spirit of service that I have offered my war referendum resolution, with a firm belief in the justice of allowing the people to decide this greatest of all questions, and with the hope at least that it will open up a debate in this Chamber and bring about an exchange of views and a meeting of minds on what is best to be done for the country in the way of preparations against war which now seems certain to come.

Thanking my fellow Members for your kind indulgence in permitting me to present this matter for your consideration, I would like to add that I fervently wish every Member of the House could see his way clear to sign discharge petition no. 11. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, today is the twentieth anniversary of America's entrance into the World War. The resolution declaring a state of war was passed by this body in the early hours of April 6, 1917, by a vote of 373 to 50. The resolution had passed the Senate 2 days previously by a vote of 82 to 6.

At this point I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the names of the Senators and Representatives who voted against our entrance into the war.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The list of names is as follows:

MEMBERS OF THE SIXTY-FIFTH CONGRESS WHO VOTED AGAINST THE WORLD WAR, APRIL 6, 1917

Senators: Asle Jorgenson Gronna,[1] North Dakota; Robert Marion La Follette,[1] Wisconsin; Harry Lane,[1] Oregon; George William Norris, Nebraska; William Joel Stone,[1] Missouri; James Kimble Vardaman,[1] Mississippi.

Represenatives: Edward Berton Almon,[1] Alabama; Mark Reeves Bacon, Michigan; Fred Albert Britten, Illinois; Edward Everts Browne, Wisconsin; John Lawson Burnett,[1] Alabama; William Joseph Cary,[1] Wisconsin; Denver Samuel Church, California; John Robert Connelly, Kansas; Henry Allen Cooper,[1] Wisconsin; James Henry Davidson,[1] Wisconsin; Charles Russell Davis,[1] Minnesota; Perl D. Decker,[1] Missouri; Clarence Cleveland Dill, Washington; Charles Hall Dillon,[1] South Dakota; Frederick Haskell Dominick, South Carolina; John Jacob Esch, Wisconsin; James Archibald Frear, Wisconsin; Charles Eugene Fuller,[1] Illinois; Gilbert N. Haugen,[1] Iowa; Everis Anson Hayes, California; Walter Lewis Hensley, Missouri; Benjamin Clark Hilliard, Colorado; Harry Edward Hull, Iowa; William L. Igoe, Missouri; Royal Cleaves Johnson, South Dakota; Edward Keating, Colorado; Edward John King,[1] Illinois; Moses Pierce Kinkaid,[1] Nebraska; Claude Kitchin,[1] North Carolina; Harold Knutson, Minnesota; William Leroy La Follette,[1] Washington; Edward Campbell Little,[1] Kansas; Meyer London,[1] New York; Ernest Lundeen, Minnesota; Atkins Jefferson McLemore,[1] Texas; William Ernest Mason,[1] Illinois; John Mandt Nelson, Wisconsin; Charles Hiram Randall, California; Jeannette Rankin, Montana; Charles Frank Reavis,[1] Nebraska; Edwin Ewing Roberts,[1] Nevada; William A. Rodenberg, Illinois; Dorsey William Shackleford,[1] Missouri; Isaac R. Sherwood,[1] Ohio; Charles Henry Sloan, Nebraska; William Henry Stafford, Wisconsin; Carl Chester Van Dyke,[1] Minnesota; Edward Voigt,[1] Wisconsin; Loren Edgar Wheeler,[1] Illinois; Frank Plowman Woods, Iowa.

Mr. KNUTSON. Of that small band of 56, but 26 are alive today. Of that number, 11 will foregather this evening at a local hotel for the first reunion. It is deeply regretted that it is not possible for all the survivors to be present.

My purpose in asking for time to address the House today is to warn the membership that another war impends, and the great powers are feverishly arming themselves for the conflict. America must stay out of that war.

We were driven into the last war against the will of the majority of the American people and, I might say parenthetically, against the wishes of the majority of both Houses of Congress. The way for our entrance into the war had been skillfully built up through the lavish use of false propaganda intended to inflame the passions—such as we are again beginning to see signs of in this country.

Again I say we must keep out of the next war. This we can only do through the adoption of a neutrality law that will place an absolute embargo upon all shipments of war material abroad during the duration of the war. We must also prohibit any of the belligerent countries from floating loans in the United States.

I realize that this would be drastic, but it is necessary if another world war is to be prevented, because a world war cannot be fought for any length of time with the American market closed to the belligerents.

At this time I wish to call attention to the resolution introduced sometime ago by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], which proposes an amendment to the Federal Constitution to provide for a national referendum of the people on future wars except in the event of invasion.

It is the people who have to do the fighting and pay the bills; therefore it is but fair and proper that they should have the deciding voice in the crucial hour. The responsibility is too great for Congress. That was fully demonstrated 20 years ago.

If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] succeeds in getting his amendment incorporated into the Federal Constitution he will deserve a monument as high and as grand as any that the American people have ever reared to the memory of their greatest and most beloved citizens.

It will be recalled by the House that some 3 weeks ago I introduced a concurrent resolution requesting the President to call an armaments-limitation conference. I hope with all my heart that this will be done; because if the present insane program of building up huge armaments, at tremendous cost to the people, is not halted, the world will be faced with bankruptcy and perhaps the destruction of civilization.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in my remarks an editorial from the Akron (Ohio) Beacon-Journal on the Futility of War. This editorial contains some figures that graphically explain the cost of war. If we can bring this picture home to every Senator and Representative, as well as to the American people in general, it will do much to strengthen our determination to remain out of future wars with which we have no concern.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

[From the Akron (Ohio) Beacon Journal of Mar. 23, 1937]

THE FUTILITY OF WAR

Representative HAROLD KNUTSON, of Minnesota, has told his colleagues at Washington that if the entire amount of money loaned by the United States to European nations were repaid with interest it would:

Pay off the mortgage on every home and farm in America with enough left over to build 240,000 miles of hard-surfaced highways.

This is a graphic way of bringing to the understanding of American citizens the magnitude of the sum they lost when one-half the war debt was canceled by our own Government and the remainder repudiated by Old World borrowers.

The Minnesota Congressman may discuss this question with good grace. He was one of the few Members of Congress who had the courage to stand against the tide of propaganda which swept America into the World War in 1917.

Three years ago Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, head of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, made an even stronger presentment of the frightful economic waste wrought by the World War. He said in substance that if the $400,000,000,000 which that war cost had been applied to pacific uses and betterment, it would have built a $2,500 house and furnished that house with $1,000 worth of furniture and placed it on five acres of land worth $100 an acre for each and every family in the United States and Canada, Australia, England, Wales, Ireland, Scotland, France, Belgium, Germany, and Russia.

After doing all this there would have been enough money left to give each city of 100,000 inhabitants and more in all the countries named a $5,000,000 library and a $10,000,000 university.

Then out of the balance there would still have been sufficient money to set aside a sum at 5-percent interest which would pay for all time to come a $1,000 yearly salary each for an army of 125,000 teachers, and in addition to this pay the same salary to an army of 125,000 nurses.

"And after having done all this", the report offered by Dr. Butler concluded, "we could still have had enough left of the four hundred billions to buy up all of France and Belgium, and everything of value that France and Belgium possessed in 1914; that is, every French and Belgian farm, home, bank, factory, church, and railroad."

In other words, the price which the leaders and statesmen of the allied nations, including the United States, made the people of the world pay for the victory over Germany was equal to the value of five countries like France plus five countries like Belgium.

Citation of these colossal figures of World War cost are lost upon the nations which are plotting another world war and spending $11,000,000,000 a year on an armament race to support their participation in it.

If it be even partially true that the economic motive is dominant in the mind of most human beings, then there is no more important task before the world's intelligence and scholarship than to make it clear to the public opinion of the people of every nation which hopes to be deemed civilized how directly the loss, the suffering, and the distress which they are now compelled to endure are the effect and result of the last World War.

The war debts which Congressman KNUTSON demands that Europe shall pay are only a minor fraction of that war's enormous losses. One might imagine that the people who were its dupes would mass their influence to restrain the madmen and dictators who are trying to bring on another conflict to promote imperial ambitions or avenge imagined wrongs put upon them by the statesmen who partitioned the spoils of war lost by the Kaiser.

America prefers a different course. War and preparation for war are not the normal objectives of its Government and society.

[1] Deceased.

This Nation favors spending its billions on benefits that may be derived only from peace. That is why the American people understand the meaning of the object lessons cited by Dr. Butler and Congressman KNUTSON and wonder why their purblind neighbors abroad fail to find in them the most convincing argument against rashly provoking another orgy of destruction.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I admire the gentleman from Minnesota for having the courage of his convictions and for his courage in voting as he did against the declaration of war 20 years ago. Would the gentleman mind inserting in the RECORD the names of the other Members of Congress who voted against the declaration of war?

Mr. KNUTSON. I may say to the gentleman I have already inserted the names.

Mr. BIGELOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BIGELOW. Would not this day, the anniversary of our entrance into the war, be a good day for us all to sign discharge petition no. 11 for the Ludlow resolution?

Mr. KNUTSON. I am glad the gentleman brought that up. I hope the entire membership of the House will sign discharge petition no. 11, which is now on the Clerk's desk, in order that we may have an opportunity for an early vote on the Ludlow resolution. I have already signed it, and I hope the rest of the Members of the House will also sign it.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will my distinguished friend yield for a question?

Mr. KNUTSON. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. I admire the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota for the stand he took 20 years ago.

Mr. KNUTSON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SIROVICH. However, in the light of the 20 years which have elapsed, does the gentleman feel that if Germany and the central European countries had won the war and England and France had been destroyed we would be in a better position than we are today?

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman think for a moment that we should endanger this Republic by taking part in wars in which we have no concern?

Mr. SIROVICH. May I answer my distinguished friend by stating that in the light of the experience of the past 20 years, if England and France, as our first line of defense, had been destroyed, we would have been the next nation to be destroyed? It is our duty to protect parliamentary, constitutional democracies throughout the world, in order to make the world safe for democracy and that dictatorships shall not destroy democracy. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. May I say to the gentleman that we heard a great deal about our going into the World War to make the world safe for democracy, but democracy is at a lower ebb today than ever before in the history of parliamentary government? [Applause.]

Mr. SIROVICH. Then we want more democracy in order to justify the fact we went into the World War. The cure for declining democracy is more democracy.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is true; but I do not believe we should endanger our own welfare in order to preserve democracy in Europe. If they want to kill themselves off it is their own affair. Let us stay at home and attend to our own business.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I am pleased to yield to my good friend from California.

Mr. GEARHART. If we had not gone into the World War in defense of democracy, where would democracy be today?

Mr. KNUTSON. Where is it today?

Mr. GEARHART. It is better off than it has ever been in the past.

Mr. KNUTSON. I deny that such is the case.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. In the gentleman's opinion, is not the fact a good many democracies in Europe have been superseded by dictatorships because the people of the countries where dictatorships exist today are not fit for representative, constitutional government?

Mr. KNUTSON. I would say perhaps the form of government under which certain people live today is better adapted to their needs than is democracy.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. GEARHART. The gentleman's answer to my former question suggests the idea democracy today is not as widespread in the world as it was prior to the World War.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is not; no, sir.

Mr. GEARHART. In what country where democracy obtained prior to the World War does it not exist today?

Mr. KNUTSON. Let us take Mexico, for instance, right next door to us. We will start close to home.

Mr. GEARHART. They have just as much democracy in Mexico today as they have ever had.

Mr. KNUTSON. There was more democracy in Germany, Italy, Russia, and Japan prior to the war than there is today.

Mr. GEARHART. Do you think the Germans have ever had any appreciation of what democracy means?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; I do; to say otherwise is preposterous. Any people that have given to the world the poets, the musicians, and the scientists Germany has have full conception of all the blessings that go with free government.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Does the gentleman think we have had more or less democracy in the United States since the World War?

Mr. KNUTSON. We no longer have democracy here. We have not had for the past several years. [Laughter and applause.]

TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ENTRANCE INTO WORLD WAR

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, we have just listened to a very eloquent address by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON]. I respect and honor him. I admire his courage and independence in having voted against our entrance into war but I do not agree with him. I have no objection if the gentleman and all the others who voted against our entrance into war assemble each anniversary and congratulate themselves and tell the American people that they were right and Woodrow Wilson was all wrong. I, for one, think that Woodrow Wilson was right when he asked Congress to declare war, as he did on April 2, and I think Congress was right when it declared war on April 6. [Applause.] We were forced into that war by the attacks without warning of German submarines upon American ships. The record has been made. We cannot change that record now.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield; yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman kindly inform the House what transpired between the election in November 1916, and the 6th day of April following that would justify a declaration of war? The American people had voted on the proposition of going into war. The motto of the Democratic Party in that campaign was "He kept us out of war", and on the strength of that the American people reelected Woodrow Wilson.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, my good friend and distinguished colleague from Minnesota has placed me in an embarrassing position. He has placed me as a Republican in the position of being a defender of our great war President, Woodrow Wilson, and I accept it gladly [applause] as one who served under him for 2 years on the battlefields of France.

As long as that question has been raised, let me answer it. As Al Smith says, "Let us look at the record", and what does the record disclose? The record discloses that years before we entered the war at the suggestion of Woodrow Wilson, a great many people, including a great many Republicans, thought we should have gone to war when Belgium was invaded. I for one was opposed to that. A great many others, Democrats and Republicans alike, thought we should have entered the World War when the Lusitania was sunk, and I am in accord with the views of Woodrow Wilson who kept us out of war at that time. It is true that Woodrow Wilson ran on a peace program to keep us out of war and was elected on that program, but between the election and April 2, 1917, when he made his war statement in Congress, and April 6, when we voted on it, our ships flying the American flag were torpedoed by German submarines without warning.

This is what forced us into war. Woodrow Wilson and his Secretary of State at that time had repeatedly warned Germany that if their submarines attacked our ships on the high seas without warning we would be forced to declare war, and the result was inevitable. Of course, our hindsight is always better than our foresight. I am not going to argue with my friend from Minnesota, because I admire him personally and I admire his courage, and I said so while he was speaking a few minutes ago and hope that will be read by every citizen of the State of Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. And by posterity as well. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FISH. I have only 10 minutes and I have hardly started.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will my distinguished colleague yield for a question?

Mr. FISH. If it is not too complicated.

Mr. SIROVICH. Is it not far better, after 20 years, to have preserved Anglo-Saxon civilization than a manifestation of a Teutonic interest throughout the world today?

Mr. FISH. I would like to answer that, too. I do not know what we preserved. I think we went into war because we were forced into war, first, because of our policy, which we have now changed, to preserve neutral rights on the high seas and freedom of the seas and to send our ships wherever we wanted. We have changed that since then in an effort to keep out of war; but we went into war, as Woodrow Wilson told us, to make the world safe for democracy, to end all wars, and when the gentleman asks me the question, these are the things we fought for, and what tragedies have occurred since then—what a mockery of the principles we fought for when you think of what is happening in the world today!

The world is armed to the teeth, spending three times as much money on armament as it did in 1914. Fifteen billion dollars is being spent this year on armament alone, mostly by the very nations that owe us huge war debts, and they are not paying even the interest on the money we lent them after the armistice; and insofar as making the world safe for democracy is concerned, what a farce and travesty! The nations of Europe which formerly had some degree of democracy and upheld free institutions have gone to the right or to the left, into dictatorships and autocracies, into communism or socialism of the left or nazi-ism or fascism of the right.

Of course, on the basis of hindsight we can say that the war was a tragedy, that we are disillusioned, but at that time we were forced into the war by the indiscriminate attacks of German submarines on American shipping. Those few Members of Congress who get up and say they voted against war remind me of the old story of the mother who saw Johnnie marching out of step and said, "Oh, look, all the rest of the company is out of step except Johnnie." Congress knew what it was doing when it declared war. The Members of Congress represented the American people back home. To declare war is an awful responsibility for Congress to assume. I am with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] to give the people the right to vote on war. In fact, I introduced such a bill a few years ago. I am supporting his now to submit to the American people a referendum on war. The reason I am speaking today is twofold. One is to partially answer some of these charges that we were rushed into war on a hysterical basis. Congress knew what it was doing. The Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which I was not then a member, knew exactly what it was about when it reported by a unanimous vote a declaration of war, and 95 percent of the Members of this House who voted for it knew what they were voting for. I have too much respect for Members of Congress to think that they did not know what they were doing or that they did not represent the views of their constituents.

The other reason I rise today is simply this. I have just seen thousands of young American boys marching out there on the street in uniform preparing for war. The only time to fight war is in time of peace. You cannot fight war once war has begun. Here we are on the twentieth anniversary of our entrance into the World War, and what are we doing to keep out of war? A number of suggestions have been made. My friend from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] has one suggestion, to give the people the right to vote. Senator NYE and I have introduced a resolution to prohibit the shipment of arms, ammunition, and implements of war in time of peace as well as in war, and I predict in 2 years' time public opinion will be behind that and some Members of Congress will be sorry for the vote that they cast here a few weeks ago against it. There are even greater issues. The President should call a conference of the leading naval nations of the world to reach an agreement to reduce and limit naval armament. We are now engaged in a naval armament race, spending $50,000,000 of dollars on each battleship, getting nowhere, except nearer to war and breeding enmity and hatred that eventuates in war. On this twentieth anniversary of the declaration of war I believe we should urge the adoption of those measures that lead to peace. Another proposal is to call a peace conference of the great nations of the world. We now have a world filled with rumors of war, predictions frequently made that there will be another world war within a year. Why not call a peace conference to determine the rights of neutrals on the high seas? I believe that Great Britain and Germany both would agree to permit neutral nations to carry foodstuffs in case of another war.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Inasmuch as it is a known fact in the world that the nations of the world do not keep their agreements, that the nations of the world are guilty of breaking treaties all the time, with that as a background, what is the sense of getting ourselves into a disarmament conference?

Mr. FISH. I am glad the gentleman has asked that question. The gentleman is a new Member of Congress.

Mr. PHILLIPS. May I finish my question?

Mr. FISH. Oh, the gentleman has asked it often and I know it by heart, and I know the answer by heart.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Then give me the answer, if the gentleman knows it.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman says we should not enter into any agreement with any nation; that every nation in the world is dishonest except ourselves. The answer to that is that we did enter into a limitation of armament conference in 1922, the Washington limitation of naval armament conference, in which we agreed with Great Britain and Japan to limit battleships to a 5–5–3 basis—18 for Great Britain, 18 for ourselves, and 10 for Japan—saving the United States $250,000,000 annually, and when that treaty expired on the 31st of last December we had saved the United States taxpayers $4,000,000,000. I submit that every nation lived up to that agreement—Great Britain, Japan, and ourselves—and that is exactly what I want continued instead of this naval armament race into which we are now plunged.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Will the gentleman answer this question?

Mr. FISH. I think that is a very definite and a very concrete answer.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Is it not true that the nations of the world are guilty of breaking their word in international arrangements; and if a nation breaks its word with one nation, how do we know it will do any better in keeping it with us?

Mr. FISH. I think the gentleman has in mind the failure to pay the war debts. It is true, if we want to raise that question, that the great nations of the world welched on their war debts; and if the gentleman wants to raise it on this anniversary, I will be glad to say a few words about it.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. My distinguished friend served with great distinction in the World War. Will he be kind enough to explain to the House the significance of a victory for the central European powers 20 years ago?

Mr. FISH. How can I explain the significance? All I can say to the gentleman is that we sent 2,000,000 soldiers to the other side and we did our part. We changed the tide of defeat into victory. We asked for nothing and we got exactly what we asked—nothing at all. We received no reparations, no indemnity, no plunder, and no new possessions or conquered territory of any kind. We do not claim we won the war, but we did change the tide of defeat into victory.

Mr. SIROVICH. Does the gentleman think we made a mistake in doing that?

Mr. FISH. I would have voted for war if I had been in Congress. That is why I am speaking today, because no Democrat has defended their own President when he was right. He was a great war President and only did his duty to his country. [Applause.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Last night the Secretary of State, Mr. Hull, speaking in New York, declared—

> There is only one way to avert this impending doom.

He said:

> It is for the nations which today bend their major effort toward preparation for war to join those other nations which are intent on a policy of peace.

Does the gentleman have any idea how those nations can get together unless we have some sort of an international conference?

Mr. FISH. It must be self-evident that we ought to take the leadership. We are the strongest nation left in the world. We do not belong to any secret entangling alliances. We are the only nation left to take the moral leadership for peace, and they are begging us to do it. I have enough respect for Secretary Hull to believe that eventually we will get around to it. All I want to do is to build a little bonfire under him to get action before there is another world war.

It is all right to go down to a conference in South America, but what does that accomplish? Nothing at all except a little good will. They have no navies. They are not creating a world-war situation. We are now faced with a world war. How are we going to stop it? The only way is to take some leadership and call such an international conference.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to my distinguished friend on the Foreign Affairs Committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. If the gentleman will yield for a minute. The gentleman spoke about the disarmament conference. It either has to be on a mathematical ratio basis or it must be on a security basis. Does the gentleman believe we can have a disarmament conference unless we can guarantee security?

Mr. FISH. No. Perhaps the gentleman did not understand me. I did not ask for a disarmament conference. I asked for two separate conferences. One, a naval limitation conference.

Mr. SHANLEY. That is a mathematical ratio.

Mr. FISH. That is a mathematical ratio. We proved it in the Washington Treaty and the London Treaty, extending it for the smaller cruisers under 10,000 tons. That has been proven. The other conference is simply to implement the Kellogg Pact, to which we belong, that has outlawed war, or renounced war as an instrument of national policy, except for defense. My suggestion is that we should take the lead in calling these nations together which have signed the Kellogg Pact and which is not backed by force or coercion and ask them to agree on the rights of neutral nations to carry foodstuffs in case of another war, and not to ship arms, munitions, and implements of war to belligerent nations. These proposals are reasonable. We would have some chance of putting them into effect.

Mr. SHANLEY. I think the gentleman agrees that a recodification of international law is necessary. Does the gentleman know that meeting today in the Pan American Union are seven of the greatest jurists on this hemisphere, one of them a personal friend of the gentleman from New York, Professor Borchard? They are attempting to recodify international law, to delimit the law of contraband. Does not the gentleman believe that solidarity on this hemisphere in international law will give us protection for neutral trade? May I say, in the gentleman's time, that Sir Edward Grey said that the United States should have been the trustee of neutral nations, and that we failed to uphold that trust? We absolutely lost our right. I would like to speak at length on this at some other time.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is talking against his own administration now.

Mr. SHANLEY. If my own administration is wrong the gentleman knows I will talk against it.

Mr. FISH. I do.

Mr. SHANLEY. I know the gentleman believes in the recodification of international law. Does he not believe that Secretary Hull is right in implementing international law on this hemisphere first?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. SHANLEY. And then going to the other nations if need be?

Mr. FISH. Yes; and I think what he did in South America will prove to be a step forward in the direction of peace, in spite of the fact that no Republicans were on his commission.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. With the central European dictatorial governments arming madly at the present time, could we not help to preserve peace by letting it be known that the moral support of the Government of the United States is behind the constitutional, democratic governments of England and France? Would this not help preserve peace in the world?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman knows this, and the world knows this, that America is a great peace-loving Nation with a borderline of 4,000 miles without a single fort, without a single gun, without a single soldier. I cannot agree with the ideology and philosophy of my colleague from New York that we have any concern whatever in the form of government of any other country. It is not our concern what form of government the Russians have, nor have we any concern with what kind of government there is in Nazi Germany or Fascist Italy. But, beyond any question, we are against both communism and socialism on the one hand and nazi-ism and fascism on the other, in this country.

There is no room for any such philosophy in free America. [Applause.]

Mr. SIROVICH. But did we not go into the World War to make the world safe for democracy? And if we have sacrificed 300,000 lives and $12,000,000,000, is it not our duty to see that these democracies—Great Britain and France—are preserved?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. No; let me answer this myself.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Now, let us get the record straight. We did not lose 300,000 men in the first place. We lost about 60,000 killed and about 60,000 who died of disease, about 120,000 in the entire war.

I am sure the gentleman does not want to ask Congress to interfere with the kind of government that may exist in any foreign nation. We may disagree with certain governments and we do disagree, and we object to their bringing any of their propaganda into the United States to interfere, no matter to what degree, with our own domestic institutions and with our American system of government, whether it comes from Communist Russia, Fascist Italy, or Nazi Germany. There is one thing we have decided in this country, and it is the appropriate time to refer to it on this twentieth anniversary of our entrance into war. I believe Republicans and Democrats can agree on one common platform, and that is that no matter what kind of government these other nations have, if they insist on arming to the teeth and going to war it is their war and not our war. [Applause.]

Both Republicans and Democrats alike can also agree on this twentieth anniversary of war that we will appropriate sufficient funds for adequate national defense, but not one dollar to send an American soldier to foreign lands to fight other people's battles. [Applause.]

On this twentieth anniversary we can likewise agree in common on another issue, and that is that if we are to have a war in the future it must be a war in defense of the United States of America and not in defense of war profiteers, munitions makers, or any foreign nation. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. What, in the gentleman's opinion, is adequate defense? I am not trying to be facetious, but this is a question that has been asked a great many times.

Mr. FISH. I am glad the gentleman asked the question and I shall try to answer it the best I can. I believe in a small, efficient, mechanized, and modernized Regular Army, a fair-sized federalized National Guard, and for military instruction in the R. O. T. C. and citizens' military training camps to prepare younger men to become officers in case of a future war. In other words, I believe in a democratic form of national defense. When it comes to a Navy, as long as we have gotten into this mad competition, as long as we are launched into a naval race with Japan, we must build ship for ship with Japan, because that is our first line of defense; and it is for defense and not for aggression.

Let us make clear to the world that we are a peaceful nation. In spite of the charges of Socialists and Communists that we are a great, greedy, avaricious, imperialistic nation, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican there is not a single Member of Congress who seeks a foot of additional territory anywhere in the world; yet we are accused of building navies for war. We are building them for defense, for defense of America and for peace, and for nothing else.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield to my exceedingly distinguished colleague from the great State of Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. The gentleman also believes in a very large air force and also in universal conscription? That is, conscription of wealth, of industry, and labor along with mankind?

Mr. FISH. I think that is one of the most important measures this Congress can consider. We have been shilly-shallying for years. Why do you not act? Why do not the Democrats bring out the Legion bill to draft capital, industry, and manpower on an equal basis and take the profit out of war? That should be the first thing for this Congress to do in order to promote peace. Take the profits out of war and that will be a deterrent from entering into future wars.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman must not overlook the international bankers, who are a prolific source for war. In fact, they brought on the last war.

Mr. FISH. They helped a great deal to bring on that war, there is no doubt about that. But it seems to me we have somewhat clipped the wings of the international bankers in the last few years.

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, they are coming out again. [Laughter.]

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is quite right. They are going to make every effort possible to come out again; but if the Congress will pass the American Legion bill to draft wealth and capital and profits as well as soldiers, the big international bankers will not exert much influence; and that is an added reason why we ought to pass that bill.

Mr. McFARLANE. How is the gentleman going to collect the war debts?

Mr. FISH. Have I not answered that yet? I would like to see another Andrew Jackson in the White House. If we had an Andrew Jackson in the White House today, we would get the war debts paid in about a year's time. He handled that situation 100 years ago in connection with France. We have received nothing except from honest little Finland, and this administration has not raised a finger to collect one penny of the war debt. It is about time for the representatives of the people to go to bat and insist on collecting the war debts themselves, before it is all spent on new armaments and the world is plunged into another world war. [Applause.]

UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 191 to continue the terms of the members of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the House joint resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 191

Resolved, etc., That the membership of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives on the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission shall continue irrespective of the terms of its members.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RICHARDS, for 3 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. BACON, for 1 week, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KENNEY asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, in response to the inquiry made this morning by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], may I say I have consulted with members of the Judiciary Committee and it is their intention to call up first tomorrow the Mitchell antilynching bill. If consideration of that bill is completed in time, then it is expected to call up one of the court bills. There is pending what is known as the so-called Attorney General's bill, and also a bill creating two new circuit judges in the western part of the country.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Does the gentleman know whether the Committee on the Judiciary has filed a report as yet on the Mitchell antilynching bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I may say that report has been filed today.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 7, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

1627. Also, petition of Rev. and Mrs. E. M. Grubbs, of Columbia, Tenn., asking Congress to pass no law that would disturb or abridge the religious rights and privileges of all our people; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1628. By the SPEAKER: Petition of Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko Democratic Club, of Hamtramck, Mich., endorsing and approving the program of the President with regard to the Supreme Court; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 7, 1937

The Reverend Bernard Braskamp, pastor of the Gunton Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art great in Thy goodness and good in Thy greatness, we thank Thee for the revelation which Thou hast made of Thyself as a guiding Intelligence and an overruling Father. Wilt Thou fill our hearts with those desires which Thou dost delight to satisfy? May we live out our days in faith and faithfulness. Give us such a love for Thy truth that we shall come to know the truth of Thy love.

Bless the President and the Vice President of these United States and Thy servants whom Thou hast called to positions of leadership in the life of our Republic. May Thy hand of benediction rest upon the citizens of our beloved country. Grant that we may all seek to serve our generation according to Thy holy will. May we ever hold our wishes in suspense until Thou dost declare that will unto us. On Thee may we depend for light to know and for strength to perform our duties. May prosperity and happiness be the heritage of men everywhere.

In His name we pray, whose will is our peace. Amen.

REGULATION OF BITUMINOUS-COAL INDUSTRY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4985) to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. NEELY, Mr. BARKLEY, and Mr. DAVIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BYRNES. I present a conference report on House bill 4064, the executive and independent offices appropriation bill, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4064) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 14, 15, 16, and 17; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"CENTRAL STATISTICAL BOARD

"For every expenditure requisite for and incident to the work of the Central Statistical Board as authorized by law, including personal services in the District of Columbia; traveling expenses; materials; supplies; office equipment; services; newspapers; periodicals and press clippings; printing and binding; repairs and alterations; contract stenographic reporting services and not to exceed $200 for expenses of attendance at meetings which in the discretion of the chairman are necessary for the efficient discharge of the responsibilities of the Board, $87,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$700,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$717,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$244,100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 5, 7, 8, 11, 12, and 13.

EVERETT M. DIRKSEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina for the immediate consideration of the report? The Chair hears none, and the report is before the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator what the recessions are which have been made by the conferees on the part of the Senate?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the conferees on the part of the Senate have agreed to a compromise of the differences between the two Houses as to a number of items in the bill. If the Senator desires me to state each item in dispute, I shall be glad to do so.

Where $10,000,000 was appropriated for administrative expenses of the social security program by the bill as it passed the House, the Senate reduced the appropriation to $9,000,000. The conferees have agreed upon an appropriation of $9,500,000.

In another instance, where the House appropriated $29,000,000 and the Senate had appropriated $15,000,000, the conference report recommends an appropriation of $19,000,000, which is $10,000,000 less than the amount carried by the House bill and $4,000,000 more than the amount adopted by the Senate.

Similarly throughout the bill there are items as to which a compromise has been effected.

There is only one amendment as to which I desire to make a statement. When the bill was before the other House there was adopted a provision prohibiting the use of the employees of any executive department by a committee of the House or of the Senate. The Senate struck out that paragraph of the bill. The House conferees have receded from their position, and, under the conference report, the paragraph is stricken from the bill. The conferees on the part of the Senate, however, agreed that I should make to the Senate a statement as to the attitude of the House.

The House conferees stated that the House was impelled to take the action they did because it was disclosed that one investigating committee of the Senate was making use of the services of several employees from the W. P. A., several from the Commerce Department, and about 72 employees from the Interstate Commerce Commission. The House believed that taking as many as 72 employees or any large number of employees from any executive department would not only demoralize the work of the departments but would inevitably result in the departments seeking additional appropriations in order to employ additional men to take the place of those assigned to the Senate committee.

However, the Senate is not alone in using employees of the departments to help committees.

Investigation disclosed that committees of the House likewise were using employees from the departments. Pending in the House are two resolutions which propose to authorize the use of departmental employees by committees. The conferees on the part of the Senate and the House determined, in view of the fact that great good has been accomplished by the disclosure of the extent to which the practice has gone, that this matter could well be left to the good judgment of the members of the committees of the two Houses.

It is a fact that it is most unusual for a Senate committee to ask for so large a number of employees to be assigned to a committee. The chairman of the investigating committee of the Senate referred to has advised me, as chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, that he was unaware at the time of the number of men assigned to the investigating committee of the Senate. Since the matter has developed the number of employees assigned to that investigating committee has been greatly reduced, and the chairman of that committee advised the Audit and Control Committee that there would be a still further reduction in the number of employees assigned by the department to the committee.

I believe the House performed a useful service in calling the matter to the attention of both Houses. Under the agreement committees will not be deprived of the opportunity to secure the services of some individual in a department who may be deemed to be an expert upon some subject, and at the same time it is hoped and believed that committees will not call upon departments for many employees.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LEWIS. At the close of the last session I gave notice of my desire to discuss a subject which I believed would be of interest to the Senate. Under the ordinary rules of the Senate am I permitted to enter upon that discussion previous to the disposal of resolutions and other matters of regular business, or must I wait in order to conform to the rule of the Senate in that regard?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rules of the Senate, the Senator has the right to submit his discussion on the conference report if he so desires. However, the Chair had intended to recognize the Senator from Illinois as soon as regular morning business shall have been concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Chair. I do not desire to discuss the conference report and shall await my opportunity as suggested by the Chair.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from South Carolina what other items are in disagreement which call for further conference?

Mr. BYRNES. Under the rules of the House six items must be taken back to the House for action. Three involve appropriations which were added to in the Senate. The House conferees stated that these amendments would have to be taken to the House for action.

There are also involved three items relating to the Social Security Board. One of the items is a Senate amendment providing that the employees who are not under civil service and who draw salaries of $5,000 or more must hereafter be submitted to the Senate for confirmation. Another item relates to the salary of the Director of the Social Security Board. The third item relates to the classification of salaries of employees of the Board.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think, by and large, the Senate conferees have discharged with ability and fidelity the responsibilities resting upon them. I am compelled to state, however, that I regret that they made any concessions with respect to items dealing with the appropriations referred to by the Senator from South Carolina. The appropriation bill, in my opinion, carries too large appropriations, in view of the condition of the Treasury and the obvious and imperative necessity of the Government borrowing more money, notwithstanding the heavy burden of taxation, in order to meet expenses for the current year and the ensuing fiscal year.

I utter a word of warning that unless expenditures are reduced it will be imperative that Congress shall levy heavier taxes, drastic though the present taxes are and burdensome to the highest degree. I have not found—and I say this without any desire to be critical—any very strong disposition to reduce expenditures. I now make the prediction that, with the atmosphere which prevails here and elsewhere, when we shall have concluded our labors, whenever that may be—months from now probably—we will find appropriations for the ensuing fiscal year exceeding those for the present fiscal year, though there will be a deficit at the end of the current fiscal year of between $4,000,000,000 and $5,000,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator if he can recall many appropriation bills where the Senate has reduced the amount of the appropriations proposed by the House, and where the conference report on an appropriation bill has shown a reduction of the amount below the amount carried by the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. KING. I think the statement I made at the outset exonerates the Senate conferees. I compliment them upon having been able to secure as many reductions as the conference report shows.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE—ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL (S. DOC. NO. 50)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriations for the legislative establishment, Architect of the Capitol, for the fiscal year 1938, in the sum of $148,373, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA MINIMUM-WAGE LAW

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting the opinion of the Attorney General respecting the present status of the District of Columbia minimum-wage law, in view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the case of West Coast Hotel Co. against Parrish overruling the case of Adkins v. Children's Hospital (261 U. S. 525), and making certain suggestions or recommendations relative to the District of Columbia minimum-wage law, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORT OF THE BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the chief scout executive of the Boy Scouts of America, transmitting, pursuant to law, the twenty-seventh annual report of that organization for the year 1936, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Council of the City of Cleveland, Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation requiring the Works Progress Administration to modify or limit the enforcement of the rule of priority so that persons upon W. P. A. projects will not be removed where the head of a family is eligible for work relief and is not receiving it, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Board of Commissioners of Newark, N. J., favoring the enactment of low-cost housing legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the National Automobile Dealers Association, at Detroit, Mich., protesting against so-called sit-down strikes, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Board of Supervisors of the County of Monroe, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit the shipment in interstate commerce of goods produced by child labor, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the General Thaddeus Kosciuszko Democratic Club, of Hamtramck, Mich., and the North Dakota Labor Association, Inc., of Bismarck, N. Dak., favoring the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a memorial from F. E. Gannett, chairman, National Committee to Uphold Constitutional Government, of New York City, N. Y., protesting against certain alleged statements by Hon. James A. Farley with reference to the proposed reorganization of the judicial branch of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Local Union No. 35, United Mine Workers, of Harco, Ill., favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit the use of natural gas for heating purposes in public buildings, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. KING presented a resolution adopted by the Association of Veterans of the Revolution, at Manila, P. I., favoring the prompt granting of full independence to the Philippine Islands, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

Mr. HALE presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the State of Maine, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WALSH presented resolutions adopted by the Massachusetts Women's Political Club, protesting against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WALSH also presented the following concurrent resolutions of the General Court of Massachusetts, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Resolutions memorializing Congress for enactment of Federal legislation to protect against unfair competition the States having high legal standards for labor and working conditions

Whereas the general court is convinced that industries operating in this and other States with advanced legal standards for labor and working conditions are at a decided disadvantage in competition with similar industries and establishments operating under lower standards elsewhere; and

Whereas it has been found impracticable to secure the adoption of agreements among the States for the establishment and maintenance of definite and reasonable standards for labor and working conditions in the absence of some provision for protection of industries in the States that may enter into such an agreement from competition by industries and establishments operating in States that have no such standards in the field of labor and industry; and

Whereas Congress has enacted the Hawes-Cooper Act, so-called, to aid the States in preventing the sale within their limits of goods and merchandise made by convict labor in other States when the protected State prohibits sale in the open market of goods and merchandise made by convict labor within its limits; and has likewise enacted the Ashurst-Sumners Act, so-called, which prohibits transportation in interstate commerce of goods and merchandise made by convict labor and destined for States in which the sale of such merchandise is forbidden; and

Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States, in decisions rendered on March 2, 1936, and January 4, 1937, has sustained the constitutionality of the Hawes-Cooper Act and of the Ashurst-Sumners Act, respectively; and

Whereas the action of Congress and the decisions of the Supreme Court concerning the subject of interstate commerce in convict-made goods and merchandise appear clearly to point the way to a method of protecting the industries of States with high legal standards for labor and working conditions from competition originating under lower standards elsewhere: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts hereby memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact legislation permitting States with established standards for labor and working conditions to protect their industries from competition originating under lower standards elsewhere, and forbidding the transportation in interstate commerce of goods and merchandise produced under low legal standards for labor and working conditions into States in which adequate and reasonable standards on these subjects have been established and maintained; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the Commonwealth transmit forthwith copies of these resolutions to the President of the United States, the Secretary of Labor of the United States, the presiding officers of both branches of Congress, each Senator and Representative from Massachusetts in Congress, and to the Governors of all the States of the Union, with an urgent request that they cooperate with this Commonwealth in securing the enactment of the proposed legislation.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by Hollis-St. Albans Civic Association, Inc., of St. Albans, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation extending Home Owners' Loan Corporation mortgages for an additional 5 years and making a reduction of interest rates thereon, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Queens County Bankers Association, of Queensborough, N. Y., favoring an extension for 1 year of title I of the National Housing Act, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Soroptimist Club, of Washington, D. C., favoring the enactment of minimum-wage legislation for men, women, and children in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Syracuse (N. Y.) Housing Authority and the Grand Street Boys' Association, of New York City, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation providing low-cost housing construction, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Brooklyn Metal Trades Council, of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring continuation of the investigation by a Senate committee of violations of the right of free speech and assembly and interference with the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Boards of Education of Central Rural School District No. 1, towns of Jay and Keene; Union Free School District No. 13, towns of Perinton and Pittsford; and Central School District No. 1, towns of Marcellus and others, in Onondaga County, and the Building and Construction Trades Council of Greater New York and Long Island, of New York City, all in the State of New York, favoring the continuation of the Public Works Administration, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by sundry citizens, being residents of the Tenth Congressional District of New York, favoring the passage of House bill 4199, the so-called General Welfare Act of 1937, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Brooklyn and New York, N. Y., remonstrating against the placing of embargoes on shipments of arms to Spain, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of members of the history classes of Monticello High School, of Monticello, N. Y., praying for the retention of the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Twenty-eighth Ward Taxpayers' Protective Association, of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation to apply a uniform postage rate of 2 cents within the city of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

HOME-MORTGAGE RELIEF

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution of the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution memorializing Congress of the United States to act favorably on S. 1678 and H. R. 4739, relative to providing additional home-mortgage relief within the metropolitan area

Whereas a serious situation has arisen with reference to loans granted by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to small home owners in order to enable them to hold their property, by reason of numerous foreclosures and the taking of deficiency judgments by the H. O. L. C. in various parts of our country and more especially in the metropolitan area; and

Whereas a bill has been introduced in the Senate of the United States by Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND, of New York, and in the House of Representatives by Congressman EDWARD W. CURLEY, of New York, known specifically as S. 1678 and H. R. 4739, to provide additional home-mortgage relief by providing for (1) a moratorium on foreclosures permitting appropriate legislation to provide further emergency relief to home-mortgage indebtedness; (2) to further refinance home mortgages; (3) to reduce the rate of interest and extend payment and amortization of mortgages; (4) to eliminate personal and deficiency judgments in foreclosures, and for other purposes: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and hereby is, memorialized to act favorably on S. 1678 and H. R. 4739 to accomplish the purposes set forth above; and

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be transmitted to the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate, and to each Member of the House of Representatives and to each Senator elected from New York State.

TITLE I, NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

Mr. WAGNER presented a resolution adopted by the Queens County (N. Y.) Bankers Association, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

QUEENS COUNTY BANKERS ASSOCIATION,
Queensborough, N. Y., March 29, 1937.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senator from New York, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At the last meeting of the Queens County Bankers Association, held March 11, 1937, a general discussion was held in connection with title I of the Federal Housing Act, which expires April 1, 1937, and upon motion duly made, seconded, and unanimously carried it was—

"Resolved, That this association recommend and request, on behalf of its members, to the representative Senators and Congressmen in Washington, D. C., the extension for 1 year of title I of the National Housing Act with or without the prevailing insurance clause, thereby permitting the banks to extend long-term loans without criticism."

I have been directed to submit this recommendation to you and ask that immediate action be taken.

Respectfully yours,

E. H. DAWSON,
Secretary, Queens County Bankers Association.

LOW-COST HOUSING

Mr. WAGNER presented resolutions of several housing organizations relative to low-cost housing, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution passed by the Boston City Housing Authority on the Wagner-Steagall housing bill

Whereas over a period of years it is obvious that substandard housing is not only injurious to health but that such conditions show an economic deficit in the maintenance of any city; and

Whereas private interests have never in this country found it profitable to furnish habitations for persons of small income; and

Whereas the public approval has acknowledged, through its Government, that governmental aid is necessary in this country as has been the case in most countries of Europe over a long period of years; and

Whereas the city of Boston Housing Authority has become aware of the fact that without Government aid proper low-cost housing or slum clearance is impossible in the city of Boston: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Boston City Housing Authority endorses a a bill, being S. 1685 and H. R. 5033, introduced in the Senate by the Honorable ROBERT F. WAGNER, United States Senator from New York, and in the House of Representatives by the Honorable HENRY B. STEAGALL, Congressman from Pennsylvania, which reads as follows:

"A bill to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes"; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER, and Hon. H. B. STEAGALL, Congressman from Pennsylvania, and to Senators H. C. LODGE, Jr., and DAVID I. WALSH, Senators from Massachusetts, and to the Members of Congress representing the city of Boston, namely, JOHN W. MCCORMACK, JOHN P. HIGGINS, ROBERT LUCE, and GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM.

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact the United States Housing Act of 1937, being S. 1685 and H. R. 5033

Whereas many persons in this community are unable to provide themselves and their families with decent, safe, and sanitary housing facilities without some degree of aid from the Government; and

Whereas the continued maintenance of our blighted areas and slums is not only a social menace but constitutes a great economic drain upon the entire community and must therefore be no longer tolerated; and

Whereas it is desirable to preserve the benefits of the program which has been so far undertaken and make use of the experience thus accumulated; and

Whereas no moneys for either loans or subsidies to continue this program are now available unless a permanent Federal agency is created with power to make loans and grants for housing and unless Congress makes the necessary appropriations; and

Whereas there has been introduced in the Congress of the United States the United States Housing Act of 1937, being S. 1685 and H. R. 5033, which, if enacted, will make possible the continuation of low-cost housing activities and embodies the major provisions of the Housing Act passed during the last session by the Senate; and

Whereas the enactment of this act will serve as a foundation for an intelligent and well-balanced approach to the solution of our housing problems in this country: Therefore be it

Resolved by the San Francisco Housing Association, That the United States Senate be, and it is hereby, memorialized to enact at the earliest possible date the United States Housing Act of 1937, being Senate bill 1685, and that the House of Representatives be, and it is hereby, memorialized to enact the identical measure, being H. R. 5033; and a copy of this resolution be sent to the President and Vice President of the United States and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives; to Senator HUGO BLACK, chairman of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor; to Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER; to Representative HENRY B. STEAGALL, chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives; and to Senators and Members of the House of Representatives from the State of California.

Resolution on the Wagner-Steagall low-rent housing bill

Whereas the State housing authority of New Jersey, a designated agency for the State of New Jersey, is charged with the duties of surveying housing conditions, and securing public low-rent housing for the wage earners or for the lower income groups; and

Whereas the surveys in New Jersey already conducted by this authority, with the assistance of the Federal Government, have disclosed a dire need for relief of housing conditions throughout the State, and particularly in the congested industrial cities; and

Whereas further surveys have proved to this authority that the necessity for providing decent American standard housing accommodations is acute and that there are imminent housing shortages; and

Whereas rehousing for these lower income groups would provide needed employment and stimulate the building trades and the capital-goods industries and the natural resources in this State; and

Whereas the surveys further show that the economic rent-paying ability of these families precludes the possibility of private capital providing this rehousing on a profitable basis; and

Whereas the Wagner-Steagall bill as introduced in Congress will provide great aid in accomplishing slum clearance and low-rent housing in New Jersey and through the country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the State housing authority of New Jersey endorses that bill and urges its passage; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Governor of the State of New Jersey, the Honorable ROBERT F. WAGNER, the Honorable HENRY B. STEAGALL, New Jersey's representatives in both Houses of Congress, the members of the Legislature of New Jersey, the mayors of our principal cities, the president of the League of Municipalities of New Jersey, the president of the State chamber of commerce, and other civic bodies interested in housing.

ENLARGEMENT OF MEMBERSHIP OF THE SUPREME COURT

Mr. WHEELER presented a letter from Robin Hood, secretary-treasurer of the National Cooperative Council, Washington, D. C., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL COOPERATIVE COUNCIL,
Washington, D. C., April 5, 1937.

Hon. BURTON K. WHEELER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WHEELER: Pursuant to our telephone conversation, I am able to report the results of the referendum taken of directors and executive committeemen of the National Cooperative Council on the question of President Roosevelt's plan to increase the number of Justices of the Supreme Court to a maximum of 15.

Officially as an organization the council is neutral on the subject. We were directed to take a referendum and to make the result available to all who may be interested. The following question was put to the 40 persons who constitute the council's executive committee and directorate:

"Do you personally approve President Roosevelt's plan to increase the number of Supreme Court Justices from 9 to a maximum of 15?"

The result is as follows: Nine "yes." Twenty-nine "no." Two not voting.

Geographically I find that the States of the South divided their 12 votes, 8 "yes" and 4 "no." The States of the North and the West divided 1 "yes" and 25 "no."

Very truly yours,

ROBIN HOOD, Secretary-Treasurer.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I have a comparatively short letter from a leading lawyer of my State in the nature of a petition relating to the action of the Vermont Bar Association in connection with a recent referendum in regard to the President's court proposal. It makes some seemingly helpful suggestions. I ask that the letter may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MONTPELIER, VT., March 11, 1937.

Hon. ERNEST W. GIBSON,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GIBSON: In connection with a referendum to the members of the Vermont Bar Association on the President's measure for enlarging the Supreme Court, it has been requested that we write our Vermont delegation at Washington. I would have done so long since had I felt there was any need to express my views. Moreover, I am sure that none of you need any encouragement in opposing this measure. I feel impelled, however, to suggest a point of view that seems to me to have escaped notice.

Everything I have read or heard about the project, even from its most vigorous opponents, assumes the constitutionality of the proposed legislation. I believe the assumption is unfounded, or at least quite doubtful, although as a practical matter an enlarged court—unless the added Justices should decently decline to participate in a decision of the question—would probably give it short shrift.

It appears well settled that the general rules of constitutional construction are the same as those of statutory construction, that the cardinal rule is the intent of the framers, and that this intent is properly ascertained, not only from the letter of the provision under inquiry, but from its spirit, even in direct opposition to the letter when necessary to give effect to its manifest intent. Happily, my view does not go to this last-mentioned extreme. In the instant matter we have to consider, first, the intent of section 1 of article III of the Constitution, and, second, the intent of the bill in question, and to ascertain whether the latter intent is consistent with, or conflicts with, the former intent.

Having in mind the fundamental conception of the Constitution, that the three deparments of government shall be separate, distinct, independent, and respectively check each upon the others, it strikes me that the manifest and controlling intent of article III, in order to make that concept a reality, was to assure the stability of the tenure of the judges. This was accomplished by the two provisions for duration of tenure "during good behavior" and to prohibit diminution of compensation during continuance in office. While part of the section conceivably permits Congress "from time to time to ordain and establish" one Supreme Court, and thus enlarge its membership, is it not clear enough that the exercise of that power must not infringe upon the principle of stability of tenure? Is it not equally clear that what cannot be done directly cannot be done by indirection?

As to the intent of the proposed legislation, while the President's message undertook to place the project upon proper grounds of celerity in the dispatch of business, his later public statements frankly announce that the real intent is to coerce certain Justices to retire and make way for the appointment of successors who will apply the Constitution to legislation in conformity with the President's views. In a word, the avowed intent of this bill is not to ordain and establish a Supreme Court of larger membership or more productive capacity, but to undermine the guaranteed stability of tenure of the present Judges by coercing their retirement.

I submit that such an intent, so clashing with the manifest intent of article III of the Constitution, cannot constitutionally be made effective by an act of Congress. If these views are sound, as I believe they are, why is everyone so ready to concede that the pending measure has no constitutional infirmity? I am fully aware that the point doubtless has no value as an "argument to the people", but it might weigh somewhat with thinking men who are honestly in doubt.

Cordially yours,

GEORGE L. HUNT.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1949) to increase the number of midshipmen allowed at the United States Naval Academy from the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 292) thereon.

By Mr. RUSSELL:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 129) authorizing the issuance of a special postage stamp in honor of the late Thomas E. Watson for his services in the origination of the Rural Free Delivery Service; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, at the request of the American Federation of Labor, I introduce a bill to amend the National Labor Relations Act of July 5, 1935, which I ask may be referred to the appropriate committee.

I also request that a copy of the amendatory bill, which is very brief, and correspondence between John P. Frey, president of the Metal Trades Department, A. F. of L., and Mr. J. Warren Madden, chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts will be received and appropriately referred, and the correspondence will be printed in the RECORD, together with the bill.

The bill (S. 2108) to amend the National Labor Relations Act, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph (b) of section 9 of the act approved July 5, 1935 (National Labor Relations Act), be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end of the paragraph, after striking out the period and inserting a colon, the following: "Provided, however, That in any case where a majority of the employees of a particular craft shall so decide the Board shall designate such craft as a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining."

The correspondence presented by Mr. WALSH in connection with the bill is as follows:

MARCH 25, 1937.

Mr. J. WARREN MADDEN,
Chairman, National Labor Relations Board,
1010 Vermont Avenue NW., Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MADDEN: A conference between representatives of international unions affiliated with the metal trades department, A. F. of L., which was held today, instructed me to communicate with you relative to petitions for elections to determine exclusive representation, which are received by the National Labor Relations Board.

It was the opinion of the conference that in addition to verbal presentations which have been made by representatives of the metal trades to the Board that it was advisable to place before you officially the request of the metal trades department and the reasons for making it.

In many of the industries, and particularly those employing semiskilled labor and so-called mass-production workers, there are also employed skilled craftsmen. In most instances some of the latter are members of the international union of their craft or occupation. In other instances all of the skilled craftsmen are members of their respective organizations. Almost invariably these skilled workmen have verbal or written agreements with their employers.

In many of the industries these skilled workers are in a minority, perhaps a small one. The outnumbering majority being so-called mass-production or semiskilled workers.

It is obvious that if a vote of all of the employees were taken on the question of establishing one organization as the sole body to represent all of the employees that the semiskilled or production workers could easily prove a majority in favor of the organization they desired. A vote taken on such a basis and under such circumstances would be a denial of the rights of a minority, the very minority who had first established trade-union organization, a minority having a prior right to consideration.

It seems obvious that should the groups of skilled workers be denied the privilege of voting separately as to who should represent them, that decisions of the National Labor Relations Board in connection with the elections held could result, seriously handicapping, if not destroying, local unions of skilled workers which have existed for many years.

If you find yourself in disagreement with the views just expressed, we would appreciate your giving us this information, so that perhaps through conferences a clearer understanding of all that is involved could be reached.

If you are in agreement with the necessity for giving the skilled workers an opportunity to express their preference separately, so that the rights of the majority may not be applied in a manner which destroys the rights of the minority, then may we request that you communicate with your regional directors, so that they may have a better understanding of the policy which is to be carried out by all representatives of the National Labor Relations Board in connection with employee elections held for the purpose of determining representation?

Cordially and respectfully yours,

JOHN P. FREY,
President, Metal Trades Department.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD,
Washington, D. C., April 1, 1937.

[J. Warren Madden, Chairman; Edwin S. Smith; Donald Wakefield Smith]

JOHN P. FREY,
President, Metal Trades Department,
American Federation of Labor,
Ninth and Massachusetts Avenue NW.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FREY: This is in reply to your letter of March 25 inquiring as to the Board's policy with reference to the representation of skilled workers, members of craft organizations, who work in so-called mass-production industries.

Where the question has arisen concerning unions affiliated with one parent body, such as the American Federation of Labor, the Board has, as you know, sought to have the question of appropriate bargaining units agreed upon by the unions themselves, or when this could not be done, has as a matter of policy waived jurisdiction in hope that the matter would be settled by the Federation itself.

In cases where there is no superior parent body to decide between conflicting unions, each seeking representation but with different ideas on bargaining units, the Board seems plainly to have the responsibility of decision. It is equally plain that the Board should be guided by the wishes of the employees, ascertained in such a way as to make their choice a free one. But as to just how these general principles would work out in any particular case which might come before the Board, neither I nor the Board can speak with finality except in the decision of our cases.

We shall, as in the past, welcome any participation which you or any of the members of your department desire to have in any cases involving them. We should also be glad to have you present your views informally to the Board for its information. We are all trying to educate ourselves toward a possible wise solution of a difficult problem.

With kind regards, I am,
Very truly yours,

J. WARREN MADDEN.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mr. PEPPER, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1679) to provide for establishing engineering experiment stations at the land-grant colleges, and it was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, Senate bill 1176, for the relief of Charles Augustus Lathrop, was referred to the Committee on Claims, when, in fact, it belongs to the Committee on Finance. I have spoken to the chairman of the Committee on Claims, who approves the transfer. Therefore I request unanimous consent that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMUTING OF ALIENS FROM FOREIGN CONTIGUOUS TERRITORY—AMENDMENTS

Mr. COPELAND submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3679) to restrict habitual commuting of aliens from foreign contiguous territory to engage in skilled or unskilled labor or employment in the United States, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed.

NATURALIZATION AND CITIZENSHIP—ADDRESS BY SENATOR THOMAS OF UTAH

[Mr. LEWIS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the Appendix an address entitled "Tampering With a Birthright", delivered by Senator THOMAS of Utah on the evening, Apr. 2, 1937, at the Hotel Astor, New York City, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE SOUTH LOOKS AHEAD—ADDRESS BY SENATOR REYNOLDS

[Mr. RUSSELL asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "The South Looks Ahead", delivered by Senator REYNOLDS before the Southern Traffic Safety Conference in Atlanta, Ga., Apr. 5, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESSES BY POSTMASTER GENERAL FARLEY IN TEXAS

[Mr. SHEPPARD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a number of addresses delivered in Texas by Postmaster General James A. Farley, which appear in the Appendix.]

MINIMUM-WAGE DECISIONS—LETTER OF EDWARD F. PRICHARDS, JR.

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter written by Edward F. Prichard, Jr., dealing with the minimum-wage decisions rendered by the Supreme Court, which appears in the Appendix.]

T. V. A. FOR COLUMBIA BASIN

[Mr. POPE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Richard L. Neuberger on the subject of T. V. A. for the Columbia Basin, which appears in the Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. Resolutions coming over from a previous day are in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask that the two resolutions coming over from a previous day, and all other resolutions relating to the subject of sit-down strikes, be passed over for the present. I will state that after the unanimous-consent agreement has been carried out it is my intention to submit a motion to proceed to the consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 7.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the resolutions do not come up automatically. They are now on the table and can come up only by motion, particularly the one which was submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

I address myself to the Vice President in the nature of a parliamentary inquiry. Cannot the concurrent resolution introduced by the Senator from Nevada, which is now on the table, come up only on motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. That motion must be made after the conclusion of morning business and, under the unanimous-consent agreement, after the call of the calendar. Is not that correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct. The only problem involved is that there is one resolution relating to sit-down strikes, which comes over from a previous day. That resolution would come up now in the regular order of business unless the request of the Senator from Arkansas is granted.

Mr. McNARY. I thought the able Senator from Arkansas referred only to the Pittman concurrent resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I said all resolutions, and then referred particularly to Senate Concurrent Resolution 7.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] offered a resolution, which went over under the rule. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EMBARGOES AGAINST NATIONS AIDING OTHER NATIONS IN CIVIL STRIFE

Mr. NYE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. With the exception of the resolutions referred to by the Senator from Arkansas, the clerk will state in order the resolutions coming over from a previous day.

The Chief Clerk read Senate Resolution 100, submitted by Mr. NYE on March 25, 1937, requesting information as to authority to declare embargoes against a nation engaged in civil war.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, this resolution has gone over under the rule. I hoped it might be taken up today. Unavoidable absence on the part of the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], who desires to be present when the resolution is considered, prompts me to request that it may go over without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota? The Chair hears none.

CROP-INSURANCE SYSTEM FOR FRUIT AND VEGETABLES

The Chief Clerk read Senate Resolution 108, submitted by Mr. PEPPER on March 31, 1937, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is requested to transmit to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, a plan and recommendations for the establishment of a system of crop insurance for fruits and vegetables, and to make such studies as may be necessary in connection therewith.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think there should be an explanation of the resolution. It is a matter of importance. The resolution apparently commits the Senate to a plan for the establishment of a crop-insurance system for fruits and vegetables. It calls upon the Department of Agriculture to supply a plan at once. Before the Senate is committed to any plan on the subject, or to extending crop insurance to fruits and vegetables, it ought to understand just what it is doing.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I feel that it was an historic day when the Senate last week passed the bill sponsored by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] providing for crop insurance for wheat. I thought at the time, however, that the Senator from Idaho responded properly when he said that in principle, at least, crop insurance should first be provided for those crops with respect to which there is the greatest natural hazard.

I have just had a very vivid illustration of that principle in my own State of Florida. I received yesterday a telegram reading as follows:

Practically entire Glades farms destroyed last night by rain and hail. Thousands destitute, and unless can get assistance community confronted with a serious situation.

In a subsequent telegram from the same source I am advised that an area of about 50 square miles between Pahokee and Belleglade was totally destroyed by this rain and hail storm. That is the sort of thing which should be provided against by some sound system of crop insurance.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am in sympathy with the Senator's resolution and the object sought to be accomplished by it; but it was stated the other day, during the consideration of our crop-insurance bill with reference to wheat, that the Department of Agriculture is now making a study with reference to many other agricultural products besides wheat, with a view of making a recommendation for legislation on that subject. I am wondering whether it really is wise to pick out any one agricultural product and emphasize it and give it a preferred status with respect to its own production and danger without doing the same thing with respect to others.

There are many other crops that are subject to drought, and damage by hail and storm and other things; and I am satisfied that the Department is giving consideration to the whole subject. I appreciate the situation of the Senator from Florida, coming as he does from a fruit-growing State; yet we are all from fruit-growing States and tobacco-growing States and corn-growing States, and I wonder whether it is really fair to these other crops to pick out one of them and ask the Department to make a special study of it and report upon it without regard to the Department's activities with respect to other crops. What is the Senator's view about that matter?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, in reply to the queries of the Senator from Kentucky, I will state that I remember that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] the other day made the statement that fruits and vegetables, because of their peculiar nature, would have to be dealt with by a different kind of crop-insurance plan than that which might be applicable to more stable crops and those less subject to natural hazard. For that reason I thought it would be appropriate that a particular study should be made with respect to crops of this kind. I certainly have no desire to keep any other Senator from having a study made about the commodities in which he is interested. I wanted an assurance that these crops which are so subject to natural hazards shall be considered in the Department of Agriculture with respect to some kind of crop insurance, and that a plan shall be submitted when and as one shall come to the mind of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would the Senator object to an amendment which would make the resolution read "fruits, vegetables, and other agricultural crops"?

Mr. PEPPER. That is quite all right.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator's purpose, and yet I am sure he can realize the position of many of us who are interested in other crops as well as fruits. I will say that I am interested in fruits also.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator, in his amendment, indicate that preference shall be given to those crops which are most subject to natural hazards?

Mr. BARKLEY. That certainly would be a proper thing to do, but I do not know whether or not it would be necessary to state it in the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Florida would object to this resolution going over, in order that the Senate may be afforded an opportunity to consider it more fully than we can consider it this morning. It occurs to me that it would be desirable to ascertain what is now going on in the Department of Agriculture with respect to this study, and what information has been assembled. It is recalled that some time ago the announcement was made that the information was not available upon which to base a general crop-insurance system at this time.

I suggest to the Senator from Florida that he let the resolution go over for the present, with the understanding that it will be taken up later.

Mr. PEPPER. I shall be glad to do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will go over.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Florida a question. Has the Senator made inquiry of the Secretary of Agriculture as to the amount of work which would be involved in evolving a plan?

Of course, the bill which was passed a few days ago contains an authorization for the Department to proceed with its investigation as to any other commodities, which would include fruits and vegetables.

As I attempted to point out, there is a difference in the consideration of perishable fruits. It seems to me the same plan would not apply in reference to perishable fruits as in reference to wheat or cotton or corn or any other commodity which might be stored for a considerable period of time. The only question in my mind is whether or not the amount of work which would be involved in working out a new plan might require the services of additional persons or an additional appropriation.

I am very much in favor of this resolution; and I hope the Secretary of Agriculture, as the result of this resolution, or of something else, will proceed with the investigation of fruits and vegetables, because I realize that in the fruit States the hazards are just as great, and oftentimes greater and more destructive, than in the grain States, and therefore there is in some respects a greater need for insurance on fruits and vegetables than on wheat or corn because the former may be more easily destroyed.

Therefore I am very much in favor of this resolution, and I shall join with the Senator at any time in urging that some sort of a practical plan be worked out; but I should be interested to know how much additional labor or additional money might be required to comply with this resolution. Since the resolution has gone over anyway, if the Senator can obtain some information on that subject I am sure I should like to have it.

Mr. PEPPER. The matter in which I am interested is that the attention of the Department of Agriculture shall be directed very specifically to this subject, and that the Secretary shall proceed with all possible haste toward some kind of a reasonable conclusion. I shall be glad to collaborate with the Senator from Idaho on that inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will go over.

The clerk will state the next resolution coming over from a previous day.

EFFECT OF BONNEVILLE DAM ON PROPAGATION OF FISH

The Chief Clerk read Senate Resolution 113, submitted by Mr. STEIWER on April 5, 1937.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, apparently the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER], who submitted the resolution, is not present at this time. I wonder if the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] would like to have it go over.

Mr. MCNARY. I think so.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the resolution be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the resolution being passed over? The Chair hears none.

Under the unanimous agreement entered into on Monday last the clerk will call the calendar for the consideration of unobjected bills.

Mr. LEWIS rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois desire recognition now?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I understood the Chair to state that I was to be recognized now, unless such action would run counter to some of the regulations prevailing in the practice of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a unanimous-consent agreement under which the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar is now in order. The Chair does not know how long it will take, but very likely not very long.

Mr. LEWIS. And is it the suggestion of the Chair that at the close of the consideration of such bills I shall be recognized?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Illinois at the conclusion of the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to whatever the practice is.

THE CALENDAR

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the first business in order on the calendar.

The first business on the calendar was the resolution (S. Res. 8) limiting debate on general appropriation bills.

Mr. ROBINSON and Mr. MCNARY (and other Senators). Let the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 548) for the relief of Dorothy White, Mrs. Carol M. White, and Charles A. White was announced as next in order.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I obtained the information I have been seeking with reference to this bill, and presented it yesterday to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the chairman of the subcommittee which handled the bill. The Senator from Nebraska is not present, and I ask that the bill be passed over. In the meantime, I understand that the House has passed an identical bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1435) to create a board of shorthand reporting, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1436) providing for the employment of skilled shorthand reporting in the executive branch of the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I also ask to have that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 792) for the relief of Sam Larson, guardian of Margaret Larson, a minor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

INVESTIGATION OF FEASIBILITY OF RECLAMATION PROJECTS

The bill (S. 48) to authorize an appropriation for investigations under the Federal reclamation laws was announced as next in order.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, this is a measure intended to authorize an appropriation to enable the Bureau of Reclamation to carry on certain investigations in the drought-stricken areas, for which a great many requests have been made.

Mr. MCKELLAR. About how much money will be required?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The authorization is for $600,000. A great many requests have been made, and the Department in its report stated:

> Hundreds of requests have been received to investigate the feasibility of reclamation projects. Some of these projects should be examined, when funds are available, and a definite conclusion reached as to whether the essential factors of soil, water, and climate are present in such degree as to give a reasonable assurance of constructing and developing a successful project—

And so forth. The Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation feels that this authorization should be made. Steps will afterward be taken to determine whether any appropriation should be made under the authorization.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. Let it go over today. I desire to confer with the Senator about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 419) to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 532) to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads by providing for the inspection and investigation of conditions prevailing in train-dispatching offices and train-dispatching service and for the promulgation of necessary rules and regulations governing the working conditions of train dispatchers was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIETERICH. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 29) to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads by requiring common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to install, inspect, test, repair, and maintain block-signal systems, interlocking, highway grade-crossing protective devices, automatic train-stop, train-control, cab-signal devices, and other appliances, methods, and systems intended to promote the safety of railroad operation was announced as next in order.

Mr. DUFFY. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CREATION OF INDIAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

The bill (S. 1902) to create an Indian Claims Commission, to provide for the powers, duties, and functions thereof, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. May we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a bill similar to this one was introduced and considered during the last Congress, and was passed by the Senate. Because it passed late in the session, it did not get through the House of Representatives. The bill is a departmental measure, recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. It has been considered by the Department of Justice, and the Department suggested a few slight amendments. The bill before the Senate embodies those amendments.

The reason for the bill is the long delay in the consideration of Indian claims before the Court of Claims. In 1927 a measure was enacted giving the California Indians the right to go into court and present their claims. Their case has been pending since 1927. The case was filed by the Attorney General of California, but it is not being prosecuted; nothing is being done. It is to help Indians of that class that the measure before us is being urged. In 1925 or 1926 the Senate referred a case to the Court of Claims for an examination and a report. That case has not as yet been returned to the Senate.

It is to help the Indians get their claims in shape; it is to help the Department of the Interior and the Department of Justice that the proposed commission is being suggested. It is very urgently recommended by the Department of the Interior that the bill be enacted.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when we have been so liberal in permitting Indians and Indian tribes to present their claims to the Court of Claims, a judicial body guided by the rules of judicial procedure, and yet with a great deal of authority to make investigations, it seems a work of supererogation to create another commission. Obviously the Court of Claims could handle these matters.

The Senator has referred to a case from California, where the Attorney General of California has not prosecuted the case—I did not understand whether for lack of information, or for some other reason, good, bad, or indifferent. But it seems to me that where we have set up a tribunal which can handle these matters, and cases have been referred to it, and the members of the Court of Claims are men of character and ability, men of experience, to create another commission would be adding to the machinery of the Government unnecessarily. I do not know how many members are to compose the commission at a salary of $10,000 each; I have not had a chance to read the bill. I respectfully ask the Senator to let the bill go over so that I may have an opportunity to look into it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Just one further word, if I may. If the present procedure is followed, the claims to which I have referred will be pending before the Government for another hundred years. Constant expense will be incurred by the Government and the several agencies of the Government and the Indians themselves in prosecuting their claims.

Let us take the California case, for instance. There are 23,000 Indians in California. They reside in every section of the State, in small bands and in larger bands. It is obvious that those Indians cannot get together and present a united case, and unless some body is created to help them they never will get together. The Court of Claims sits as a judicial tribunal and listens to cases presented, but the Court of Claims cannot go out and organize and present a case to itself. The Indians are financially unable to do it, and because of their location they cannot do it. The measure before us is proposed to give these Indian tribes a tribunal to represent them in presenting their cases properly to the Court of Claims for adjudication. I think it is in the interest of economy and efficiency that assistance be afforded in getting these cases ready for trial within a reasonable time, and it is for that reason that the committee is urging the enactment of the proposed legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

INDIAN IRRIGATION WORKS

The bill (S. 1621) to credit certain Indian tribes with sums heretofore expended from tribal funds on Indian irrigation works was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the bill apparently is of considerable importance. It contemplates the expenditure of approximately $4,000,000. The report shows that the act of August 1, 1914, shifted the reimbursable costs from a tribal obligation to the individuals who own the lands benefited under the respective irrigation projects. To the extent that such costs or expenditures are liens against the lands of the respective projects, they would continue to be liens even after the tribal funds of the Indians of the reservations involved have been reimbursed as contemplated in the proposed legislation. It is noted that there is an adverse budgetary recommendation. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS AT MILITARY RESERVATIONS

The bill (S. 1278) to authorize exchange of lands at military reservations, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to convey by quitclaim deeds the tracts of real estate now owned by the United States hereafter described, and in exchange therefor to acquire the title to the tracts hereafter described, or rights pertaining thereto or interests therein, for the purposes named:

(a) A strip of land comprising part of the Quartermaster Depot Military Reservation at Jeffersonville, Ind., lying along the right-of-way of the Louisville & Jeffersonville Bridge & Railroad Co. as part of the consideration for land now owned by said railroad company lying adjacent to the main section of said depot.

(b) To enter into and execute an agreement or agreements with the owners or claimants of adjoining land to fix and establish a location for the western boundary line of that part of the Plattsburg Barracks Military Reservation, N. Y., acquired from Pliny Moore, and others, by deed dated December 30, 1814, and he may, if he deems it advisable, give to or receive from such owners or claimants appropriate releases, by way of quitclaim deeds or otherwise.

SEC. 2. That in conveying property of the United States under authority contained in this act, the Secretary of War shall determine that the exchange is to the best interest of the Government.

HOLABIRD QUARTERMASTER DEPOT, BALTIMORE, MD.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1586) to authorize the Secretary of War to sell to the General Motors Corporation a tract of land comprising part of Holabird Quartermaster Depot, Baltimore, Md., which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "comprising a part of Holabird Quartermaster Depot, Baltimore, Md., and situated at the northwest corner thereof, west of Broening Highway, which tract is no longer" and to insert in lieu thereof "comprising that part of the Holabird Quartermaster Depot, Baltimore, Md., lying south of the right-of-way of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. and west of the Broening Highway, which tract is no longer", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell in his discretion to General Motors Corporation, a Delaware corporation, upon such terms and conditions as he considers advisable, a tract of land containing approximately 2.734 acres, comprising that part of the Holabird Quartermaster Depot, Baltimore, Md., lying south of the right-of-way of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. and west of the Broening Highway, which tract is no longer needed for military purposes, and to execute and deliver in the name of the United States and in its behalf, any and all contracts, conveyances, or other instruments necessary to effectuate such sale; the proceeds of the sale of the property hereinbefore designated to be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall have the said tract appraised: Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall not sell the said tract of land for a less consideration than the appraised value thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT D. CASTLEBERRY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 880) for the relief of Albert D. Castleberry, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Albert D. Castleberry, who was a member of Company I, Forty-fourth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, Philippine Insurrection, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 20th day of May 1901: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill? I note that the report concludes as follows:

The War Department strongly recommends that the bill be not favorably acted upon.

Mr. LOGAN. The War Department has recommended against the enactment of a similar bill a number of times, but it has been passed in the House of Representatives in three Congresses, and perhaps once or twice in the Senate.

This is a case where a good soldier in the Philippines, in combat service, was arrested on a charge made by two Filipinos that he had been guilty of larceny. He denied the charge, but he was convicted by the court martial. He was not identified, the record shows, and there was really no proof before the court martial that the Filipinos had been robbed at all.

Upon a very careful consideration by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], who is chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs which handled the matter, and by the full committee, we reached the conclusion this man was entitled to the relief sought, in view of his very excellent service while he was in the Philippines.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 847) to prevent the use of Federal official patronage in elections and to prohibit Federal officeholders from misuse of positions of public trust for private and partisan ends was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

FAIR TRADE PRACTICES

The bill (S. 100) to amend the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies", approved July 2, 1890, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is this what is called the fair trade practice bill?

Mr. HATCH. It is.

Mr. KING. I have just recently received the report of the hearings, and I did not know that the bill was to be reached this morning. I shall not object to it being taken up tomorrow or at any other time, but I request that it go over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

FRANCIS GERRITY

The bill (S. 1826) for the relief of Francis Gerrity was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Francis Gerrity shall be held and considered as having been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private, Troop D, Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry on December 16, 1901: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

BOWLING ON THE SABBATH

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 82) to amend section 7 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes", approved July 1, 1902, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, we ought to have an explanation of this measure.

Mr. KING. I ask that House Joint Resolution 226, now on the calendar, be substituted for the Senate joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I may have no objection, but I think the Senator from Utah should explain the measure.

Mr. KING. The report was presented by me for the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. The joint resolution was offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] at the request of the Commissioners. It merely provides, in view of the fact that there are so many fine organizations in the city engaged in bowling—10, 15, or 20—that they shall be permitted on the Sabbath Day to bowl from 2 p. m. to midnight.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

Mr. KING. The bill is endorsed by scores of organizations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KING. I ask to have House Joint Resolution 226 substituted for the Senate joint resolution and considered at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 226) to amend section 7 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes", approved July 1, 1902, as amended, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That paragraph 21 of section 7 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes", as amended, be amended by striking out the period at the end of the paragraph, inserting a colon, and adding the following words: "Provided, however, That bowling-alley establishments licensed under this section shall be closed at midnight on Saturday night and shall remain closed until 2 o'clock postmeridian."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate Joint Resolution 82 will be indefinitely postponed.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION OF DISABLED DISTRICT RESIDENTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 157) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation of disabled residents of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes" (Public, No. 801, 70th Cong.), which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled residents of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved February 23, 1929 (Public, No. 801, 70th Cong.), be, and it is hereby, amended by striking out "$15,000" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000, to be immediately available": Provided, That no such additional appropriation shall be available for expenditure except when matched by equal appropriations of District of Columbia funds, which are hereby authorized.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, under the basic law of the District of Columbia $15,000 is the maximum that may be expended for vocational rehabilitation within the District of Columbia. The Commissioners have strongly recommended that this basic limitation be raised to $25,000. All the bill does is to make that change.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF FEDERAL ROAD AID TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 978) to extend the provisions of certain laws to the District of Columbia, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the District of Columbia shall be entitled to share in appropriations now or which may hereafter become available for apportionment under the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes", approved July 11, 1916, and any act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, upon the same terms and conditions as any of the several States and the District of Columbia shall be included in the calculations to determine the basis of apportionment of such funds: Provided, That the system of roads on which Federal-aid apportionments to the District of Columbia shall be expended may be determined and agreed upon by the highway departments of the said District and the Secretary of Agriculture without regard to the limitations in section 6 of the Federal Highway Act respecting the selection and designation of such system of roads; and, when the system first determined and agreed upon shall have been completed, additions thereto may be made in like manner as funds become available for the construction and maintenance of such additions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let us have a statement about that measure.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this bill has been strongly recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture, who has charge of public roads, and by the Bureau of Public Roads, and by the Commissioners of the District. Senators know that Hawaii and other Territories of the United States have the benefit of the provisions of the Cartwright Act.

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill merely applies to the District of Columbia the same rules that now obtain in regard to Federal road aid in other parts of the country?

Mr. KING. That is correct. It simply extends to the District of Columbia the same privileges that are accorded to Hawaii, Alaska, and Puerto Rico.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is any amendment proposed to the bill?

Mr. KING. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, I am compelled to leave the Chamber to attend a committee meeting. A few moments ago Calendar No. 268, Senate bill 978, to extend the provisions of certain laws to the District of Columbia, was passed. I have received a letter from Secretary Wallace, brought to my attention since the bill passed, in which the Secretary states that while he approves the bill, it ought not to go into effect until June 30, 1939, instead of June 30, 1938, for the reason that allocations have been made for the fiscal year 1938, and therefore the District of Columbia ought not to come under the terms of the act until the next appropriation bill shall have been passed.

Accordingly, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and passed, in order that I may offer the appropriate amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the votes will be reconsidered.

Mr. KING. I now move to amend the bill, on page 1, line 3, by striking out the numerals "1938" and inserting the numerals "1939."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 3, it is proposed to strike out "1938" and insert "1939."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROMOTION OF SAFETY ON HIGHWAYS OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1226) to amend the act of May 3, 1935, relating to the promotion of safety on the highways of the District of Columbia, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 3 and 9 of the act entitled "An act to promote safety on the public highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia; to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes", approved May 3, 1935, are amended by striking out the phrase "in excess of $100" where it appears in such sections.

SEC. 2. Section 4 of such act is amended by striking out the phrase "over $100 in amount."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to have this bill analyzed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. It modifies the existing statute with respect to safe operation of motor vehicles in the District of Columbia. What changes does this measure make in the present law?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is to promote safety on the highways of the District of Columbia. It seeks to amend the Safety Responsibility Act approved May 3, 1935, which provides that a motor-vehicle operator's permit and registration certificate may be suspended if the operator has been convicted of operating an automobile while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, and so forth, or of leaving the scence of an accident in which personal injury has occurred without making his identity known, or has had a judgment rendered against him in excess of $100, which judgment remains unsatisfied for a period of 30 days.

The bill amends sections 3 and 9 of the act referred to, wherein it provides that the motor-vehicle operator's permit and registration certificate may be suspended if a judgment in excess of $100 has been procured against the operator and the judgment has remained unsatisfied for a period of 30 days, by striking from sections 3 and 9 the words and figures "in excess of $100", and in section 4 the phrase "over $100 in amount."

A majority of the judgments procured against motor-vehicle operators which remain unsatisfied are less than $100 in amount, and it has been deemed proper to make the provisions of the law effective in those cases where the judgments obtained are less than $100 in amount.

There are some operators who do not respond in damages, and whose motor vehicles are so dilapidated and insecure that they ought not be used upon the streets. As stated, many accidents are caused by the negligence of operators driving vehicles of the character referred to, and whose permits and registration certificate are not suspended because of the small judgments obtained. It is believed that the law should be amended in the particulars referred to.

Mr. ROBINSON. The bill is intended to give strength to the statute for the protection of persons driving in motor vehicles against carelessness?

Mr. KING. Yes; it is for protection against carelessness.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 77) for payment of compensation to persons serving as postmaster at third- and fourth-class post offices was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think we should have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the author of the bill, is not present. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Tennessee whether that is the bill which the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] and I introduced jointly?

Mr. ROBINSON. This is a House bill.

Mr. HAYDEN subsequently said: Mr. President, I was called from the Chamber a few moments ago, and have been informed that during my absence a request was made that Calendar No. 270, House bill 77, for payment of compensation to persons serving as postmaster at third- and fourth-class post offices should be temporarily passed over. I shall be glad to explain the bill.

When the bill came from the House it was referred to the Post Office Department by the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. The Post Office Department pointed out that while the bill corrects the situation with respect to the past it does not take care of the future. I will illustrate the situation sought to be corrected. Recently a postmaster died; and in the interim between the time of the death of the preceding postmaster and the time when the acting postmaster could be appointed services were necessarily rendered in the post office. The purpose of the bill is to take care of the interim between the time of the death, resignation, or removal of the postmaster and the appointment regularly of an acting postmaster.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, when the bill was reached a few moments ago I had forgotten the facts, and the Senator from Arizona was not present on the floor at that moment. For that reason I asked that the bill go over. Someone asked for an explanation, and I could not give it at the time. I now recall the facts, since the Senator from Arizona has made his statement. It seems to me that postmasters undoubtedly should be paid for the time they actually serve; and I hope the bill will be passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the proviso, following the appropriation for compensation to postmasters, contained in the act approved March 1, 1921 (41 Stat., p. 1151; U. S. C., title 39, sec. 39), is hereby amended by adding, after the words "unnecessary delay", at the end thereof the following: "A person who, upon the occurrence of a vacancy and pending the appointment of a postmaster or the designation of an acting postmaster, assumes and properly performs the duties of postmaster at any third- or fourth-class post office shall be allowed compensation as postmaster for the period of such service: Provided, That the Comptroller General of the United States, in the settlement and adjustment of accounts and claims for compensation for service heretofore rendered, but subsequent to June 30, 1930, is hereby authorized and directed to allow compensation as postmaster for service rendered under the circumstances and conditions hereinbefore prescribed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

HECTOR H. PERRY

The bill (S. 870) for the relief of Hector H. Perry was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Hector H. Perry, who was a member of the Medical Detachment, Second Regiment United States Engineers, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 21st day of September 1928: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRODUCTS OF THE FISHING INDUSTRY

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 278) to make funds available to carry out the provisions of existing law authorizing the purchase and distribution of products of the fishing industry, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That not to exceed $1,000,000 of the funds available to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation may be used by such Corporation for the purpose of diverting surplus fish (including shellfish) and the products thereof from the normal channels of trade and commerce by the acquisition and distribution thereof in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the purchase and distribution of products of the fishing industry", approved March 5, 1937.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, has not a House bill covering that matter been passed?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a bill was passed authorizing the inclusion of fish among other products that the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation could dispose of, but there was no money available to carry out the provisions of the act. This joint resolution completes the former action taken and sets aside a million dollars for this purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think the House bill has become law, and under that law an appropriation of a million dollars has been made.

Mr. WALSH. No; that is not the fact. It is necessary to take this step in order to complete the authority that was given in a previous act passed during this session of Congress providing for the fishing industry the same relief we have provided for the farm industry under the A. A. A.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know the Committee on Appropriations has had before it a bill carrying a provision for a million dollars, and I am quite sure it was passed. It is not intended to have another million dollars appropriated for that purpose, is it?

Mr. WALSH. It certainly is not.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to add a word?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be glad to have the Senator do so. He has knowledge concerning this particular matter.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Tennessee appointed me a member of the subcommittee from which this joint resolution has come to the Senate. On March 5 of this year Congress passed an act authorizing the use of $2,000,000 to relieve the fishing industry. It did not make a direct appropriation. The measure now before us followed that, and instead of making a new appropriation makes available $1,000,000 out of money already available to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. The joint resolution does not call for a new appropriation but is necessary because the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation was not authorized to use its funds for this particular industry.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, this measure does not involve a new appropriation of money; it merely authorizes an appropriation of money already in the hands of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. Is that correct?

Mr. ADAMS. It authorizes the application of money now on hand for a use for which it was not previously authorized.

Mr. McKELLAR. In the light of those facts, I see no objection to the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. WALSH. The Bureau of the Budget recommended $2,000,000, but the House cut the amount to $1,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. The House cut the amount to $1,000,000, and, in order to make the proper appropriation, the joint resolution is proposed. It does not involve the appropriation of any new money.

Mr. WALSH. The Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation cannot spend more than a million dollars for this purpose, and need not spend that much, if it sees fit not to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES E. LA VATTA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 208) for the relief of Charles E. La Vatta, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$1,000", and at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Charles E. La Vatta, of Fort Hall, Idaho, the sum of $1,000 in full settlement of his claim against the United States for loss of property of said Charles E. La Vatta located in land to which he had not title: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may deposit the said sum to the credit of the said Charles E. La Vatta and handle it in the same manner as other individual money: Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CREEK EQUALIZATION CLAIMS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1652) to provide for the payment of certain Creek equalization claims, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe to pay the net amount of the judgment obtained by the Creek Nation of Indians in the Court of Claims Case No. H-510, amounting to $144,106.01, to the enrolled Creek Indians by blood and the enrolled Creek freedmen, or their heirs, who, as shown by the records of the Interior Department, have unpaid claims for moneys to equalize their land allotment rights, including claims not filed or adjudicated within the time specified by the act of June 30, 1919 (41 Stat. 3-24), on the basis of $860, pursuant to law as the standard value of a Creek allotment, provided that all such claims shall be filed within a period of 2 years from the date of approval of this act. Applications shall be filed with the superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes Agency, Muskogee, Okla.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall give notice through such newspaper advertisement as he may designate, of the provisions of this act authorizing the payment of the claims, immediately after the date of approval hereof, and such further notice through newspaper advertisement as may be deemed necessary not later than 6 months prior to the expiration of the 2-year period above indicated, and any claims not filed within said period shall thereafter be barred.

SEC. 3. That the net amount of the judgment shall be ascertained by deducting from the total amount thereof such fees as may be due or payable to the attorneys who represented the Creek Nation in the case before the Court of Claims and a further sum of not more than $300 to be used in the payment of expenses incident to publishing notice of readiness to pay the claims as herein provided. Any balance of the net amount of such judgment remaining after the payment of the claims as herein provided shall remain on deposit to the credit of the Creek Nation of Indians until otherwise provided by Congress.

SEC. 4. That the provisions of the Deficiency Appropriation Act of June 19, 1934 (48 Stat. 1021-1033), reading as follows, are hereby repealed: "The Creek Nation: The appropriation of $144,106.01 contained in section 4, title I, of this act for payment of a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of the Creek Nation shall be placed to the credit of the Creek Nation on the books of the Treasury Department and such sum is hereby appropriated and, after deducting the attorneys' fees and expenses allowed by the Court of Claims and the estimated expenses of making the roll and the payment herein provided for, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior per capita to the members of the Creek Tribe of Indians entitled thereto or their heirs, upon a roll made as of date of December 4, 1933, under the direction of and approved by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, some years ago the Congress gave the Indians of the Creek Tribe the right to go into the Court of Claims and present their demands against the Government. Pursuant to that jurisdictional act, suit was filed and judgment obtained in the sum of about $144,000; but there is no provision of law directing the Secretary as to whom he should pay the money, or in what quantity. This bill simply seeks to give the Secretary direction as to the payment of $144,000 to the members of the Creek Tribe.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPITAN GRANDE BAND OF MISSION INDIANS

The bill (S. 1832) to reserve certain public domain in California for the benefit of the Capitan Grande Band of Mission Indians was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described public domain be, and it is hereby, withdrawn from entry, sale, or other disposition and set aside as an addition to the Barona Ranch, a tract of land purchased for the Capitan Grande Band of Mission Indians under authority contained in the act of May 4, 1932 (48 Stat. L. 146): Lots 1 and 2 of section 23, township 14 south, range 1 east, San Bernardino meridian, California, containing 12.19 acres: Provided, That said withdrawal shall not affect any valid rights initiated prior to approval hereof.

CONCESSIONS TO INDIANS ON RESERVOIR SITES AND OTHER LANDS

The bill (S. 1945) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant concessions on reservoir sites and other lands in connection with Federal Indian irrigation projects wholly or partly Indian, and to lease the lands in such reserves for agricultural, grazing, and other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to grant concessions on reservoir sites, reserves for canals or flowage areas, and other lands under his jurisdiction which have been withdrawn or otherwise acquired in connection with irrigation projects for the benefit in whole or in part of Indians, and to lease such lands for agricultural, grazing, or other purposes: Provided, That such concessions may be granted or lands leased by the Secretary of the Interior under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for such considerations, monetary or otherwise, and for such periods of time as he may deem proper, the term of no concession to exceed a period of 10 years: Provided further, That the funds derived from such concessions or leases, except funds so derived from Indian tribal property withdrawn for irrigation purposes and for which the tribe has not been compensated, shall be available for expenditure in accordance with the existing laws in the operation and maintenance of the irrigation projects with which they are connected. Any funds derived from reserves for which the tribe has not been compensated shall be deposited to the credit of the proper tribe: Provided further, That where tribal lands of any Indian tribe organized under section 16 of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), have been withdrawn or reserved for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned, such lands may be leased or concessions may be granted thereon only by the proper tribal authorities, upon such conditions and subject to such limitations as may be set forth in the constitution and bylaws or charter of the respective tribes.

SANTA ROSA BAND OF MISSION INDIANS

The bill (H. R. 5293) to authorize the acquisition of 640 acres of land for the use and benefit of the Santa Rosa Band of Mission Indians, State of California, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase in the name of the United States of America in trust for the Santa Rosa Band of Mission Indians 640 acres of land described as section 36, township 7 south, range 4 east, San Bernardino meridian, California, and for that purpose there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not to exceed the sum of $500.

POSTAGE RATES ON CERTAIN THIRD-CLASS MAIL MATTER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1521) to amend the act of February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1053), relative to postal rates on third-class mail matter, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 206 (a) of the act entitled "An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes", approved February 28, 1925, as amended (43 Stat. 1053; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 39, sec. 235), is hereby amended by inserting before the period at the end of such section a comma and the following: "but bills or statements of account produced by any photographic or mechanical process shall not be accepted as mail matter of the third class unless presented in quantities of 20 or more identical copies. When such bills or statements are not identical or are presented in quantities of less than 20 identical copies, they shall be subject to postage at the first-class rate."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, what is the change in the present law which this bill makes with respect to postal rates?

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill contains the following wording:

But bills or statements of account produced by any photographic or mechanical process shall not be accepted as mail matter of the third class unless presented in quantities of 20 or more identical copies.

The report of the Post Office Department on this bill is as follows:

This bill embodies the identical provisions of H. R. 11954 recommended by this Department and passed by the House of Representatives on June 1, 1936.

In the past, bills and statements of account have for the most part been prepared by means of the typewriter, or billing machines operating on principles similar to the typewriter, and have been subject to postage at the first-class rate. In recent years, however, new printing processes have been perfected which are so flexible that the text or printed matter on each separate bill or statement is changed with almost the same facility as if it were produced on a typewriter. One process involves the punching of cards according to the information desired to be conveyed. The cards are then run through a tabulating machine which simultaneously tabulates the figures and prints a complete line at a time on the bill or statement. The actual printing process is entirely automatic, and under the present regulations such bills or statements appear to be mailable at the third-class rate of postage, provided, of course, they are not in facsimile of typewriting.

In other words, by these new processes the payment of the first-class mail rate is obviated in the case of certain of these publications and the third-class rate applies. For that reason the Department felt that this amendment ought to be incorporated in the law, in view of the results accomplished by these mechanical devices.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act relative to the classification of bills or statements of account produced by photostatic or mechanical process."

RATES OF POSTAGE ON MATTER FOR THE BLIND

The bill (H. R. 4286) to provide special rates of postage on matter for the blind was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That magazines, periodicals, and other regularly issued publications in raised characters, whether prepared by hand or printed, or on sound-reproduction records (for the use of the blind), which contain no advertisements, when furnished by an organization, institution, or association not conducted for private profit, to a blind person, at a price not greater than the cost price thereof, shall be transmitted in the United States mails at the postage rate of 1 cent for each pound or fraction thereof, under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe.

CONSOLIDATION OF RURAL MAIL ROUTES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 585) relative to consolidation of rural mail routes, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with amendments, in line 5, after the word "the", to strike out "patrons of such" and insert "boxholders of each"; after line 6, to strike out "Sec. 2. That when routes are consolidated and carriers are appointed to fill such consolidated routes, there shall be no increase in the pay of such carriers for carrying such consolidated routes"; in line 11, to change the section number from "3" to "2"; and in line 12, after the word "extent", to strike out "in" and insert "of such", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter consolidation of rural mail routes shall not be made by the Postmaster General unless and until a majority of the box holders of each route, in writing, shall request such consolidation.

SEC. 2. That all laws in conflict be, and are hereby, repealed to the extent of such conflict.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this seems to be an important measure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the provisions of this bill were on the statute books for a great many years. When the last Code of Laws was prepared it seems to have been left out. During the past 6 or 7 years rural routes have been consolidated to a very remarkable degree. During that time, since this process of consolidation has been under way, the appropriations for rural routes have decreased in the Nation by something like $10,000,000. Of course, it is perfectly natural that there should be a desire on the part of the Department to consolidate routes where improved roads have been provided, but in many instances the Department has disregarded the almost universal desire of the patrons on the routes in making the consolidations. So it seems to me, in view of the tremendous decrease in mail facilities afforded people living in the country, there ought to be some limitation placed on the Department in bringing about consolidations of rural routes.

I have had requests from almost every State in the Union concerning this matter complaining of the curtailment of rural mail facilities by the Department beginning, as I now recall, as long ago as 8 years.

For these reasons the committee felt that there ought to be some limitation. Of course, wherever routes should be consolidated, it will be easy enough to have the patrons agree to the consolidation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, right there, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be happy to answer it if I can.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this bill requires that, before any consolidation shall be made, the Postmaster General must secure the approval of a majority of the patrons on all routes affected. It is entirely conceivable to me, from my acquaintance with these matters, that the interest of the carriers rather than the service rendered to the patrons might become the paramount consideration in the consolidation of the routes.

I never knew a carrier or his friends who wanted his route consolidated unless he was going to be the carrier on the consolidated route. Some of the most difficult questions that have been presented to me during recent years have grown out of this matter and have been the result of the desire of the carriers themselves to perpetuate their services. It is quite a natural desire, and no complaint arises out of that; but, at the same time, with the improvement in the highways and of transportation facilities, one carrier may now serve many times the number of patrons that were formerly served by a single carrier. I do not know whether it is desirable to place the entire control of the matter in the boxholders on the routes. They usually like their carriers, and, if a carrier does not want his route consolidated, they would respond to his wish in the matter. I merely make that suggestion to the Senator who is in charge of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am very glad to answer the Senator's suggestion. The condition he has stated is the real reason for this bill. There have been many consolidations of routes, and they are usually made at the request of the carriers. That is true, and especially is it true, since adoption of the practice to increase the carrier's compensation by something like 50 percent. If the carrier is getting, say, $1,800, and two routes are consolidated and his mileage is thereby tremendously added to, he may do the work in half the time it took him to do it before, but the salary of the particular carrier is increased by just about 50 percent. The cost of the service is decreased at the same time, but, under the present arrangement the Department gets about half the saving effected and the favored carrier gets about the other half. Those are the facts. In the meantime, the patrons along the route suffer, and I say they ought not to suffer. The Government ought to give to those living in the country reasonable and proper mail service.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator says "the patrons suffer." My statement or question was premised on the consideration that any consolidation that is made will not impair the service. If it should, perhaps the consolidation should not be made. How do the patrons suffer when routes are consolidated?

Mr. McKELLAR. Those residing in the country, whose homes are not on the fine highways which have been built during the last few years—and I hope their number may increase—are forced to go to those highways for their mail when the little routes along which they live are consolidated with a route along the improved highway. Ordinarily when a consolidation takes place a carrier has his route added to so that it becomes 40 or 50 or even 60 miles in length, and over such route he can operate his automobile and deliver the mails at a very much less cost and in very much less time and obtain a 50-percent increase of salary. In the meantime the country people not living on the main highways suffer, because they either have to go to the highways for their mail or do without it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Do they not have to do that now?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; the routes have been very carefully laid out so as to serve the patrons.

Mr. FRAZIER rose.

Mr. McKELLAR. I see the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] is on his feet. I think he can give an illustration which will make clear what the committee had in view in this particular matter.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Tennessee will yield, I should like to give just one illustration in answer to the question of the Senator from Arkansas. There is now pending in my home county a proposal to consolidate two rural routes with which I am perfectly familiar, they being only a short distance from where I live. One is a daily route and the other a triweekly, and it is proposed to consolidate the routes. The train reaches the town where the routes start about 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and that day's mail reaches the patrons the same afternoon. Under the proposed plan of consolidation, on the triweekly route the carrier will have to go out with the mail before the train comes and thus have only the mail that arrived on the previous day. The mail is distributed on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays; the mail would be delivered in the forenoon; and the Saturday afternoon mail would not reach the patrons until the following Tuesday. The patrons of both routes are complaining very bitterly over the situation. The Department has recommended that the change be made effective on the 16th day of the present month, as I recall. I have asked them to hold it up pending the passage of this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that the postal authorities ought to have, and I think they do have, authority to lay out such postal routes as they deem necessary. I know they have in my State been very responsive to the wishes of the people and very generous in providing routes that would be satisfactory.

Mr. FRAZIER. In the particular case I mentioned I believe practically 100 percent of the patrons of both routes have protested against the consolidation, and I think with logical arguments; but the Department has gone over their wishes and proposed the consolidation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Utah, if I may, that I imagine the condition to which he refers as being satisfactory was that which existed when the very law which this bill seeks to reestablish was in effect, because until about 8 years ago the law on the statute books provided that the box holders, the patrons of the routes, should be consulted as to changes in the routes. I hope the Senator will let the bill pass.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENTAL MONOPOLY OF CARRIAGE OF MAIL

The bill (S. 1426) to protect more effectively the governmental monopoly of the carriage of mail was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 181 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 304) be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 181. Whoever shall establish any private express for the conveyance of letters or packets, or in any manner cause or provide for the conveyance of the same over any post route which is or may be established by law, or from any city, town, or place, to any other city, town, or place, between which the mail is regularly carried, or whoever shall aid or assist therein shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than 6 months, or both. Nothing contained in this section shall be construed as prohibiting any person from receiving and delivering to the nearest post office, postal car, or other authorized depository for mail matter, any mail matter properly stamped."

SEC. 2. Section 186 of the Criminal Code, as amended (48 Stat. 1207; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 309), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 186. Nothing in this chapter shall be construed to prohibit the conveyance or transmission of letters or packets by private hands without compensation, or the conveyance for one sender, in any one day of not more than 25 letters or packets by special messenger employed for the particular occasion: Provided, That whenever more than 25 such letters or packets are conveyed or transmitted by such special messenger for one sender in any one day, the requirements of section 3993 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 500) shall be observed as to each piece."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1431) limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain cases, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

GEORGE J. FRANK

The bill (S. 1263) to authorize the award of a decoration for distinguished service to George J. Frank was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to cause the recommendation for the award of a decoration to George J. Frank, formerly a bugler, Company K, Thirtieth Regiment United States Infantry, for distinguished conduct during the German offensive at the Marne River, on July 15, 1918, to be considered by the proper boards or authorities, and such award made to Frank as his said conduct merits.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the consideration of recommendation of an award of a decoration to George J. Frank for distinguished service."

JOHN PATE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1538) to correct the military record of John Pate, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the name "John Pate", to insert "deceased", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers John Pate, deceased, who was a member of Company I, Sixteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, Civil War, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill relative to the military record of John Pate, deceased."

FRANK FISHER

The bill (S. 1572) for the relief of Frank Fisher was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Frank Fisher, who was a member of Troop E, Second Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 19th day of June 1884: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

WALTER S. HENDERSHOT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 890) for the relief of Walter S. Hendershot, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to consider the application of Walter S. Hendershot, former second lieutenant, Fifty-first Infantry, United States Army, for the benefits of the act entitled "An act making eligible for retirement, under certain conditions, officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability in line of duty while in the service of the United States during the World War", approved May 24, 1928: Provided, That the application of the said Walter S. Hendershot shall be filed with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs within 6 months from the date of the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

F. P. DELAHANTY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 772) for the relief of F. P. Delahanty, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, to strike out "1925" and insert "1923", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Lt. Comdr. F. P. Delahanty, Supply Corps, United States Navy, with the sum $820.80, representing the amount of payments made by him in good faith to Lt. Comdr. C. K. Osborne, United States Navy, for rental and subsistence allowance of his dependent mother during the period July 1 to December 31, 1923.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOSSES BY FIRE AT HAMPTON ROADS NAVAL TRAINING STATION

The bill (S. 1316) to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the value of personal effects lost by fire at the naval training station, Hampton Roads, Va., on February 21, 1927, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum or sums, amounting in the aggregate not to exceed $3,500, as may be required by the Secretary of the Navy to reimburse, under such regulations as he may prescribe, enlisted men or former enlisted men of the Navy, for value of personal effects lost as a result of the fire which occurred in unit J, naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va., on February 21, 1927: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claims. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claims, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. WALSH subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier in the session today the Senate passed Senate bill 1316, a naval relief bill. I am informed that the House has passed a similar bill, which is now on the clerk's desk. I ask the Chair to lay the House bill before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 4687) to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the value of personal effects lost, damaged, or destroyed by fire at the naval training station, Hampton Roads, Va., on February 21, 1927, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which Senate bill 1316 was passed be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. WALSH. I now ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4687, which is identical with Senate bill 1316.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4687) to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the value of personal effects lost, damaged, or destroyed by fire at the naval training station, Hampton Roads, Va., on February 21, 1927, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 1316 will be indefinitely postponed.

JOHN MULHERN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 545) for the relief of John Mulhern, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the enacting clause, to strike out "That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for payment by the Secretary of the Treasury to John Mulhern, or his legal representatives" and insert "That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John Mulhern, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John Mulhern, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $202, as full compensation for a gasoline tank, gasoline pump, and 105 gallons of gasoline, destroyed on March 11, 1934, by fire caused by pupils of the Truxton Canon Indian school, Valentine, Ariz.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES WHITE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1479) for the relief of the estate of Charles White, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Treasury", to strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, the sum of $250 to the estate of Charles White, late of Gonzalez, Fla., in full satisfaction of all claims of such estate against the United States for damages for losses resulting from the destruction by members of the seven hundred and fifty-seventh Civilian Conservation Corps Company of approximately 100 trees growing on property owned by the said Charles White and occupied by such company under a lease dated October 3, 1933: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN WAR MOTHERS, INC., AND OTHERS

The bill (S. 1516) to authorize certain payments to the American War Mothers, Inc., the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, Inc., and the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, Inc., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to set aside as a special fund in the Treasury

the sum of $294,852.97, representing the unexpended balance of the sum transferred from the funds "Stars and Stripes" and "Other funds" by the act of March 4, 1933 (47 Stat. 1573), to the fund entitled "Recreation fund, Army", which latter fund was covered into the surplus fund of the Treasury by the Permanent Appropriation Repeal Act, 1934 (48 Stat. 1229).

SEC. 2. The special fund created pursuant to this act is hereby appropriated, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to divide said special fund into three as nearly equal parts as is possible and to pay one such part to each of the following organizations: The American War Mothers, Inc., the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, Inc., and the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, Inc.

SEC. 3. Each such corporation shall use the funds so received to aid and assist disabled, destitute, or unemployed veterans, and/or their dependents; and shall make a full and complete report to the Congress not later than the 1st day of January of each year of the amount so expended during the preceding fiscal year.

FORT ETHAN ALLEN, VT.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 720) to authorize the acquisition of land for military purposes at Fort Ethan Allen, Vt., which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to add a new section at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, approximately 3,000 acres of land located in the State of Vermont near the Fort Ethan Allen artillery range, for use in enlarging the artillery range and for other military purposes. The purchase price of such land shall not exceed $175,000, and such land shall be warranted free of all encumbrances and when purchased shall be a part of Fort Ethan Allen.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire upon such terms as he shall deem expedient, a perpetual easement for a road right-of-way from the Fort Ethan Allen Military Reservation to United States Highway No. 7 and to convey therefor, as part consideration, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the 33-foot road right-of-way acquired from Edmund J. Mosely and wife by deed dated September 14, 1893. The purchase price of such right-of-way shall not exceed $100 and the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the above-mentioned 33-foot right-of-way.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN B. JONES

The bill (S. 652) for the relief of John B. Jones was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers John B. Jones, who served as a first lieutenant, One Hundred and Forty-third Infantry, United States Army, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged under honorable conditions from the military service of the United States on the 8th day of June 1918: Provided, That no back pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

ERNEST AND LOTTIE DUNFORD

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 456) for the relief of Ernest and Lottie Dunford, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the word "Treasury", to strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to Ernest and Lottie Dunford, of Ramsey Town, Henry County, Va., jointly, the sum of $3,500 in full settlement of their claim against the United States for the death of their minor child, Hattie M. Dunford, who was struck and killed by a Civilian Conservation Corps truck on June 23, 1934, at Ramsey Town, Va.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

JOHN W. BECK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1239) for the relief of John W. Beck, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "Army", to strike out "setting aside his classification in class B, and immediately thereafter place him upon the retired list of the Regular Army for physical disability incurred in line of duty, and said retirement shall be held and considered to have taken place on December 26, 1928 (the date of his retirement under class B), and he shall receive the full retired pay and allowances of an officer of his grade from January 2, 1929 (the date of his separation from active duty): Provided, That the amount of the retired pay already received by him since January 2, 1929, shall be deducted from the amount due him under this act", and insert "and place him immediately thereafter upon the retired list of the Army, with the same privileges and retired pay as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulation for officers of the Regular Army: Provided, That the said John W. Beck shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowances by the passage of this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to summon John W. Beck, a first lieutenant, United States Army, retired, before a retiring board, to inquire whether at the time of his retirement under section 24b, National Defense Act, as amended, he was incapacitated for active service, and whether such incapacity was a result of an incident of service, and if, as a result of such inquiry, it is found that he was so incapacitated, the President is authorized to nominate and appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, the said John W. Beck, a first lieutenant, Regular Army, and place him immediately thereafter upon the retired list of the Army, with the same privileges and retired pay as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulation for officers of the Regular Army: Provided, That the said John W. Beck shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowances by the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE YUSKO

The bill (S. 1367) for the relief of George Yusko was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army George Yusko shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private of Company D, One Hundred and Fifty-seventh Regiment United States Infantry, on April 20, 1919: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act prior to its passage.

ARAPAHOE AND CHEYENNE INDIANS

The bill (S. 1622) authorizing the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal in the usual and prescribed manner to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statute of limitations, to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render final judgment in any and all legal and equitable claims, not heretofore finally determined by the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court of the United States, arising under or growing out of any agreement, Executive order, treaty, or act of Congress with or affecting the land or other rights of the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indian Tribes or bands thereof residing in the States of Wyoming, Montana, and Oklahoma, against the United States: Provided, That if the said tribes or any band thereof claim any interest in the lands, moneys, or other property involved in any proceedings already instituted and pending in the Court of Claims, except the case or cases of the Sioux Indians against the United States, such tribe or band thereof may file an intervening petition therein and be made parties thereto, with all the rights and privileges as if original parties to such proceedings, including the right to have judgment for any sum or sums found due such intervenors.

SEC. 2. That if any claim or claims be submitted to the court hereunder, it shall determine the rights hereunder, both legal and equitable, of each and all the parties thereto, as upon a fair arbitration and award, notwithstanding the lapse of time or the statutes of limitation; and any payment which may have been made upon such claims shall not operate as an estoppel but may be pleaded as a set-off, and the United States shall be entitled and allowed credit for all sums, including gratuities, if properly chargeable in such proceedings, paid to or expended for the benefit of such tribes or bands of said Indians. The claim or claims of each of said tribes or bands of Indians may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment and consolidation in proper cases. Such action shall make the petitioner or petitioners party or parties plaintiff and the United States party defendant; and any nation, tribe, or band of Indians the court may deem necessary to the final determination of such suit or suits may be joined therein by order of the court.

The petitioner shall set forth the facts upon which the said claim or claims are based and the law, treaties, agreements, Executive orders, act of Congress, or wrongful actions of the United States under and upon which recovery is sought, it being the intent of this act to give the Court of Claims full and complete jurisdiction to determine all legal and equitable rights of the said Indians against the United States: Provided, however, That if any claim or claims are asserted against the United States for minerals mined and removed by white persons without authority and in trespass from lands reserved to the said Indians prior to the time the same were ceded to the United States, and the said Indians have not been compensated therefor, the Court of Claims is authorized and empowered to base any judgment entered for such minerals at one-eighth of the value of the minimum amount shown to have been so mined and removed in trespass, and this provision shall not be construed as creating any right of a legal or equitable nature but shall authorize the said Indians to present their claims in this respect to the Court of Claims for adjudication as such claims may exist under treaties or agreements with the United States.

The petition shall be signed and verified by the attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract or contracts with said Indians and approved in accordance with existing law: Provided, That any and all such claims against the United States shall be forever barred unless suit be instituted or petition filed herein in the Court of Claims within 5 years of the date of this act.

Official letters, papers, documents, or other public records or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys for the said tribes or bands of Indians to such records.

SEC. 3. Upon final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee or fees, not to exceed 10 percent of the amount recovered, to be paid to the attorney or attorneys for the said tribes or bands of Indians, together with all necessary and proper expenses incurred in the preparation and prosecution of the suit or suits, and the same shall be included in the decree of the said court and shall be paid out of any sum or sums found to be due the said Indians under such suit or suits.

SEC. 4. The proceeds of all amounts, if any, recovered for said Indians, less the fees and expenses of the attorney or attorneys, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians decreed by the said court to be entitled thereto and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum from the date of the original judgment or decree, and thereafter shall be subject to appropriation by the Congress for the benefit and uses of the said Indians.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the calendar. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is recognized.

THE THREAT OF NEW WAR AND PROPOSED MEDIATION IN EUROPEAN AND ASIATIC CONFLICTS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I did not mean, of course, to be importunate when once or twice earlier in the day I sought information from the Presiding Officer as to when, under the calendar for today, it would be appropriate for me to fulfill the notice which I gave respecting my privilege of addressing the Senate this morning; but Senators, I am sure, have had the experience of meeting a committee from the home State who had arrived in the city and, having an engagement with a member of the Cabinet, expected their messenger—sometimes extravagantly called a United States Senator—who had made the engagement for them, to accompany them to the meeting. This explains why I was urged to call upon the Chair, and explains the necessity for my seeking the opportunity at the earliest possible moment to comply with my assignment to address the Senate.

Mr. President, I gave notice to the Senate of my desire to give expression today to a matter which I felt was pertinent touching a phase of our foreign relations. Personal engagements such as that to which I have just alluded, calling for me to leave the Senate, make it impossible that I should enter into detail on the subject as fully as otherwise I should have liked to do. That which I shall say shall partake of nothing more in force than suggestion.

I think we recall the confession that Byron puts in the mouth of the Giaour:

> If among ye dwell a single thought, or rest with you a memory, I am content.

Mr. President, today, sir, and yesterday, are the anniversaries of the days when we voted for the war we call the World War. I was a Member of this honorable body at the time. I participated in that vote, voting affirmatively upon the representations made to the body and the facts as they then existed. We turn regretfully to note today, sir, that while the contribution of life and all of our Treasury was tendered in order to secure peace and in the hope that we might end war in the world, the Honorable Lloyd George, the war Premier and war director of England in the conflict, in a late address makes this declaration:

> Truth must record, whether men and women realize it or not, civilization the world over is losing its supremacy over the human mind. Barbarism, from which we fondly hoped our race had emerged, is once more beginning to darken the human scene.

Mr. President, as to our own country, we feel this truth. Some of you may recall that in the Hall of Eblis, as given us by the painter Beckford, those who were its occupants walked up and down in long rows and in circles with their hands upon their bosoms. When investigation came, it revealed that beneath where their hands rested were their wounds bleeding, but which they hid, that the extent of the agonies might not be seen.

All around us today our American citizen is in something of that position. He moves around in the hallways of his encounter, in the circles of his pursuit, with something of a question within himself, touching his heart and throbbing against it, whether he is not to confront again the pains of war; whether there shall not flow from him and those who are his the blood as once before it was given for the sacrifice. To our soldier we declare, we esteem him "who lives as one who lived free, and who in death sleeps in victory."

Mr. President, we are compelled to note, sir, that it is being reported here to the Senate, to America, and to our countrymen, and put in constant circulation, that this, the United States of America, is being solicited to join again the faction of one party or another of the different countries which were once termed our "allies." We are called on to state that we wish to join them in their enterprise in some form, and give our approval to something of their undertaking, and much more, sir, our support. I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point an Associated Press dispatch from Paris dealing with this subject.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FORMER ALLIES WOO AMERICA FOR NEXT WAR—TWENTY YEARS AFTER WORLD CONFLICT BRITAIN, FRANCE LOOK TO UNITED STATES

PARIS, April 6.—France and Great Britain, in fear that war may come to Europe again, have become more insistent in wooing the support of the United States for such an eventuality today, 20 years after America entered the World War.

So fixed has the idea become that the United States would once again come to the aid of her former allies that no speech on international politics by French and British statesmen is complete without some reference to "the ties that bind us to our brothers in the great democracy over the water."

Both Great Britain and France have based their efforts to insure an alliance with Washington through appeals to a common democratic form of government.

The French, in particular, have emphasized that the United States can ill afford to have her "two outposts of democracy"—France and Britain—beaten by an array of Fascist powers, which would then be free to turn their attention toward America.

No neutrality bill, the French are convinced, will be sufficient to localize the next world war.

In fact, they read into one provision of the Washington neutrality bill a preliminary indication that the United States would again favor her old allies. The provision is that belligerents, in case America remains neutral, buy prime commodities for cash only and for transportation only in the purchaser's own ships.

Only France and Britain, French sources maintained, have the necessary financial resources to make such purchases and the fleets to transport them with adequate protection.

French statesmen have stated that in the event of any war during President Roosevelt's term of office they could count on his known sympathy with the people's front experiment.

They also pointed to a recent address in Paris of United States Ambassador Bullitt as the beginning of a trend to abandon the "never again" policy America has proclaimed since she entered the last "war to end wars."

Bullitt's statement that there was "always some possibility some nation might be sufficiently reckless to drive us into war", they were frank to interpret as a direct warning to Europe's totalitarian states.

"It has come just 20 years after," one statesman said, "but better late than never."

Observers pointed out that the Franco-British efforts to woo Washington were not going unnoticed by Germany and Italy and that steps were being taken on their part to strengthen American friendship. These observers considered the recent appointment of Dr. Hans Dieckhoff as German Ambassador to the United States as such a move.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I invite you and my colleagues of the Senate to remember that it was just that pursuit that carried us into the World War. I remember too well how many there were in this honorable body of all those which we describe as political parties, who, through this form of propaganda inserting itself with such insidious influence, were gradually led to the conclusion that the former doctrine of ours which was "against alliance with foreign countries" should then be abated, if not wholly repealed. Sirs, little by little we began to yield to these constant assertions that it was due to ourselves on the one hand, and to humanity on the other, that we conjoin with these of European combination in their efforts to have that particular faction favored by them prevail as against the other within the same country, the two then politically contesting against each other.

Mr. President, it is a sad thing to relate how susceptible we are, as human beings, to the influence of precedent. It will be recalled by those who sit about me that Bolingbroke, in his treatise on The Uses of History, had occasion to allude to a situation very similar to that which now surrounds us, saying:

All proves that we are ever exposed to the influence of picture, and surrender to precedent, summoning us to beware of the illusion that bewitches to delude.

And then Bolingbroke proceeds and proclaims:

We are besieged even in our strongest holds. Temptations, conducted by the passions of other men, assault us; and our own passions, which correspond with these, soon betray us.

Mr. President, we are naturally assumed to resist these attempts, and to apprehend conquest as the result of these precedents; but we turn to ask ourselves, With what result? We turn now to the evidences, and I speak to you of the present record. I summon you to note the concurrence and the rapid multiplication of these systems as they were devised and carried out.

First, you will recall that within our memory—for I shall not go beyond it—in 1931 it was openly declared abroad that this, our home country, and our Government, had entered into an understanding by which we joined one faction of one party and one party of another nation with the object of adjudging who was the aggressor. Then when a conclusion was reached in our judgment as to who was the aggressor, accepting the judgment of other nations that were deciding this question for themselves, this United States was to visit its penalty upon that so-called "aggressor" by policies of discrimination, either as to financial favor or as to the contribution of material and supplies. In this manner we should awaken all the enmity of those against whom we decided, and have nothing to hope in the form of a contributing friendship from those in whose favor we joined. Senators on both sides had to rise on the floor of this honorable body to remind those in power that no such authority had been given those who were speaking abroad, and assuming to speak in our behalf. Little by little it was persisting by repetition. It was a long time before it gradually melted away; still we saw the insistence continue.

Then, sir, we will recall, it was not long afterward that there arose also from the foreign sources the public statement and the assertion that those abroad in official power had solicited with success this our United States to meet in a convention, designated a "disarmament conference", to decide the limitations of the arms of some countries, with privileges of enlargement to be extended to the others. It is to be deplored when you recall that this particular disarmament prospect and project, particularly limited the United States of America in special detail.

Fortunately our people were not inclined to yield. They had seen something of just these observations and understood these inducements. Therefore, this presumption likewise, sir, failed of its purpose.

One would have imagined that those who had assumed this encounter would have grown tired, if not discouraged, in the attempt to purloin this United States of America in these meretricious undertakings. Yet, alas, sir! we are compelled to note that it was only some months afterward that the question arose, strangely, interestingly, when the subject of the increase of the Navy was being considered. A set of voices abroad promptly asserted that there was a movement afoot, to which we were to be a party, by which there was to be a limitation of navies, the word "disarmament" having been dropped. I beseech you to recall, as the distinguished leader of the honorable opposition party, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], who here sits with attention to us, will recall with detail—for he, too, took part in the discussion—that it was announced that we should limit our Navy according to that which should be decided by those who sat abroad. Unhappily, it may be, regretfully, it should ever be—it was stated that they were to prescribe the exact limitations upon our Navy, and, sir, the circumference of our defense of ourselves as against their assault upon us.

One would assume, sir, that this might end the audacious assumptions when the proponents of this scheme had seen how the spirit of America resented this intrusion. But we call attention, sir, to the fact that promptly, and not long after, you saw an exhibition when certain governments of the world assembled in a certain meeting at a certain place in Europe known and recalled by you all, and gave out to the world that there had been an expression from our State Department that this Government, its President, and its officials, were "in sympathy" with those governments that assumed to lay what were called "sanctions" upon Italy—Italy at that particular time being at war with Ethiopia.

It was of no concern to the United States as to what those countries in Europe desired to do among themselves or cared to do. Still when they placed us in the position of giving what they called "our sympathy", and thus our encouragement and our aid, to their undertaking against a fellow nation in Europe or Asia, and awaken our Italian-Americans in direct hostility to the United States, they went further than the good sense of this land could possibly excuse.

May I be pardoned if I allude to myself? I had been, just before this announcement, very ill in Russia. A small Government errand, unsuccessfully discharged, had been put in my hands. During this long illness I received further duties which justified me to go to Rome. When in Rome I was compelled to confront how it was difficult even to get what we call a "taxi", a mere conveyance of travel. Everywhere the remark was made, "He is an American." The feeling was so severe against Americans, on the theory that Italy all over believed that which had just gone forth—that we had lent ourselves to those who were placing some limitation upon them in what they felt were their rights. Then all import from the United States or export to Italy was suddenly discouraged under a system by which, if it took the form of anything that looked like favor to us, we were promptly joined in condemnation to another country, also greatly denounced, and the cry would go forth as to the leper, "Unclean! Unclean!" I boldly in Rome made the assertion that there was no justification for saying the United States was "in sympathy" with any foreign government in any of its actions against some other government friendly to the United States. That whenever there was to be such, we would announce it in such proper manner that there could be no misconception as to our meaning, and a complete understanding of the limit.

It will be recalled—may I be pardoned—that I went from there to Geneva. There, despite the situation which officials of foreign lands could have gotten the United States into, officials assembled at Geneva, representing certain foreign governments, boldly rose in their places and reannounced that the United States authorized the statement of our partiality in the Italy-Ethiopia conflict. Then came the injustice to the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], who had been over in Geneva and abroad on an errand of education for himself as to international affairs, by the announcement that he had authorized that which we all knew under no condition had he ever spoken—the "sympathy" of the United States in the economic boycott of Italy.

But, sir, there at the League of Nations the assertion was revived. Upon my return to my home, particularly in my city of Chicago, with its near 300,000 Italians, I was able to see, to my great regret, that these Italian fellow citizens had aroused themselves to the belief that we had joined the League of Nations and the nations which were members of it to war against the interests of Italy.

Sir, as we recall this, and the efforts that it took for us to overcome these prejudices, we wonder why these duplications of such fables should be continued without justification, why these peculiar practices of misrepresentation were multiplied upon us. And now, sir, we turn to ask, What motive have these who do such things? We do not know, but we cannot but conceive the one that truly exists. We find it in the Thirty-fifth Psalm of the Holy Scripture, the wail of protest that can be the voice of our Nation:

> Let not them that are mine enemies wrongfully rejoice over me: neither let them wink with the eye that hate me without a cause.
> For they speak not peace: but they devise deceitful matters against them that are quiet in the land.

How fitting, sir, do we find the sacred epitome. And now comes the report, as our public press brings it to us. There is the intimation that the distinguished President of the United States has joined with certain gentlemen well known through international public life to call a meeting at Copenhagen, Denmark, and there our President is to assemble and give directions under which we are to interfere with the affairs of those who find from their situation multiplied armament necessary, or believe themselves in some situation which impels them to prepare for conflict.

In addition to this comes a further report that a gentleman representing us abroad upon a single subject, such as sugar, and a convention of sugar producers is authorized to receive the propositions of these nations abroad to us of the exchange, that they will limit their armaments if we will provide that wherever the armament is deficient for the purposes of their necessary conflict we will repair that deficiency by contributing our own Navy, and with it our Treasury, in order to aid them with supplies.

Surely Senators will know there never was foundation for such, and surely Senators will not fail to see how this is awakening against the United States a hatred in some sections, and among our own countrymen some fear and great suspicion. Because of such it is that they are asking themselves, "Are we again going into a foreign world preparing to maintain their conflicts? Are we again to inaugurate another April 6 and 7, when war must be declared out of the necessity of things which we allow, endorse, and encourage?"

Mr. President, we answer these European soothsayers and say, "You are laboring under great error. This United States will permit no military alliance with you. There will be no political partnership with any of you. We offer to all nations every association that looks for peace. We offer our aid to none that would bludgeon this land into war, and we will have nothing to do with your blood bondage that brings the world, as it is now, into a coliseum of destruction. We rather would have you know that in a better word we express ourselves:

> True to our colors, though our shadows grow dark,
> We will guide our sure sails as before—
> And hold hard the rudder that governs our bark—
> Nor ask how we look from the shore.

Mr. President, I bring these thoughts to the attention of Senators that I may make a contrast. There stood on this floor as our guest the distinguished Governor General of Canada. He addressed himself to this body in something of a recognition of the reception the Senate gave to that eminent official. It was with great interest that we noted that this scholar of literature, this former member of Parliament, this legislator—one established, sir, as a student of history—stood before us and wholly recognized and appreciated where he was.

He spoke of the times in which we, the English-speaking people, were in the past all united to the single object of peace and harmony among mankind. He tendered again the wish and hope that we could conjoin with each other looking again to establishing our doctrine, peace, and brotherhood. From this eminent official came no word suggesting alliance, nothing intimating that we should be politically subordinate to some country while we remained, if you please, in a secondary status. We are pleased to recall that that address has awakened our constant increase in admiration of this distinguished official and of his renowned country.

Now we ask, what position will it be understood we are in? Ours is simply this: We turn again to the sacred law when the reply to a question comes forth from the prophet saying, while we know not as to others—

> But as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.

We recall that our distinguished President lately assembled in behalf of peace with our neighbors of North and South America, and there presented the idea of the peace we seek, and as Milton says of the angel of peace, "So vital that but by annihilation can it die." To this conclusion we turn to ask, What is now our duty?

Mr. President, I here make bold to offer some suggestions. The hour has come upon the United States, as I see our situation, when we should fulfill the destiny for which this Republic was established—the brotherhood of man and peace among nations. There is over in Spain a conflict within a family itself. Across to the east are China and Japan, and China having war within itself. I take the liberty to suggest that it is now the hour when the legislative body of our country could well suggest to the President of the United States the tender of the United States in mediation. We to ask these nations to name their delegates, and have those delegates assemble in the United States of America, not in their own lands, or nearby, where ancient political prejudices long inherited may so control their operations, in the intense hate of the hour, by which they are surrounded and so controlled as wholly to prevent the success of the enterprise. We summon them to come here to our firesides of warmth and welcome; to our atmosphere of soft air and glowing light, to assemble where peace awaits the session and justice blesses the scene.

In support of this thought I tender the precedent to my fellow Senators and to our distinguished countrymen. Recall that a former President of the United States, the Honorable Theodore Roosevelt, summoned Japan and Russia, when they were in conflict, to a meeting for peace, and had them assemble here in the United States of America, at Portsmouth, N. H. The result brought those countries to peace. Since then, as we have observed with pleasure, they have remained moving along the same ground of hope, of amity, as between themselves; and, whatever we may hear as to the outbreak within that zone, we are gratified that we began, through the United States of America, the prospect which now may be theirs of a continuous peace.

In this connection, I go further. If we are proceeding to constitute peace, as it is our hope, I make the motion to my country to consider, since we are a party to the peace treaty executed at Versailles, seeing that it is that compact that has scattered, as from a sinister hand, the seed from which there has sprung this ominous growth of war, may we not ask, Has not the hour come when we can appropriately ask the nations which are parties to this peace treaty to assemble with their delegates here in the United States of America, far removed from the influences which brought about the unhappy combat of blood commonly referred to as the World War. There there was planted that which in growth scattered again the instruments of cannonading and grenades and all weapons of distress bursting from this document called a "peace treaty"?

Here, it may be, the nations party to the treaty could revise this document along the line of the new thought of these people who were parties to the making and who now, seeing that peace could be had, and some degree of harmony reassured, by some revision of this document, could restore it to where no longer would there be this license for future, and the desperate hatreds which we know now are threatening all Europe with war, if not with world encounter.

Will my comrades in this body say, "Is not LEWIS unusual in suggesting a partnership with foreign powers, in view of our past course of ever keeping our hands off foreign disputation?" But I advise a search of history. When France and Germany came to peace in 1872, our then distinguished Secretary of State, Hamilton Fish, and the then President, the distinguished soldier, Grant, under the advice of distinguished statesmen at that time, Republican on the one side and Democratic on the other, were able to make suggestions as to peace between France and Germany, after we had offered slight mediation, but not intruding our Nation as director or dictating. The suggestions were adopted. Those amendations, once approved, kept the peace between Germany and France completely for a generation until lately, unhappily, it was broken by situations more local than we are willing at this particular point and in this place to describe in detail.

Will not my colleagues further recall that when Austria and Germany were at war, and came to terms, it looked as if it would be the destruction of that which we call Schleswig-Holstein. Our distinguished officials, who were looking only for peace and accord between ourselves and those countries, but, of course, having in mind the residents of those countries in our midst, and the desire to maintain them in peace as our neighbors and fellow citizens, tendered from this country a suggestion, which was easily received and finally adopted, by which Germany and Austria reestablished their relation at peace, Schleswig-Holstein was disposed of according to the joint suggestion, and Denmark remains a country independent in itself, and a peaceful land, as an example to the nation neighbors about her?

I refer to but one other, and that, I am sure, is quite easily recalled by us. This country observed the unhappy situation between England and one of her own possessions known as South Africa. After an unfortunate defeat which befell England, that country desired to return to the conflict, for the purpose, no doubt, of maintaining her prestige. While our sympathies extended to the Boers in a great degree, those who were in power in this Government made suggestions to our friend, England, by which she was able, though in a second conflict, to come to terms with her possession, though the latter was inspired by encouragement from Ireland and America.

Thereby, from this entrance of American thought, as my fellow Senators will recall, England and South Africa were brought together in a common bond, which today, apart from local disturbances, is a bond of peace.

I therefore make the suggestion which I propose, and I ask, Are we wandering from the course that is traditionally that of the United States? We are a land of peace. These foreign countries trust us. They know we seek no conquest; we ask no territory; we demand no penalties; we are asking only that that shall be done which will accord peace to them and justice to humanity.

Shall it be said now that the President of the United States having started in the south in behalf of America, we shall not carry out the policy to all the world, if our tenders are received with the understanding that we prohibit for ourselves reward or punishment to others?

Here, sir, may I take the liberty to ask, Will you envision with me this advance of our United States in this new order? Let us conceive her as we bind about her brow the commandments of God; we place in her right hand the Sermon on the Mount, in her left hand the Constitution of the United States. Armored with this trinity, she advances to the new temple of international peace. If, sirs, it be that from any sphere there be the challenge, "Who comes?" let us know that the whole glad earth will respond, "Thank God, this is America!"

SIT-DOWN STRIKES AND UNFAIR INDUSTRIAL PRACTICES

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	Johnson, Calif.	Overton
Andrews	Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper
Ashurst	Copeland	King	Pope
Austin	Davis	Lee	Radcliffe
Bachman	Dieterich	Lewis	Reynolds
Bailey	Duffy	Lodge	Robinson
Bankhead	Ellender	Logan	Russell
Barkley	Frazier	Lonergan	Schwartz
Bilbo	George	Lundeen	Schwellenbach
Black	Gerry	McAdoo	Sheppard
Bone	Gibson	McCarran	Smith
Borah	Gillette	McGill	Stelwer
Bridges	Green	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Brown, Mich.	Guffey	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Brown, N. H.	Hale	Maloney	Townsend
Bulkley	Harrison	Minton	Truman
Bulow	Hatch	Moore	Tydings
Burke	Hayden	Murray	Vandenberg
Byrd	Herring	Neely	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hitchcock	Norris	Wagner
Caraway	Holt	Nye	Walsh
Chavez	Hughes	O'Mahoney	Wheeler

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 7.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read Senate Concurrent Resolution 7, submitted by Mr. PITTMAN on the calendar day of April 5, 1937, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the so-called sit-down strike is illegal and contrary to sound public policy; and

That the so-called industrial spy system breeds fear, suspicion, and animosities and is contrary to sound public policy—

The Congress only assumes to speak as to strikes in industries within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not rise to object. My observation will be more in the nature of a parliamentary inquiry.

I recall that when the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] proposed his resolution, it took the form of an amendment. Later it was somewhat modified and was proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] as an amendment to the Guffey coal bill, which the Senate passed day before yesterday. Did the Senator from Nevada at that time, or has he subsequently to that time, submitted it as a concurrent resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senator from Nevada submitted the concurrent resolution immediately following the vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. McNARY. It went then to the Secretary's desk?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McNARY. Therefore it is in order to move to proceed to its consideration?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the concurrent resolution, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the semicolon in line 4 and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the so-called industrial spy system breeds fear, suspicion, and animosity, tends to cause strikes and industrial warfare, and is contrary to sound public policy; and

That it is likewise contrary to sound public policy for any employer to deny the right of collective bargaining, to foster the company union, or to engage in any other unfair labor practice as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, at this point may we not have the whole concurrent resolution read?

Mr. ROBINSON. I am about to read it. If the amendment which has just been offered should be agreed to, the concurrent resolution as a whole would read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the so-called sit-down strike is illegal and contrary to sound public policy; and

That the so-called industrial spy system breeds fear, suspicion, and animosity, tends to cause strikes and industrial warfare, and is contrary to sound public policy; and

That it is likewise contrary to sound public policy for any employer to deny the right of collective bargaining, to foster the company union, or to engage in any other unfair labor practice as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

Mr. President, during the consideration of the so-called Guffey coal bill——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. From the declaration and reading, it appears that the first paragraph is identical in language with the amendment that was offered to the Guffey coal bill and defeated?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is true.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. I merely want to ask a question about the amendment. As the Senator read the amendment just now, the lines 8 and 9 appear to have been eliminated or deleted from the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. The original Pittman resolution contained lines 8 and 9, as follows:

The Congress only assumes to speak as to strikes in industries within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

Those lines are eliminated, and the resolution as now presented conforms to the original amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] in that particular. It makes no distinction as to strikes alleged to be within the Federal jurisdiction—and, indeed, I do not know what strikes are in the Federal jurisdiction—and expresses a general policy on the part of the legislative branch of the Government.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. From the reading of the amendment—of which we have no copy before us—it appears that it refers to the National Labor Relations Act and such unfair practices as are therein outlawed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. What are those practices?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the amendment as proposed specifies two of the unfair practices, namely, the resort to the use of spies and the denial of the right of collective bargaining through the use of the company union. The remainder of the provision is general in character, and is intended to assert as a matter of public policy the obligation on the part of all persons to observe the law passed by the Congress which is known as the Labor Relations Act.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. I merely wish to ask whether or not the form of the amendment in the second line may not be open to an interpretation that the Senator does not desire. It reads:

That the so-called industrial spy system breeds fear, suspicion, and animosity; tends to cause strikes—

And so forth. I assume the Senator does not mean to denounce strikes generally or to declare that strikes are contrary to public policy?

Mr. ROBINSON. No. I thank the Senator for the suggestion. It is not the intention of the resolution to denounce lawful strikes. The first provision of the resolution denounces the sit-down strike as unlawful. The second provision denounces the use of spies in labor controversies and negotiations as calculated to cause strikes and industrial warfare. While strikes are not to be regarded as unlawful except when they are in the nature of sit-down strikes, nevertheless it is not desirable that employers themselves should encourage strikes or stimulate them by the use of unfair methods.

The evidence before a committee of the Senate shows that on occasions employers have hired representatives of detective agencies, induced them to join unions of workers and to work their way to the head of the workers unions, all the while reporting to the employers the names of those composing the union and prompting the employers with information which has resulted in the discharge of many thousand workers. If any Senator here wishes to approve of that method and of such agencies, of course, his remedy now is to vote against the amendment; but it would be difficult, according to my opinion, to conceive of anything that is more unfair or more certainly calculated to cause disturbance among laborers than to hire thugs, and, for that matter, ordinary detectives, prompt those thugs and detectives to join labor unions, and so worm themselves into the confidence of the workers as to become officers of the unions. In some instances the evidence showed that hired detectives of the employers have secured all the offices of an employees' union, and, all the while, they have reported to the employers the names of those who composed the union, and, while themselves belonging to the union, they have incited conditions among the laborers which have inevitably resulted in strikes, disturbances, and industrial warfare.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I should like to suggest to the Senator that in one instance finally the only member of the union left was the spy who joined the union at the request of the employer, all the other members of the union having been discharged.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is a remarkable statement, but it is supported by the evidence. Here is a case where laborers, in the exercise of their right, recognized in accordance with sound public policy, formed an organization; then a secret enemy, hired for the purpose, joined the union, reported back to the employers the names of the laborers who were members of the union, whereupon the laborers were discharged, and the union consisted solely of the crook—and I use the term advisedly; I think he was a crook; certainly he did not deserve confidence—who was employed to break it up.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. STEIWER. I should like to obtain the Senator's interpretation of his own proposal. In the opinion of the Senator from Arkansas, would the amendment constitute a denunciation of the use of a spy for the purpose of preventing sabotage, we will say, in an industrial plant?

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, certainly not. I do not know what service a spy would perform to prevent sabotage; but the use of industrial spies as the term is employed in this amendment has come to have a pretty well-established meaning.

Mr. STEIWER. May I further intrude upon the Senator?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. STEIWER. I take it, then, that the Senator's purpose in offering the amendment is to denounce the spy system so far as it relates to interference with the rights of employees to organize or to bargain collectively?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. STEIWER. Or to choose their own agents in their negotiations with their employers?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly. I do not think that the resolution implies any denunciation of the lawful use of any agency to prevent lawless acts.

Mr. STEIWER. I assume, of course, that the Senator did not intend that purpose, but I have been told that the United States Government uses agents in its efforts to safeguard against subversive influences and that Federal agents sometimes are on the pay rolls of institutions. In a proper case, of course, no one would want to denounce that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no. And this resolution does not denounce any honest act or effort to conserve the law. What it does, and what it is intended to do, is to denounce those acts which are commonly accepted as violative of sound public policy; and in that class the so-called industrial spy system falls.

I do not wish to quibble about language; I have only a public interest in this matter, and my object is to see that right and justice are done to both parties to an acute labor controversy when we come to attempt to define a Federal policy. I have repeatedly stated to the Senate that, in my judgment, the sit-down strike is unlawful and is not to be approved; but I have neither in my heart nor mind approval for those unfair methods which have been employed in order to prevent laborers from having and enjoying reasonable opportunities to organize themselves for the betterment of their condition and for the protection of their rights.

Mr. President, I have said all at this time that I care to say.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the Senator clarify the expression "company union" in his amendment? There is perhaps a great diversity of opinion as to what a "company union" is.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] probably will discuss that question at some length. Of course, I think we all understand what is meant by the words "company union." Whenever an organization is fostered and promoted and financed by the company itself for the purpose of controlling the laborers and preventing them from exercising the rights which sound public policy guarantees to them it constitutes a "company union." Of course, such union is not always heralded as a scheme or enterprise to interfere with the rights of laborers, but, as a matter of fact, the object is to control the workers themselves, particularly in their exercise of the right of collective bargaining.

Mr. President, I am entirely content, so far as I am concerned, that the Senate should vote on this resolution whenever it is ready to vote. I realize that it involves subjects that are of intense interest, but I do not feel, as was stated on a former occasion, that it is any part of the obligation of Congress in attempting to formulate a public policy to take one side of the controversy and strike a blow at those who are, in some instances, going beyond their rights, and, at the same time, palliate and excuse or approve the actions of others who are on the opposite side of the controversy whose action is equally in violation of public rights and of sound public policy.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I observe that the resolution offered is a Senate concurrent resolution, of course, originating here. The resolution would become effective after it passed the Senate and the House. It occurs to me—and I am simply desirous of submitting an inquiry to the Senator from Arkansas—that if a joint resolution should be passed by both bodies of Congress and signed by the President, it would necessarily be of more dignity and would carry into effect the objective sought by the resolution. The query is, Would the Senator from Arkansas be willing to accept an amendment so as to make the Senate concurrent resolution a Senate joint resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in answer to the question of the Senator from Oregon, I do not approve of attempting to give the effect of law to any resolution we pass on this subject. It is merely a definition of a policy of the Congress. The resolution as presented by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] was in the form of a concurrent resolution. The Senate and the House are able to express the policy of the Congress. This is intended to be an expression of the policy of the Congress.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. NEELY. Let me inquire of the able Senator from Arkansas if he is not of the opinion that if the Congress desires to commit the President on this proposition, it should express its desire by means of a bill instead of attempting to have him either approve or disapprove a declaration of policy which cannot be enforced?

Mr. McNARY. A joint resolution has all the force of a statute. We are now in the process of declaring ourselves on a very important subject.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. If I may answer the Senator from West Virginia further, it is not necessary to introduce a bill. A mere amendment making this a Senate joint resolution instead of Senate concurrent resolution would not only bring about a declaration by the Congress, but also by the administration and the Government. With that great voice speaking, it occurred to me in the best of good faith, that it might be well to offer the suggested amendment in order that we may have back of the resolution all the forces that can be marshalled when we speak.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if the concurrent resolution were transformed into a joint resolution, will the Senator from Oregon explain how any department of the Government could enforce it?

Mr. McNARY. Of course, that question was thoroughly discussed. We all know it is a declaration of policy. All I am seeking and suggesting is to get all the forces back of the resolution that can be assembled. I repeat that the force of the Government, as expressed by the approval of the President, would do that particular thing, and I offered the suggestion to the able Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand the suggestion fully and the motive underlying it. There is no obscurity in my mind as to what is intended to be accomplished by the proposal to convert the concurrent resolution into a joint resolution.

There are many who feel that unless the Congress has jurisdiction to legislate there is difficulty in announcing a policy; that unless there is some act which we propose to prevent by Federal influence or some other act which we propose to require by Federal influence, we are not justified in legislating upon it at all. The proposal was made to express the intention of the Congress, to express the policy of the Congress. No one here claims that if this policy is disregarded by either employers or employees we can do anything except feel regret and continue to look for some method by which the policy may be enforced.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. A joint resolution is on almost the same basis as a bill, if it should be enacted and become the law, and therefore has to be signed by the President. It seems to me it would be ridiculous to pass a resolution declaring the policy of Congress as the law, and say it is the law, that Congress believes this ought to be the public policy of the United States. Of course it cannot have the force of law. It is not binding upon anyone. We cannot penalize anyone for violating it. It is merely an expression of opinion by the Congress, and it is not necessary for anybody, except Congress, to join in the passage of such a resolution expressing the policy of Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think perhaps the Senator from Kentucky has made my viewpoint clearer than I made it myself. Congress is assuming now to express its views concerning certain matters pertaining to public policy. In order to express the opinion of the Congress it is not necessary to pursue the course which is ordinarily pursued in regard to legislation. No doubt that is the reason which inspired the Senator from Nevada to present the matter in the form of a concurrent resolution, namely, that the Congress itself could say what it has to say upon the subject without the approval or disapproval of anyone else.

I do not mean to imply by this statement that the President would veto such a resolution as that which is proposed. Neither do I mean to say that he would approve. What I mean to say is that if Congress is going to express its opinion, it has the right and the power to do so without either the approval or disapproval of any other authority in the Government. Since there is nothing to be done pursuant to the resolution, since it is merely an expression of policy and is only intended to express the policy of the Congress, it is in proper form when presented as a concurrent resolution.

I may say that the Senator from Nevada, in fulfilling an engagement which was made some months ago, is absent from the city, but he authorized me to say to the Senate that the proposed changes in his concurrent resolution meet with his entire approval. He is heartily in favor of the resolution as submitted here today.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. My suggestion to the Senator from Arkansas was made upon the basis that, in my opinion, under the rules and practices governing the Senate, such an amendment as I have suggested could not be offered, but that the change could only be made by unanimous consent. That is the reason why I asked the Senator from Arkansas if he had any objection to making the change. Otherwise, I should offer an amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. In the form in which the resolution is presented I have approved it after considerable study. I do not propose any other amendment myself and do not think any amendment is necessary in addition to the one under consideration. I am entirely content to submit the matter to the Senate for such consideration and action as it believes meritorious.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I should like briefly to submit to the Senate some observations on this concurrent resolution.

While I construe the pending resolution as merely declaratory, nevertheless it may prove helpful in requickening in the American consciousness the pregnant fact that "obedience to law is liberty", and that without it the constitutional guaranty of the sacred right of "life, liberty, and property" is but an empty phrase. Without life, liberty is worthless; without liberty, life is unendurable; but even life and liberty cannot be realized in full measure unless every citizen is permitted to enjoy the fruits of his labor or efforts; unless he is made secure in the possession of his lawfully acquired property.

It is for these reasons that the Constitution of the United States, in the fifth amendment, provides:

> No person shall be * * * deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

And in the fourteenth amendment that—

> No State shall * * * deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

And again in the fifth amendment:

> Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

The fundamental law of the land, the Constitution itself, prohibits the Government of the United States and the government of every State from taking the property—to say nothing of life and liberty—of the citizen "without due process of law." It is because the sit-down strike violates the fundamental law of the land by taking property without due process of law that I cannot endorse it without disregarding my oath of office and my conscientious conviction that the mistaken policy and illegality of the sit-down strike, if carried to its logical conclusion, will inevitably lead to anarchy and the demoralization of organized society.

The Government of the United States itself does not have the power, which the sit-down strike asserts, to take possession of private property without due process of law. The State of Michigan possesses no such power. When private property is taken by Government, Federal, or State, for public use, just compensation must be provided.

Suppose the Federal Government or any State government arbitrarily seized a factory, an office building, a warehouse, or a ranch, and drove out the owners. Such action would be reprehended by every citizen in the land. Government must set an example to the citizen, must live within the law, and proceed in strict conformity with law in every action it may take. It cannot be claimed that sit-down strikers possess a power which transcends that of the sovereign Government of the United States and of the States composing the Union.

Aside from these considerations I cannot, as a consistent friend of labor over a period of many years, endorse a course which, if persisted in, will do grave injury to the just cause of labor. Correction of the obvious evils in our economic and social order cannot, in my judgment, be achieved by lawless methods on the part of capital or labor. With the long struggle of labor for reasonable hours and better working conditions and a more equitable share in the fruits of its industry, I am now, as I have always been, in full sympathy. As a Member of this body I have voted for every measure which I thought would contribute to the achievement of these ends. As a member of the Cabinet of that great statesman and friend of the workingman, Woodrow Wilson, during the World War, I was brought into intimate contact with the problems of labor, industry, and agriculture because of the grave responsibilities imposed upon me by my official duties. I hope my colleagues on the floor will acquit me of even the semblance of egotism if I refer to some phases of my administration as Director General of the Railroads of the United States.

By Executive order some 250,000,000 miles of railroad were taken over by the Government on the 27th day of December 1917 as a war measure, and supreme authority over them was conferred upon me as Director General. I found myself in command of more than 2,000,000 railway employees. Transportation was disorganized; the spirit of the employees was at low ebb because of inadequate wages, unsatisfactory and, to some extent, inhuman working conditions. Strikes were impending in various parts of the country, not because of a lack of patriotism but because of the harsh conditions under which employees were compelled to toil. The draft law deprived the railroads of the service of much skilled labor, and the scale of wages in competitive war industries was so much higher than the scales prevailing on the railroads that men were going to shipyards and war industries, where they could work with equal patriotism and receive wages far in excess of those the railroads were paying. On many of the lines organized labor was unrecognized.

After a thorough investigation of the conditions I issued general order no. 27 on May 25, 1918. The basic 8-hour day was recognized in every line of railroad work. Discrimination against employees because they were or were not members of a labor union was prohibited. The fundamental injustice of paying women in the employ of the railroads less for their services than was paid to men for exactly the same class of work was removed, and the pay of women was equalized with that of men for the same services rendered.

For many years the Negro employees of the railroads, such as firemen, trainmen, and switchmen, were paid less for identically the same work than was paid to white men in like capacities. That discrimination was struck down, and equal pay for the same services performed was accorded to Negroes and to white men alike.

Increases in the pay of employees to put them on a comparable basis with those who worked in war industries, in shipyards, and in other industries throughout the country, were granted. These resulted in a gross increase in the wages of railroad employees during the year 1918 of more than $700,000,000. The amount of the gross addition to income is not particularly important, but it has a bearing upon the magnitude of the problem then presented of equalizing the pay of railroad workers with the pay of those engaged in competitive industries.

These and other corrective acts brought peace and contentment to the great army of railroad men and women who, in that critical time, were charged with providing transportation for troops, supplies, and equipment indispensable to victory on the fields of France.

I recite these things to point the moral that justice to labor in industry will produce contentment, improve efficiency, and bring peace and just rewards to both capital and labor.

Mr. President, we are going through one of those epochal changes in the life of nations when fundamental and sometimes radical readjustments, economic and social, are involved. The processes of change and reform require patience, intelligence, and the highest order of statesmanship. It is my hope that out of the disturbances that now agitate the industrial world a new formula to govern the relations between labor and capital may emerge. It must emerge if peace in the industrial world is to be secured. It cannot emerge, however, unless our great captains of industry abandon ideas made archaic by a machine age, and recognize frankly that their resistance to laws enacted by Congress to promote industrial justice must be abandoned and a policy of cooperation with government and labor substituted if the great boon of industrial peace and stability is to be secured. I agree with my distinguished colleague, the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], that if the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act for collective bargaining had been accepted by industrial captains instead of being resisted by court proceedings which, although within their technical right to institute, seem to me to have been unenlightened policy, this situation would probably not have arisen. But we are face to face with it now. What are we going to do about it?

A mere denunciation of the sit-down strike will not solve the problem. Compulsory arbitration will get us nowhere. The validity of the Wagner Labor Relations Act, if sustained by the Supreme Court, will prove a valuable contribution, but not in itself a solution.

A new formula, of which I have spoken, to govern the relations between labor and capital must be found. This can be found only if capital and labor will cooperate to that end, aided by government and guided by government. I should like to see action by the Senate which would initiate conferences between the leaders of labor and industry for discussion and counsel on this superlatively important matter. Under the friendly auspices of government, in an atmosphere permeated by patriotism and with a determination to gain the great objective, I am confident that the outcome will set civilization upon a new path toward the ultimate goal of human rights, industrial peace, and contentment.

But, Mr. President, these ends cannot be secured through force or violence. We need the calm of peace for deliberate judgment.

Over the main entrance to the courthouse in Worcester, Mass., is this fine phrase: "Obedience to law is liberty." It is, to my mind, a perfect definition of liberty—liberty regulated by law; the only kind of liberty which assures to every man, however humble, security for his life and property; the only kind of liberty under which civilization has been able to advance; the only kind of liberty under which the people of this great Republic have been able to acquire a commanding position among the powers of the earth. Liberty without lawlessness is the greatest goal of free men. Liberty cursed with lawlessness produces a cancerous growth on the body of society which can lead only to irreparable disaster.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to ask one or two questions about the phraseology of the concurrent resolution. I regret that the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has left the floor. I think I shall have to appeal to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

So far as the initial sentences are concerned, as respects a declaration of public policy, it seems to me the situation is quite clear; and I am quite prepared to say—

> That it is the sense of Congress that the so-called sit-down strike is illegal and contrary to sound public policy.

Then I am quite prepared to say—

> That the so-called industrial spy system breeds fear, suspicion, and animosity, tends to cause strikes and industrial warfare, and is contrary to sound public policy.

I think that is clear; and I think the situation which has been disclosed by the La Follette committee is so utterly indefensible that there could not be any argument as to the importance of a declaration against the industrial spy system.

Then we come to the third paragraph:

> That it is likewise contrary to sound public policy for any employer to deny the right of collective bargaining—

I would agree to that without reservation. I think it is unsound public policy for any employer to deny the right of collective bargaining; and one might even go further, I should think, without much controversy, and add a further declaration of the right of the employee to be entirely free from coercion and intimidation in connection with his choice of a bargaining agency.

Now we come to the language concerning which I desire to inquire:

> To foster the company union or to engage in any other unfair labor practice as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

I do not understand that all company unions ipso facto are contrary to sound public policy, and that all company unions, just because they are company unions, are under the inhibition of the so-called Wagner Act. Am I right or wrong about that?

Mr. BARKLEY. The company union, as we understand it in common parlance, is a development of recent years brought about by the efforts of certain employers either to discourage or in some way to prohibit the formation or the joining of what we call national unions, or unions which cover more than one company, which cover a large number of employees in various companies in different sections. It was fostered and is fostered wherever it is attempted by the employers in order to prevent the organization of their employees on a national or a larger scale than simply within their factories.

It is entirely possible that employees might voluntarily, without any coercion or encouragement on the part of the employers, form a union limited only to the employees of the company; but when we say in the resolution that it is against public policy for an employer to foster the organization of a company union, we have in mind the very sort of company unions which have been fostered by employers as substitutes for general unions covering all organizations.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is coming to the point of my inquiry. I am fully aware of the fact that the company-union technique has been used very definitely as a weapon of offense against organized labor, and my inquiry does not go to that sort of company union at all, because I think it is quite clear that that sort of a company union is a very doubtful instrumentality, to put it very mildly. But I was wondering whether this language went beyond that in its scope when it says that any company union, even though the factor the Senator has been discussing is absent, is contrary to sound public policy.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I would not so interpret it. Let us assume that in any factory the initiative of forming a union of the men in the factory were taken by the employees themselves. We will say they might want to form a union that was not representative in a general sense, to form some new organization of their own accord and by their own initiative, without any suggestion or encouragement or without it being fostered by the employers. Of course, this would not apply to such an organization, because it would not in that case be fostered by the company.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But if there were such an organization, it would ultimately have to be fostered, or acknowledged in some fashion, in order to get anywhere.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, that would be only a matter of agreement between it and the employer.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Precisely.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the organization represented the employees, and a question of wages and conditions of labor were in issue, and any dispute should arise as to the scope of the negotiations between the employer and the employees, and the employer had not fostered, had not brought about, had not initiated, the movement for the organization of the union within the company, certainly the mere fact that it dealt with matters of wages and hours and conditions of labor would not be interpreted as a fostering of the union in the sense in with the term is used in the resolution.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In the way the Senator and I understand and use the word "foster", I probably have no complaint. My fear would be that the condemnation might be interpreted to go beyond that point.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Under the interpretation of the resolution as it reads, it seems to me that the kind of company union that is condemned must necessarily be the kind that is condemned in the National Labor Relations Act. That act provides that it is contrary to public policy for any employer to do certain things:

First. Deny the right of collective bargaining.

Second. Foster the company union.

Third. Or engage in any other unfair labor practice as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

The interpretation I give is that the last set of words, "as defined in the National Labor Relations Act", refers to all three of the practices which are condemned in the resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. The National Labor Relations Act sets out in some detail the type of union which is denounced and condemned and referred to in this language.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, that does not help me much, because it brings me to my second difficulty.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I was chairman of the committee which conducted the hearings resulting in the National Labor Relations Act, and I reported from the Committee on Education and Labor the bill which later became that statute. For the information of Senators I will state that there is no mention by name of the so-called company union in the law, it is neither defined nor mentioned; but there is a provision in the law which prevents an employer from performing certain acts which could be applied to the so-called company union, but it is made general, and applied to all labor unions. I will read that phrase:

> It shall be an unfair labor practice for an employer to dominate or interfere with the formation or administration of any labor organization or contribute financial or other support to it.

That is the only clause I can think of at this moment which defines an unfair practice on the part of the employer in his relationship with the members of a company union. There is another clause, which prevents the employer from discriminating, in the matter of compensation and in the matter of hiring or discharging employees because of a particular union to which they may belong. The language I have read deals with all labor organizations.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I think I know what is troubling the Senator from Michigan. The Senator is apprehensive that somewhere in this country there may be what is called a company union, namely, a union organized within one plant, but nonetheless free from any interference by the employer, and that such an organization would be hit by this resolution. Of course, I believe this is purely an academic question, for I have never heard of such a union. I do not know whether the Senator who offered the resolution would object, but to relieve the Senator's apprehension I suggest inserting in place of the word "fostered" the word "dominated", so that it would read, "a company-dominated union." That would clear up the Senator's doubt, if there is room for doubt.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, my recollection is that the exact language employed was "company dominated or controlled." I have no objection to the insertion of that language. I think it means the same as the language in the resolution, but so far as I am concerned, I do not object to it.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I agree with the interpretation placed on the language by the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH]. Outside of the question of sit-downs, we are dealing really with the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act, and under that act the practices under which company unions are organized and fostered are prohibited.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In other words, it is the Senator's interpretation that the phrase "to foster a company union" is modified as defined in the National Labor Relations Act?

Mr. WAGNER. I think so, very clearly.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas would be most helpful.

Mr. WAGNER. I think the Senator from Michigan knows enough about company unions to make it unnecessary for me to discuss it any further. My reason for saying this is that the Senator from Arkansas a little while ago said I was going to make a somewhat lengthy explanation and immediately after that he himself in two sentences simply and clearly explained just what a company union is.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is, he explained just what a company union such as he proposes to condemn is.

Mr. WAGNER. The kind about which we are talking, and there are not any other kinds.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is a pretty broad statement.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Lest silence might be interpreted as assent to the proposed change, I desire to say that I would not permit the change to be made by unanimous consent, by any means, unless it is explained further that there is a great deal of difference between "dominating" and "fostering." It seems to me, as I understand it, that fostering a union is a very clear expression. A company might foster a union and not dominate it completely, at least, but it might be very influential in its management. As I understand, the word "foster" means to do anything to bring about the organization of a union.

It is possible, in theory, to conceive of a company union which is in no way fostered by the company itself, although I never heard of such a one, and I do not believe such a one is in existence. However, such a thing could be possible. If that were true, this definition in the amendment would not have any application to it whatever. The language condemns only a union which is fostered by the company, with the organization and management of which the company had something to do. The company may not be in complete control of the union. The company may control it for some purposes and not for other purposes. The company may be entirely inactive in one particular regard and absolutely controlling in another. Such relationship would be a fostering by the company, and that is the only thing that is condemned.

If we take an imaginary case where the employees of a certain company, without any inducement, without any attempt on the part of the company or any official to control or to induce them to do a thing, should organize a union and confine it to the employees of that company alone they would not be affected by the language of this bill at all as I see it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not so interested in preserving a company union, but I am interested in permitting the man to join any union he wants to without any intimidation or coercion from any source, either from another union, or the employer, or anybody else. It so happens that a short while ago a group of men who represent an industry in which some 15,000 or 16,000 people are employed in my State came over and asked me to introduce an amendment to the Wagner Labor Relations Act, which contained the words that men could join a union without intimidation or coercion from anybody. On the 24th of last May I tried to get that amendment adopted by the Senate. The Senator in charge of the bill, for reasons he felt sufficient, did not see fit to accede to that request, and the Senate did not agree to that amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. And I would not today.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator from New York mean that the men cannot have the right to join the union if they want to?

Mr. WAGNER. In due time I shall answer.

Mr. TYDINGS. The reason I rise at this time is that I want to present that case. The case may have been misrepresented to me, but suppose those 16,000 men, of their own volition desire to join what they call a union that does not come within the purview of this definition, do I understand that those men cannot join that union if they want to? That is what I understand now, that notwithstanding these men may want to join a particular union which suits them, the Congress of the United States says, "No; you cannot join that union even though a majority of you say you want to have that kind of union."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am afraid my friend from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] did not listen to the entire discussion, because if he had he would not have placed such interpretation as he has upon anything that has been said here today. Nobody has said that any number of employees who of their own volition and of their own initiative wanted to join any union could not do so. The question was propounded as to whether this language would prevent the organization by the employees of a union in any plant so long as the union was not fostered or dominated by the employers, and the reply to that was it would not. Certainly nobody here wishes to prohibit any number of employees of their own accord and of their own initiative and of their own free will from joining any union that suits them. What we are seeking to do is to declare that it is against public policy to permit company unions to be organized under the fostering care and domination of the employer, when we know that those things are done in order to keep the men out of other unions.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I see the point of the Senator's argument; but suppose the men go to the ballot boxes and vote that they want to join the company union. What business have we to say that they cannot join such a union if they want to?

Mr. BARKLEY. If it is their own union, organized by themselves, free from any coercion, domination, or fostering by the employer, they have a perfect right to join it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not care whose union it is, or how it is gotten up. If the employees voluntarily want to join that particular union, I ask who in the Senate is going to say that they have not the right to do so?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know of anybody who has the right to say it, or anybody who has said it.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator from Michigan will further yield, I wish to say, it seems to me that what we are attempting to say is that even though men want to join a company union—and perhaps nobody in America wants to join one; that is something I do not know—but even though they want to join a company union they have no right to do it. Must they join the kind of union that the United States Senate says they must join, or can they not pick out their own union? As I understand the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] they do not want the men to join that kind of a union, even though the men themselves vote to say they want to join that particular kind of a union. I do not think that is being fair to the laboring men.

Mr. BARKLEY. So far as the Senator from Kentucky is concerned I will say to my friend from Maryland that he has totally and completely misunderstood what I said upon the subject. I am willing for any laboring man to join any union he wants to join, so long as he joins it of his own free will and his own accord, but I am not willing for him to be forced in any union because his employer wants him to join any particular union.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. And I do not want him to join any company union or any other kind of a union that he does not want to join. It strikes me that the wording we ought to use is that labor shall be free to join any union which it wishes to join, free of any intimidation or coercion from any source whatsoever, and leave the company union out of the equation, and let labor then make its own election. But the way we are proposing to act under cover here is to tell labor that it can only join the kind of union that we want it to join.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator and I argued this whole question out when the Labor Relations Act was before the Senate, and at the time the amendment itself was suggested by a large industry in his State——

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is wrong. No large industry did. The men themselves came to my office, the working men, and asked me to propose my amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. I understand that. They appeared before the committee and I asked them a number of questions, and I explained upon the floor of the Senate what kind of a union the Senator from Maryland was talking about. The Labor Relations Act provides that very independence which the Senator is speaking of. It provides that without any economic pressure from the employer the worker shall have a right to make his choice. Now I shall tell a little about the company union defended by the Senator from Maryland. There was no election asking the workers in that particular industry whether they wanted to belong to one union or the other. The foreman walked among the workers, and the workers were handed——

Mr. TYDINGS rose.

Mr. WAGNER. Please let me finish this statement.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have not said a word. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. WAGNER. Perhaps I should not get so intense about the question.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I regret to interrupt the Senator, but I beseech the Chair to inform the occupants of the galleries that, while we are glad to have them present, there should be on their part no interruption by any form of expression. Anything of that kind is a violation of the rule of the Senate and has the effect of disturbing the debate on the floor of the Senate and making it difficult to hear on the part of those who desire to hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the occupants of the galleries that they are the guests of the Senate and are not permitted to indulge in any form of applause.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Tell them we are for law and order.

Mr. WAGNER. If I am interrupting the Senator——

Mr. VANDENBERG. Oh, no; the Senator is very welcome.

Mr. WAGNER. I desire to enlighten him upon a subject which the Senator ought to know something about, because these same practices took place in the State of Michigan and the matters were before the Labor Board, of which I was chairman at the time.

Let me talk about this company-dominated union. What happened? The foreman walked among the workers with a printed constitution. Who drew that constitution? The lawyers for the employers. No worker ever had anything to do with it. No meetings were held to determine organization; no meetings were held to determine a constitution; and each one of the workers was handed one of these constitutions.

By the way, let me say that this is the ordinary way of organizing the company unions. I speak now as the result of experience, not of conjecture.

The moment the worker got this constitution he was told, "Now you are a member of this union." That was all there was to it. No meetings were ever held. No collective bargaining was ever agreed to. There was an election held for representatives. The foreman stood right there while these men walked up to the box and voted for the representatives that the employer wanted. Besides, the constitution provided that the men could not elect any representative except someone working in the plant, and the employer, at least from the economic standpoint, always controlled this representative.

Do Senators call that genuine representation? Any time that the representative made a protest on matters of wages or other conditions of employment the employer was in a position to say, "Now, you shut up or you lose your job." That is all there was to the organization. Never was there a collective bargaining agreement made; never did the representatives ask for an increase of wages or anything else in the case of this particular concern.

Then the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] said to me—this will all appear in the RECORD of 2 years ago; I have a very clear recollection of it—"All right; suppose they did have a constitution drawn by the employers' lawyers; after the workers entered the organization and had their independent meetings, could they not amend the constitution?" I said, "No, Senator; that is the difficulty; they could not. The management makes sure of the control of the company union and its representatives." That is so in all these cases, because it is provided that the constitution cannot be amended without the consent of the employer.

Who would say that that is a genuine union? Who would say that that gives the worker the independent right of collective bargaining? It is an absurdity so to contend. It is that type of dummy organization by which the employer wants to control both sides of the table if there is any collective bargaining.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I might as well tell the whole story. A similar provision was contained in the Railway Labor Act, which was passed about the same time as the National Labor Relations Act. What happened as a result of that provision? Certain practices were declared to be unfair in the railway industry, and, after 2 years, I do not know of a single company union that now exists. Why? Because the workers obtained the real right to an election supervised by a Government agency; in that way they made their independent selection, and in no case did the company union survive. The strongest company union was that of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and about 6 months ago that finally gave way. The collective-bargaining agency is now the outside union.

The United States Supreme Court the other day sustained the Railway Act, holding that it would be unlawful to enter into a contract with the company union organized and formed by the railroad company. The Court upheld the rule of the majority, a rule for which for a hundred years workers have been contending but have been unable heretofore to have embodied in a statute. The Supreme Court said that the independent majority union could make a binding contract with the employer for the working conditions under which the workers are to labor.

I will have a little more to say about it later on.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield once more to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. My mission here is not to defend the company union or to condone the practices which the Senator from New York has pointed out; but is it not singular that, after listening to an argument similar to that of just a few minutes ago when I offered an amendment providing that a worker should not be intimidated or coerced from any source—any source—the Senator who wants the workingmen to have all these privileges and freedom to join whatever union they desired to join could not accept my amendment, which simply provided that the laboring man should have the right to choose his own organization, free from intimidation or coercion from any source whatsoever? That was the amendment to which the Senator from New York objected. He was very anxious to outlaw a particular union, which, I admit, as he describes it, is a bad one; but he wanted to stop there. I wanted to go further; I wanted to give to the laboring man the right to select whatever organization he wanted, without intimidation from his employer, without intimidation from this union or that union or a company union or any other union; but the Senator from New York could not accept that; he said that would be denying the workingman his right. If that be so, I should like to know in what respect it is so. When I proposed that the workingman should have the right to join the union of his own selection, without coercion of John Brown or Bill Smith or the company union or the men in the plant or any other group of men on the face of the earth, the Senator could not accept that suggestion. Though his heart bleeds for the right of the workingmen to join a union of their own choosing, yet he would not permit the writing in of language which would have guaranteed that right in the Wagner Labor Relations Act.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I do not desire to get into this debate, but, as a member of the committee that had something to do with the framing of the Labor Act to which the Senator from Maryland has referred, I should like to say that if there is anything in that act which prevents the laboring man from joining any union he wishes to join, I do not know where it is. I never intended any such thing.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have not the act before me, but I may say to the Senator that I do not believe his observation is altogether accurate.

Mr. BORAH. I know that matter was before the committee; I know how I felt about it; I know what was done; and, in my opinion, the workingman in this country under that act can join any union he desires to join.

Mr. TYDINGS. Even a company union?

Mr. BORAH. If he is not coerced, if he is not in any way influenced, if it is his voluntary act, he may join any union. If the Senator from Maryland is correct in his contention, then his amendment should have been adopted.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from New York, who was the author of the bill referred to, has just said on the floor that his purpose in offering that bill was to break up the company union.

Mr. BORAH. It might happen if the workers were acting voluntarily——

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

Mr. BORAH. That all the company unions would disappear. What we undertook to do was to see that the employees were free to do what they desired to do. I want the workman to be absolutely free to join a union of his choice—company union or any union.

Mr. TYDINGS. And all I wanted was to make sure that they should be free to act without intimidation or coercion from any source whatsoever, but the Senator from New York says he would not accept that amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I think the Senator from Maryland makes an unfair statement when he says my purpose was to break up the company unions. My purpose was to make the worker a free man, so that under economic pressure he would not be compelled to join one particular union. That is all I had in mind.

Mr. TYDINGS. I join the Senator in that.

Mr. WAGNER. And the Senator from Idaho does me the justice to say that I repeated time and again that I wanted to make American workers who, in many cases, have been economic slaves, free men, at liberty to join whatever union they desired.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Michigan will yield further, I should like to ask the Senator from New York why he was opposed to my amendment which simply provided in effect that the worker should be free to join any organization he desired without coercion or intimidation from any source whatsoever.

Why could the Senator not accept that amendment?

Mr. WAGNER. Because the workingmen of this country would have asked me to defeat the bill with such an amendment in it, and justly so.

Mr. TYDINGS. What would have been the harm of such a declaration?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. Emery, that great friend of labor, came before the committee at its hearings and said, "If you will take this amendment everyone of us who now oppose this proposed legislation will approve it." That was the anti-union organization's attitude, because they saw there a chance to go into the courts——

Mr. TYDINGS. Oh, well——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to proceed for a moment and obtain a little more information.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator does not mean that he has not obtained a lot of it I hope.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me for the purpose of reading into the RECORD the pertinent terms of the National Labor Relations Act?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Massachusetts has already read that act into the debate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Has he read the terms of the act concerning which the Senator from Michigan is now propounding his questions?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; I think he did. The Senator means the provision regarding unfair labor practices?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The portions with reference to the company union.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; I think he did.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, may I ask the Senator if the act does not make clear the whole subject of this discussion?

Mr. VANDENBERG. If I may proceed now to answer the Senator's question, perhaps, I can indicate what was in my mind.

I have no interest whatever in easing the way for the company union; that is entirely beside the point. I have no interest in the company union at all. I realize that the average company union is a thoroughly selfish sort of instrumentality in its original inception under management auspices. I am simply trying to find out whether the purpose of this declaration is to declare that all company unions are contrary to sound public policy or whether the declaration is limited in the aspect that the Senator from Kentucky has indicated, namely, that only such company unions are proscribed as fall under the term "unfair labor practices" as defined in the National Labor Relations Act. That is a much more limited expression of condemnation than the general one now before us would be.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I respond to the Senator on that phase of the subject?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The paragraph in the pending amendment to which the Senator is alluding reads as follows:

> That it is likewise contrary to sound public policy for any employer to deny the right of collective bargaining, to foster the company union or to engage in any other unfair labor practice as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

The use of the words "any other" in this connection, the grammatical structure, and the punctuation, all indicate that it is intended to convey the understanding that what is condemned as being contrary to sound public policy are the unfair labor practices which are defined in the National Labor Relations Act, including, among others the denial of the right of collective bargaining and the fostering of the company union.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well, let us assume we have that straightened out.

Let me come to the second question I want to submit regarding the purpose to declare as unsound public policy any challenge to the definition in the National Labor Relations Act.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, that is not the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator said to declare as unsound public policy any challenge made of any definition in the act. That, of course, is not to be inferred from any language in the amendment. Any citizen may challenge any act at any time, or may challenge the Constitution, and do it with perfect propriety.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is exactly the point to which I am coming. The National Labor Relations Act is still a matter of legal controversy, and citizens, acting entirely within their legal rights in some jurisdictions, are not only questioning it but in some jurisdictions, even though they have not questioned it, find it outlawed by the courts for the time being. As I understand, the National Labor Relations Act has gone to the circuit court of appeals—I think the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] said in six out of the nine circuits. In those circuits I assume citizens were entirely entitled to raise the question of what their rights were under the act, and to raise the question whether the act itself was in contravention of the Constitution. The Senator from New York himself indicated that that was a legitimate appeal if anybody wanted to take it under the law.

What I want to know is whether we are now asserting it to be contrary to sound public policy to fail to recognize the definitions in the National Labor Relations Act, which are still a matter of legal controversy in a perfectly proper jurisdiction?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator contend——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am not contending anything. I am trying to get some information.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator contend that it is within the right of a citizen to decline to observe any particular law until he has had an adjudication of that law by the courts?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Oh, no; but I contend that it is not fair to say that it is against sound public policy to condemn John Doe for failing to observe all of the provisions of a law which the circuit court of appeals has said is not the law.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator contend that John Doe, having taken a particular law to the district court or to the circuit court of appeals, and a final judgment not having been entered, may decline to observe the law while it is still the law until some indefinite time in the future when, after the long delays to which court procedure is susceptible, a final judgment may be had in the court of last resort?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is asking me for a legal interpretation which I am not competent as a layman to give.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I conceive, and I think the Senator believes also, that when the Congress of the United States has enacted a statute and that statute has been signed by the President of the United States, it is the law of the land.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is it the law of the land after the Circuit Court of Appeals has set it aside?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It certainly is if it has been appealed from. There never was a lawyer who contended that the courts or any court had the right to repeal a particular act. The courts may say in a particular case, "under the circumstances of this case this law is unconstitutional"; but the power of the court is expressly limited by the Constitution to the cases which come before the court, and until there has been an adjudication by the highest court in the land no citizen of the United States is justified, if then, in saying that the particular law is not a valid enactment of his Government entitled to full respect and obedience.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Suppose he is protected by injunction procured from the court or, regardless of whether within an injunction or not, cannot he be protected in that condition?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That depends altogether on the type of injunction and the sort of bond he gives to support the injunction.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course it does. I know nothing about the type, and I decline to be drawn into a legal controversy when I have no legal qualifications with which to contend against my able friend from Wyoming. I am submitting the fundamental problem in fair play solely. Is it fair to say, upon the solemn responsibility of the Senate, that it is unsound public policy for a citizen to engage in any practice under a law which may have been suspended in his behalf by a court?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But the Senator says "a law which may have been suspended." There is no authority in any court to suspend any law. The only question that lies before the Senate in the amendment which is presented here is whether or not the laws enacted by the law-making body, whether they apply to employers or employees, shall be recognized as long as they are on the statute books. That is the only question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish it were the only question. If the Senator can satisfy me that it is, that is all I want to know. I am perfectly willing to insist that employers and employees shall live under the law.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, that is all the amendment proposes to declare.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish I could be sure of that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think there is nothing in the resolution that can be interpreted as denying to any citizen of the United States the right to go into any court to contest the constitutionality of an act or to litigate his rights under it. We are not doing anything that emphasizes the enforceability of the Labor Relations Act. We are setting up a sort of yardstick of public policy, based upon fair labor practices. If the Labor Relations Act had not been passed, and if it were not now pending before the Court, we could have included in the resolution a detailed stipulation as to the things we might think are unfair labor practices, and we might have said it is against sound public policy to engage in any practices which we believe to be unfair.

If the Supreme Court should declare the Wagner Act unconstitutional so that it would be no longer enforceable, or if it held it unconstitutional in some regard but not entirely, in either case it might leave the definition of unfair labor practices as set out in that act as the fair standard by which Congress might determine the matter of public policy. Even if the Court should declare null and void the entire act, the definition of unfair labor practices in that act would still be a legitimate basis upon which we might found a resolution declaring it to be against public policy for the employer to do certain things set out in that act as being unfair to labor. If we might assume the Court would hold the sit-down strike to be legal or not unlawful, we still would be going on record in this resolution as declaring it against public policy to do any of the things defined in that act as unfair labor practices. I do not wish irreparably or to any other extent, except as a definition and guide, to tie this resolution to the Labor Relations Act referred to by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank all the Senators who have contributed to the discussion.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan has been very generous to me, but will he yield again? On this point I shall be very calm.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. One of the points brought out by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] was that if two or three jurisdictions decided the sit-down strike not to be illegal, the Senator and I would still vote for the resolution so far as the sit-down strike is concerned. In the labor cases, the question has been decided differently in different jurisdictions. In some jurisdictions it has been held that in the particular instance the hearing applied to an industry over which the board had jurisdiction.

In other cases, it was not so much the general policy to which the court was opposed, as that in the particular case brought before it the Labor Board exceeded its jurisdiction. But the fact that the law applies in some cases and not in others should not stop us from reiterating the general policy which we declared 2 years ago, protecting the workers in their right to organize and bargain collectively.

I overlooked something I meant to say in connection with company unions. They are also, may I say to the Senator, financed by the employer. It is like one litigant paying the attorneys on both sides of the case. The representatives of the employees are bought by the employer, so how can it be said they are independent?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield? I am not going to get into further debate of that question at all. I have ended that debate. I want to bring another point to the attention of the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator with trepidation.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will look at the Wagner Labor Relations Act, section 8, on page 4, the Senator will find that it reads as follows:

> It shall be unfair labor practice for an employer—

Then it goes on to enumerate what the unfair practices shall be. Anybody else but an employer may do all of these things. They may coerce labor; they may interfere with a union men wish to join; or prevent them from joining another union; but there is nothing in the Wagner Act which prevents coercion or intimidation upon employees unless it comes from an employer.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I was very fearful this would happen. I yield, however.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator from Maryland is a distinguished member of the bar of his State. If any coercion were exerted against any of the employees of the employer the Senator has in mind he would rush to court, as he would have a right to do, and secure an injunction to prohibit that coercion. That is a legal right which exists today, and no additional statute on the subject is needed.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator for telling me that that is a legal right; but, if it is a legal right, I still do not understand why the Senator from New York objected to putting it in the act.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Thus you see, my friend, as Mr. Chesterton says, the sanctity of futile debate. [Laughter.]

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the observations of the Senator from California may apply to a portion of this discussion, but not to all of it, because I have found a considerable part quite illuminating.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator, while he is in a good humor, yield to me again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I object to yielding on that premise, because it implies that I am not always in a good humor, which I deny. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I withdraw the premise.

Mr VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. With reference to the amendment offered 2 years ago by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], I recall that amendment. I recall the reasons why it was opposed, and I was one of those who opposed it.

Of course, the object of the amendment was to make it unlawful for any labor-union official or member to attempt to persuade other laborers to join a particular union. I think I made a very brief little speech against it, and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] did, because one or two courts in the United States, especially Federal courts, had held that for one laboring man to try to persuade another to join his particular union might be construed as coercion; and therefore the word "coercion" or the word "intimidation" might be applied by some of these unfriendly courts to a mere friendly conversation in which one union man tried to persuade other laboring men to join his particular organization.

That was the reason why the amendment was objected to on the part of the Senator from New York. Certainly it was the reason why I voted against it; and I should vote against it again under the same circumstances.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield just for a short observation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course everybody knows that coercion and intimidation are entirely different from persuasion; and if what the Senator from New York said was true, the right of free speech would have been impaired. The amendment, however, was only five lines in length. I have the amendment here, and I am going to read it, with the Senator's permission. Let us see how much prevention there would be, in the amendment I offered, of a union man trying to persuade a workingman to join his union.

The amendment reads as follows. I read from page 7653 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 16, 1935:

> Employees shall have the right to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in concerted activities, for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, free from coercion or intimidation from any source.

How in the world that would stop a mere argument being addressed to a laboring man is one thing; but I rather suspect—and I do not attribute any improper motives to the Senator from Kentucky or the Senator from New York—that those who tried to bring about, and did bring about, the defeat of this amendment did want the right to coerce the laboring man to join their organization, whether he wanted to do it or not; and that was the underlying reason why the laboring man was denied the American right not to be intimidated or coerced from any source whatsoever. Every Senator on this floor knows that was the reason. Let us be frank about the matter. The Senator from Kentucky has taken the clothes off this child, and there it stands nakedly exposed before us, because the labor unions wanted the right to coerce, although they denied the employer the right to coerce. What the Senator from Maryland wanted was to give the working man his liberty without anybody—labor or labor organizations, or employer—having the right to coerce him as to what he should or should not do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the only clothes I have taken off this baby were the clothes of the Senator from Maryland. [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS. Well, it was a good suit, if the Senator did. [Laughter.]

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before we get into the clothing business I wish to quit the floor, because all I rose for was to ask two very innocent questions about just what the authors of this amendment had in mind.

Personally, I very much regret that when we started out for the simple purpose of announcing that law is still law in America, and that illegal trespass is illegal, no matter who the trespasser is, we have had to be drawn into the necessity of all this collateral discussion about other matters.

I do not believe the National Labor Relations Act has yet reached the point of complete finality where it is entitled to be included in a declaration of public policy by the Senate in respect to these fundamental relationships. The American Federation of Labor today proposed amendments to the Wagner Act. The Wagner Act manifestly is going to require amendment in many directions; and I should like to join hopefully in expanding the Wagner Act to such an extent that it may meet some of the challenges which we now confront.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; I decline to yield. The Senator from Wyoming cannot charge me with any lack of generosity if I conclude.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly not.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The National Labor Act manifestly needs to be amended in respect to the increased protection for labor in regard to spies and kindred methods of espionage, and many other factors of that inimical nature.

Mr. WAGNER and Mr. O'MAHONEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I decline to yield.

The act certainly needs to be expanded in respect to the authority which it puts behind the contracts which it undertakes to establish; because when we see within recent memory a situation where one contract was followed by 30 subsequent sit-down strikes; after presumably the whole matter had been liquidated, we manifestly have not yet created the stabilities which are essential to the kind of relationship which both the Senator from New York and I would like to establish under the act.

All in the world I rose to find out was what four or five words meant; and I am almost inclined to believe that I understand.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, may I ask him a question or two?

Mr. VANDENBERG. If I must still stand up and listen to some more speeches, I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am not making a speech. I have just made a few inquiries.

Does the Senator contend that no act of Congress should be obeyed until the process of amendment is completed?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Oh, I have never said anything of the sort.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is the implication of every word the Senator says.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Nothing of the sort. That is sheer quibbling.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator says the National Labor Relations Act requires additional amendments. As long as a law has been enacted and stands upon the statute books, does not the Senator believe it should be obeyed in all its terms?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I said from the beginning that I am prepared to join in asserting that law is law, and, so far as I am concerned, it applies to everybody. If the Senator wishes to say that in words of one syllable, I shall be delighted to join him.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is exactly what this amendment says, and in words of not more than two or three syllables.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I do not desire to prolong the discussion unduly. Perhaps I have already offended; but I hear so many statements made in general language, without any specific suggestions, that "the law ought to be amended."

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] a moment ago said that the law ought to be amended with reference to spies. The National Labor Relations Act covers that subject very fully. Why were spies used? They were used to ascertain who were members of the union. Just think of what the worker is still up against. Spies were used to ascertain who among the employees were secretly joining an outside union; and upon the spy's informing the employer the workers were discharged. That is a violation of the National Labor Relations Act today. Therefore, so far as the spy system is concerned, the present law covers it in full.

The Senator spoke about some strikes in Michigan. I am sure the Senator must be well enough informed as to the controversy that existed between the employers and the workers in those unfortunate sit-down strikes to know that in every case the question involved the right of the majority to bargain collectively. If the National Labor Relations Act had been recognized, which gives the majority of the workers the right to bargain collectively for all, those strikes never would have existed. But, in violation of the act, collective bargaining until very recently was denied.

Happily the Chrysler strike has been settled, and the General Motors strike has been settled. No one is happier than I, and I hope it means that from now on employers and employees will recognize each other's rights and their own obligation and settle their disputes by peaceful means and by the observation of the law which protects both. No one realizes more keenly than I the hardships inflicted on both industry and labor by bitter and prolonged industrial warfare. My efforts have always been to bring to both industry and labor the blessings of industrial peace. That is the objective of the National Labor Relations Act, and the fact that the peace terms in the General Motors and Chrysler controversies accept the principles of that act prove that the act is an instrument for peace and justice for both industry and labor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator referred to some statement I had made regarding recent strikes. The statement I made referred to 30 sit-down strikes in the General Motors plants subsequent to what was presumed to be a conclusive contract under the collective-bargaining process. That was the thing to which I referred.

Mr. WAGNER. No one can defend that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Exactly; and I was saying that that demonstrates the need for additional stability.

Mr. WAGNER. What does the Senator suggest?

Mr. VANDENBERG. There must be some kind of responsibility behind a contract after it is written.

Mr. WAGNER. I think Governor Murphy, although some of his critics are attempting here and there to make capital out of it, did a marvelous job in being patient in this critical situation. Without the loss of a single life, so far as I know, he has brought about an amicable adjustment. Had he, in line with some of the suggestions, or even demands, that were made, sent troops to get the men out of the plants immediately, we are sure that bloodshed would have occurred. How far it would have spread, no one knows. I am one who desires to congratulate Governor Murphy for this very amicable conclusion, and I believe he deserves the praise of all thoughtful citizens. He has done a magnificently constructive piece of industrial statesmanship.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Was the Senator imputing to me the partisan criticisms?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, there seems to be a good deal of difference of opinion as to the extent and effectiveness of the national labor relations law.

The recent decision of the Supreme Court in the matter of the railroad law in my opinion makes it clear that the national labor relations law, in its definition of the rights granted to labor, and in the provision relating to unfair practices, will be found constitutional.

The important question the Supreme Court will have to decide some day is the jurisdiction of the Congress over employees who heretofore have not been held by the courts to be engaged in employment relating to interstate commerce. In my opinion, transportation and communication companies will unquestionably be found to be within the scope and character of the law.

Whether or not the Court would say that the employees of a manufacturing plant in Massachusetts or Pittsburgh or any other city or State which ships its products in interstate commerce are embraced within the provisions of the national labor relations law is a question which can be answered only after the Supreme Court speaks. It seems to me that heretofore the interpretation of the law has been that manufacturing plants as such, though their products are shipped in interstate commerce, do not come within the protection or purview of the interstate-commerce clause. In my humble judgment, I do not think there is any question about the national labor relations law being found constitutional under certain facts, and that where it is clear and unmistakable, as in the case of transportation companies and communication companies, they are engaged in interstate commerce. The question the Court will have to decide which will be of supreme and tremendous importance as to the power of the Congress in dealing with employers and employees will revolve around where the Court places the dividing line between local control and interstate commerce.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is the Senator of the opinion that it rests absolutely and finally with the Court to determine where the dividing line lies, or does he not believe that the dividing line is to be delineated by the facts as they exist?

Mr. WALSH. In a particular case.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. When Congress undertakes to legislate upon a matter which obviously concerns the entire people, is the Congress not entitled to survey the economic situation, and, having surveyed that situation, to say that in order to regulate commerce among the States it is necessary to go to this length or to that length in the regulation of intrastate activities, and then expect the Court to follow?

Mr. WALSH. The Court has not heretofore taken that position, the Senator will agree, and that is why the coming decision on this law will be of supreme importance. The national labor relations law has no legal standing at all unless it is based on the commerce clause of the Constitution. There are certain things that are national and definitely interstate. There can, in my opinion, be no doubt about the employees of a line operating busses from one State to another, an express company, a telephone company, or a telegraph company being within the purview of the law.

Does the Senator think that the courts heretofore have held the employees of a manufacturing plant at Pittsburgh are engaged in interstate commerce?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly not. The courts have heretofore held that production or manufacture is not within the commerce clause, but they have done that because there has not been a proper representation to the courts as to what constitutes interstate commerce.

Mr. WALSH. That is an indictment of former officials in the Department of Justice.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do not hesitate to make that indictment; but it may be proper to add that only last week the Supreme Court recognized that the labor of mechanics in a railroad shop, though wholly intrastate, is nevertheless within the jurisdiction of Congress.

Mr. WALSH. I am not differing with the Senator. I simply rose to call attention to the importance of the coming decision, and to state that our authority and our power over employees and employers would depend tremendously upon whether the Court expands the interpretation it has heretofore made.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is quite right, and in explanation of what I have said I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the courts, without exception, from the earliest days down to this—and when I refer to the courts I include the Supreme Court—have held that it is within the authority of Congress, in exercising its power under the commerce clause, to regulate matters which are not in interstate commerce, if it is necessary to do so, to regulate that which is acknowledged to be interstate commerce.

Mr. WALSH. I think the Senator has correctly stated that point.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There is before the Committee on the Judiciary, of which the able Senator from Arizona is the distinguished and affable chairman, a measure (S. 10) designed to provide for licensing and chartering corporations engaged in commerce among the States, and I desire to make just a brief allusion to the testimony which has been developed before the committee.

It has been demonstrated, for example, that almost 10 percent of all the dairy products which supply the city of New York come from the State of Nebraska. I could cite numerous other instances of exactly the same kind, all tending to prove the fundamental fact that in our modern economic system production and distribution are essential parts of commerce among the States. The debate which we are having here this afternoon is a demonstration, if one needed it, that the effect of purely local aspects of the commerce and industry upon which we all depend is national in its scope.

Mr. WALSH. The point I tried to make is that there is a limitation somewhere. Let us consider some of the extreme suggestions. It was argued before our committee, when the national labor relations law was under consideration, that the elevator man operating in an apartment house in Boston, or in Washington, or in Chicago, who carried a box of oranges, that were shipped from Florida, up to an apartment, was within the scope of the law. Is he or is he not? The courts have to answer.

I have no doubt in my own mind, especially in view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the railroad case, that the national labor relations law will be held constitutional insofar as it relates to communication and transportation companies.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I may say, in further reference to what the Senator has been discussing, that to my mind it is perfectly clear what the distinction is. The law sponsored by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and almost every other law which attempts to deal with these vast problems of commerce among the States, is drawn in terms of persons. The National Labor Relations Act refers to employers as "persons", when as a matter of common sense we know that such employers may not be persons at all. Indeed, in most cases they are distinctly not persons. Take the case of the General Motors Corporation, with respect to which the very first of the sit-down strikes was initiated. Is the General Motors Corporation a person? Because the Supreme Court at one time said that a corporation is entitled to the equal protection of the laws as any natural person is, does not mean that the Congress is bound forever after to regard a corporation as a person.

It is not really a person; it is merely an artificial person, an entity that exists only by reason of the action of some government. Corporations exist only by reason of some government grant. The General Motors Corporation, called into existence by the State of Delaware, has more than 300,000 stockholders scattered all over the United States and has plants in half a dozen different States. It has more than 250,000 employees. It is a social and economic agency which exercises direct influence upon the daily lives of the people of practically every State in the Union. Of course, the operations of the General Motors Corporation are matters of national concern. That is why we stand upon this floor today considering the effect of sit-down strikes upon the national economy of the whole United States. The distinction, I will say to the Senator, which we all ought to bear in mind is between the natural person, the man or woman of flesh and blood, and the corporate person, which engages in commerce among the States. I have no hesitation in saying that until the Congress of the United States is willing to recognize this difference, which is as clear as the aisle between the two sides of this Chamber, it will be impossible to reach any salutary solution of this problem.

The commercial or industrial activities of the natural person are confined within ordinary human limitations of time and energy. The natural person operates with limited capital, and he exercises an influence only within a very restricted geographical area. With the aid of a corporate charter which relieves him from personal responsibility, he can extend the circle of his influence to such a degree that his activity becomes a matter of national concern.

By the combination of the wealth and power of innumerable natural persons under one management, in the corporate form, an agency is created which can extend its influence not only across State lines but even throughout the world. The idea that such an economic organization is to be governed by the same principles which govern a natural person is simply preposterous. We in Congress allow these vast interstate corporations to dominate the economic life of the country without in the slightest degree defining the powers which they may exercise.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], several years ago introduced in this body a bill to provide for the licensing of corporations engaged in commerce among the States. Congress, for one reason or another, did not see fit to act upon that suggestion; and because Congress has not acted upon it, we have been multiplying one Federal bureau on top of another until we have a situation here with more Federal employees than we had in the midst of the war.

I say again, without intending to take more of the time of the Senate, that until we are willing to recognize the fact which everyone who stops to look must see that there is a difference between natural persons operating within a State and interstate corporations that produce and distribute for the sole purpose of supplying the national market, we shall not begin to solve this question of national economy. The expansion of the Federal bureaucracy is the inevitable result of the continued concentration of economic power in corporate hands. We can use the corporation as an instrument of freedom and democracy and plenty for all, if we are only willing to take the time to do so. Until we take that time we shall be forced to continue to meet concentrated economic power with concentrated political power.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, this morning I addressed to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] a question relative to the definition of a company union. The definition given by the Senator from Arkansas was, in my opinion, a most excellent one. Since that time we have heard much comment and a great deal of discussion in this body relative to the company union. In order that this may be clarified, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, and ask that it be read; and following the reading of the amendment, I should like to say a word with reference to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the words "to foster the company union" and to insert in lieu thereof "to dominate or interfere with the formation or administration of any labor organization or to contribute financial or other support to it."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, if the amendment should be adopted, the amended resolution then would read:

That it is the sense of the Congress that the so-called sit-down strike is illegal and contrary to sound public policy; and

That the so-called industrial spy system breeds fear, suspicion, and animosity, tends to cause strikes and industrial warfare, and is contrary to sound public opinion; and

That it is likewise contrary to sound public policy for any employer to deny the right of collective bargaining, to dominate or interfere with the formation or administration of any labor organization or to contribute financial or other support to it, or to engage in any other unfair labor practice as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

It seems to me that in line with the definition of a company union given by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas this morning, my clarifying amendment, which simply outlines or is a definition of the undesirable thing which we wish to denounce, would make the meaning plain.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in the consideration of this concurrent resolution I think we should first realize that it can have no technical legal effect. I do not desire, however, to minimize the importance of it by that statement. Its introduction came about because when we were considering the so-called Guffey coal bill the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] offered an amendment condemning the so-called sit-down strike in connection with the coal-mining industry.

Those of us who, for various reasons given at the time, did not wish to have the amendment put on that bill voted against it and succeeded in defeating it. As I remember now, no one in that debate upheld the so-called sit-down strike. I think one of the main reasons which actuated many of us was that we did not think it fair to attach the amendment to the particular bill then under consideration; but we were also, in reality, in favor of going further and applying it to all operations and of coupling with it condemnation of unfair practices on the part of the employer as well as the employee, so that the policy might be more fully and more definitely expressed. Those favoring that idea prevailed.

Various questions were asked, and insinuations were made at that time that those who were opposed to putting the amendment on the Guffey coal bill were not acting in good faith when they suggested that the amendment could be taken up after the bill was disposed of and broadened, as I think the amendment now has been broadened. At that time various questions were asked, and insinuations were made that the matter would be referred to a committee, and that it would be delayed, and that it would finally die. I think we have now had a demonstration that those of us who favored the course that was followed were attempting to mislead neither the Senate nor the country, nor acting otherwise than in entirely good faith.

Personally, I do not think it is of very great importance for Congress to express its opinion as to policies when we are not able to enact those policies into law. However, as I said then, I repeat now that I have no objection to the Senate expressing its opinions as to policy; and to those who conscientiously believe that such an opinion should have been expressed in the Guffey coal bill I will say that I think we now have an opportunity to express the opinion of Congress in a much broader and a more comprehensive manner. Therefore, I favor the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The discussion has to some extent reduced itself to a definition of the company union. The company union was not born yesterday. For many, many years the company union has been an instrumentality by which employers sought to prevent their employees from having a union under their own control and of their own choosing. Senators who have studied the history of the conflict, if it may be called such, between capital and labor cannot have missed the point that all along, for many years, the company union has been an instrumentality intended to defeat the real union of organized labor, and it has been very successfully used for such a purpose on innumerable occasions. Companies which desire to prevent their employees from forming organizations entirely free from company management have clung to the company union as one of the means to defeat the object of organized labor. They were successful for many years; and I confess that from the voluminous testimony I have heard during the consideration of several bills in committee, at which time many witnesses were heard upon the subject and where a demonstration was had as to the evils accomplished by company unions, I feel suspicious that an attempt to strike out the language now used in the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas and substitute other language, however conscientiously it may be suggested, will result in evil rather than good. It is a case of Greeks bearing gifts, it seems to me. I do not think the Senate ought to be deceived; and if Senators will read the history of the conflict between labor and capital, they will not be deceived.

Particularly is what I have said true as to the coal industry. In defeating the cause of organized labor the company union has been employed for many years. Of all the industries, I think that pertaining to coal is one in which we ought not to apply this amendment, because that industry has been practically free from the influence of the sit-down strike, that form of strike has to no appreciable extent made advancement in the coal industry; it has not been resorted to. I believe, however, that we ought to couple with any declaration of policy a denunciation of the evils that, as must be apparent to every student of the subject, organized capital has for many years used effectively to destroy the influence of organizations of employees. The coal industry had suffered, it seems to me, more than any one industry. Its employees had been held in practical bondage for many years. Conditions in the industry are today much better than they were 10 years ago, and they were better 10 years ago than they were 25 or 50 years ago; but if we will take the history of the coal industry from the beginning we will find that that industry started with its laborers substantially under the control of the employers, who held them down practically as slaves.

Men in that industry are born into it, to a great extent, and remain in it until they die of old age. It has become in the last 15 years rather a sick industry; it has not been prosperous; and the evils have in some respects grown on that account. But, as has been said here, it was not many years ago—and perhaps it is still true in some places in the United States—that those who worked in the mines, which is the hardest work, it seems to me, that is known to manual labor, were governed by rules and regulations imposed by organized capital which were disgraceful, which denied human freedom, and which really defied the law. Men were required to live on company property; they were required to live in miserable hovels; they were subject for a great many years to the merciless punishment of injunctions issued by courts that had no sympathy for the men who toil. The investigations of some of the committees of this body will demonstrate that some of the injunctions issued were cruel beyond description; that some of them went so far as to prohibit even medical advice, even doctors from coming onto the property and administering help in case of sickness. There are instances of children being born where it was impossible, on account of an injunction, to obtain the assistance of a physician. The miners were starved into subjection in many cases.

As I have read the history of the industry, it has seemed to me that the miner was treated with greater cruelty than were workers in any other line of human endeavor. I remember that a few years ago, when I was campaigning in Pennsylvania, I passed by a cemetery and had my attention called to an epitaph on a rough stone slab, marking a human grave. There lay beneath that slab the body of a man almost born a miner, who went into the mines previous to the Civil War. When that war began he came out of the mines, enlisted in the Union Army, and fought for 4 years to free the men of color from bondage and human slavery. At the close of the war he went back again into the mines. As has been said in this debate, it was always the object of the employer to keep those men in debt to the company. They had to buy their groceries at the company's store; they had to live in the little hovels the company provided on company property; and at the end of the month usually they found themselves a little bit behind, and were never able to catch up. Their terms of employment were such that they could not leave a job in one mine and take a job in another; they had to sign the "yellow dog" contract. The miner to whom I was referring went back into the mine in Pennsylvania after the close of the Civil War and remained there until he died. When he was stricken, and knew that death was only a few hours away, from his humble couch he wrote an epitaph for his own tombstone. That epitaph read:

> For 40 years beneath the ground, with pick and spade, I did my task, the coal king's slave, but now, thank God, I am free at last.

That is the story of a million miners all over the United States. One of the things they have had to fight, in the effort to make some progress toward a higher civilization, has been the company union. The employers know what a company union means; the employees know what it means; there is no secret about it. The definition of company union is well understood. There is no effort in the resolution, so far as I know, to deceive anybody about what the company union usually—in fact, always—is.

So far as I know, though there may be exceptions, I have not discovered them in my investigation of the subject. I concede, as I said a while ago to the Senator from Michigan, who does not happen to be now in his place, there is, in theory, the possibility of organizing a company union that would be perfect, to which there could be no objection, but the trouble is that in practice such an animal does not exist, and whenever the camel is allowed to get its nose under the tent it will be found, in the end, that the company union has some ulterior motive to control the employees and injure and, if possible, destroy organized labor.

I think, therefore, that the word "foster", which is in the amendment now, ought to remain in it. It is better than to use "dominate." I do not believe it is wise, even though I concede the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire just a few moments ago was offered in the best of faith, that we should take any chance in trying to define "company unions." As I have said, there is no doubt as to what the term means.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The word "foster" not only includes what may happen to the union in the way of domination and control and financing after it is organized, but it also carries with it the meaning of condemnation of the practice of initiating it and nurturing the organization of the union to begin with.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what fostering means, as I understand the word. A company union, of course, has to be organized, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas provides that the employer shall not foster a company union; that they shall keep their hands off of the union.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The word "foster" includes all the acts embraced in the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it does.

Mr. ROBINSON. It might embrace some other acts.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. BRIDGES. Would it be better if my amendment, which now reads "to dominate or interfere with the formation or administration of any labor organization or contribute financial or other support to it", should be changed so as to read:

To foster, dominate, or interfere with the formation or administration of any labor organization or contribute financial or other support to it.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not finding fault with the Senator's amendment. So far as I now see it, at first blush, there is nothing wrong with it. The point I am trying to make is that the phrase "company union" is so well understood that we may run some danger if we try to change it, and we may let in something that we would rather keep out. In other words, I believe the language as it reads now fully comprehends and controls the situation. I do not wish to say that the Senator's amendment does not do the same thing. Perhaps it does. I should not vote against the resolution even if the Senator's amendment were adopted and made a part of the resolution, but I doubt the wisdom of adding it to the resolution.

Mr. BRIDGES. If the Senator's objection is to the omission of the word "foster", I should be glad to insert that word. I have no objection to the word "foster" as a clarifying expression.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the word "foster" has been condemned by some Senators, but the word "foster", so far as I now can see, is the most comprehensive and applicable word that can be used in the amendment. It seems to me it is comprehensive. It fully states the point.

Mr. President, if we are going to express our opinion, which is something everyone must concede we have a right to do—and whether we are foolish in trying to do it where no law is involved is another question—I concede some good might come from it, and I have no objection to doing it.

I am opposed to making the resolution a joint resolution, as suggested by my good friend from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], although I should support it if it were a joint resolution. We are trying to express the opinion of Congress. The body of the resolution says so. We are not trying to express the opinion of anybody else. We ought not to try to express the opinion of anyone else.

We are not trying to express the opinion of the President. He can express his own opinion. We ought not to take any chances, it seems to me, although I do not believe it would be taking a chance to express our opinion and then say, "Before this declaration goes forth we must have the approval of somebody else, such as the President", though, as a matter of fact, we are trying to express only our own opinion. So far as my individual view is concerned, I am expressing my own opinion and assisting in the expression of the collective opinion of my colleagues in Congress. I do not believe we ought to try to go any further than that.

I thought, from the debate which took place the other day when the amendment relating to the sit-down strike was offered to the coal bill, that the action now proposed would be done today, probably by unanimous consent. Everybody seemed to favor it. It seems to me practically everybody is for it. Why all this argument over an amendment or against language which, so far as I am able to determine, is better than anything that has been suggested as a substitute? I think the language of the resolution is comprehensive. I hope it expresses the opinion of Congress. I am heartily in favor of it. It expresses my opinion fully and without any exception, including the sit-down strike and including everything else that is covered by the amendment. It seems to me all these things ought to be included in the resolution and that we ought not to make a declaration against labor without making an equally strong declaration against organized capital, which, after all, is to blame for nearly every strike with which I am familiar, and in many cases is to blame even for the violations of law on the part of employees.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, has the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] been adopted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not.

Mr. WHEELER. I am particularly in favor of the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Arkansas. If we are going to pass a resolution which expresses the sense of the Congress that the so-called sit-down strike is illegal and contrary to sound public policy, then most assuredly the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas should be adopted.

With reference to company unions, and with reference to the so-called industrial spy system, I have had a great deal of experience, particularly with the industrial spy system. Some years ago in Montana there was in operation probably one of the greatest industrial spy systems ever employed in any State. It developed that during the war many of the so-called spies got into what came to be known in the West as the I. W. W.'s; as a matter of fact, they became the leaders of that organization. They were heralded from one end of the country to the other as dangerous people, and they were dangerous, but they were almost invariably Pinkerton or Burns or Thiel detectives.

I should like to go much further than passing a mere resolution, which does not mean anything except that it expresses the sense of the Congress. I should like to see a law placed on the statute books, if it were possible to enact such a law, which would make it a felony for any company to use industrial spies in the United States. I am not at all sure that it is impossible or improper to do so in relation to companies engaged in interstate commerce.

To me it is one of the most dangerous things that can possibly happen in this country, not so much for the labor unions themselves as for the companies that employ them.

When I was a prosecuting attorney I had occasion to investigate some of these cases. I found that what would happen would be that industrial spies would get into a union and then would go out and try to get decent union men to commit some crime—to blow up a transformer, to put dynamite under a building, or blow up something—or they would drive nails into logs or set fire to mines and try to get decent men belonging to the unions to do these very things, for the purpose of creating jobs for the spies' particular organization. In two particular cases we had direct, positive evidence of this being done during the period of which I speak.

With reference to the company union, as has been said here, I think the term has a very definite meaning. Of course a great many unions are more or less controlled by the company, although they are not known as company unions, and are not what we ordinarily term "company unions." By the term "company unions", I take it we mean those unions which are organized and fostered by the company itself; but those of us who have had experience with unions know that while a union may not be organized by the company, sometimes the company gets control of the particular leaders of the union and dominates it to a large extent.

As a matter of fact, before the industrial spy system was started to any great extent in the labor movement of the United States, the plan of most of the companies was, if they organized a company union, to elect their particular man president or secretary of the union, thereby controlling and dominating it. That has gone on in unions all over this country.

When that plan ceased to be very effective, the Burns and the Pinkerton and the Thiel and the other detective agencies conceived the idea of placing the industrial spy system in operation; and the agencies went out all over the country and made trouble between union men and their employers so that the agencies would be able to get employment for their particular men. It was one of the greatest rackets that we uncovered during the war. The Department of Justice uncovered the racket that was going on, and we particularly uncovered it throughout the Northwest. In the State of Washington, the State of Montana, in other Northwestern States, and all through the western country, the industrial spy system at that time was carried on to a far greater extent than in the East or the Middle West. As a matter of fact, it was not being carried on particularly in the East or the Middle West, because those sections of the country did not have the strong unions that we had in our part of the country.

As I said a moment ago, these spies would get into the union, and then would go out and create a situation whereby they would frighten the lawyers and the officers of the company to such an extent that they would have to employ a great many more men to watch these "dangerous" men; and when the "dangerous" literature that was being put out, or the suggestions that were being made by supposedly bad men, were traced down, they were almost invariably traced to the Pinkerton or the Burns or the Thiel detective who was lurking in the background.

I must confess that a resolution that it is the sense of Congress that the so-called sit-down strike is illegal does not mean very much to me, because while I think we all have in mind what a sit-down strike is, there is a chance that an entirely different construction might be placed upon it.

If we are going to pass the resolution, however, certainly we should adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I do not think we ought to try to change the language otherwise, because, as I read the resolution, it sets out in about as simple and concise language as possible what we are trying to do; and I doubt that there can be any misunderstanding of the meaning of the words that are used.

I hope the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] will be adopted, and that the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] will be defeated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the concurrent resolution, as amended.

Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. McKELLAR, and other Senators called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I was glad the Senate adopted the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]; but I desire to raise one question in regard to the first paragraph of the resolution, and that is as to the advisability of the Congress saying that the so-called sit-down strike is illegal.

It seems to me there might be some such strikes to which that term should not be applied. While I am not a lawyer, it seems to me to be just a little beyond the functions of the Congress of the United States to declare what is illegal. I have always been led to believe that it was the function of the courts instead of the function of the Congress to say what is illegal or unlawful.

I have here an article written by Mr. Leon Green, the dean of the Northwestern Law School of Chicago, which is considered to be one of the great law schools of the Nation. He is at the present time what is known as the visiting professor in Yale University Law School. He has written an article appearing in the New Republic of March 24 of this year, entitled "The Case for the Sit-Down Strike", in which he makes what seems to me to be a very logical argument. He sums up the matter with two or three statements, and I desire to read the last statement of his summary. He says:

> Occupation in good faith and peacefully of a plant devoted to industry by employees awaiting the adjustment of differences growing out of the industrial relation is but an incident of the industrial relation and in no sense unlawful.

It seems to me there might be a sit-down strike which would be perfectly legal and lawful, in which the employees would be within their rights, and within the law. Therefore, it seems to me that the word "illegal" should be stricken out of the concurrent resolution.

This article by the dean of Northwestern Law School appeals to me as a very clear presentation of the subject, and I ask unanimous consent to have it published in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the concurrent resolution as amended. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I am advised that if the Senator from Mississippi were present he would vote as I am about to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY (when Mr. STEIWER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. STEIWER] is absent on official business. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] has a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am not advised how either Senator would vote on the pending question if he were present and voting.

The senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. HALE. My colleague the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] is absent on account of illness. He asked me to secure a pair for him in favor of the pending joint resolution. I have not been able to do so. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] are detained from the Senate on important public business. I am advised if present and voting these Senators would vote "yea."

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] are detained because of illness.

The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] are unavoidably detained.

Mr. NORRIS. The senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 75, nays 3, as follows:

So the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7), as amended, was passed, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the so-called sit-down strike is illegal and contrary to sound public policy;

That the so-called industrial spy system breeds fear, suspicion, and animosity, tends to cause strikes and industrial warfare, and is contrary to sound public policy; and

That it is likewise contrary to sound public policy for any employer to deny the right of collective bargaining, to foster the company union, or to engage in any other unfair labor practice as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

CHARLES M. PERKINS—REQUEST FOR RETURN OF AN ENROLLED BILL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 8), which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to return to the House of Representatives the enrolled bill (H. R. 1089) entitled "An act for the relief of Charles M. Perkins."

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to.

M. K. FISHER

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 544) for the relief of M. K. Fisher, which was, on page 1, line 5, after "Fisher", to insert "of Clarkdale, Ariz."

The motion was agreed to.

AMELIA CORR

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 784) for the relief of Amelia Corr, which was, on page 2, line 4, after "Government", to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. MOORE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

EDWARD Y. GARCIA AND AURELIA GARCIA

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 316) for the relief of Edward Y. Garcia and Aurelia Garcia, which was, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$2,500."

Mr. HATCH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMISSARY PRIVILEGES TO CERTAIN WIDOWS OF OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1133) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1909, to extend commissary privileges to widows of officers and enlisted men of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard and also to officers of the Foreign Service of the United States at foreign stations, which was, on page 1, line 7, to strike out the comma and "Marine Corps, and Coast Guard" and insert "and Marine Corps,".

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

NORMAN HILDEBRAND

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1311) for the relief of Norman Hildebrand, which was, on page 1, line 6, after "Navy", to insert "in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States."

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ACCEPTANCE OF FOREIGN DECORATIONS, ETC., BY CERTAIN OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1455) to authorize certain officers of the United States Navy and officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps to accept such medals, orders, and decorations as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered, which were, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "Navy" and insert "Navy, officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the United States Army"; on page 2, line 7, after "DeWolfe", to insert "; Capt. Charles C. Gill; Capt. Henry K. Hewitt; Capt. Paul H. Bastedo; Capt. Ross T. McIntire (MC); Lt. Paul W. Hord; and Lt. Augustus D. Clark"; on page 2, after line 7, to insert "United States Army: Maj. Gen. Andrew Moses; Col. Charles Burnett; Col. Albert Gilmor; Lt. Col. John A. Crane; Lt. Col. Henry B. Cheadle; Lt. Col. Clarence H. Danielson; Lt. Col. James A. Dorst; Lt. Col. Robert L. Sibert; Second Lt. Stephen Walsh Holderness; Pvt. Mikael Torres; Dr. William H. Brown, civilian employee, Philippine Government; Dr. Samuel M. Burka, Air Corps civilian employee; Capt. Ciriado Carillo, Philippine Coast Guard; John B. Johnson, Air Corps civilian employee; Jean A. Roche, Air Corps civilian employee"; and on page 2, line 11, after "Belton", insert "; Maj. Gen. Charles H. Lyman; Lt. James Roosevelt (VMCR); and Capt. John D. Blanchard"; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize certain officers of the United States Navy, officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the United States Army, and officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps to accept such medals, orders, and decorations as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered."

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS ARISING FROM EXPLOSION AT LAKE DENMARK, N. J.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 713) to provide an appropriation for the payment of claims of persons who suffered property damage, death, or personal injury due to the explosion at the naval ammunition depot, Lake Denmark, N. J., July 10, 1926, which was, on page 2, line 11, after "$1,000", to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That any payment made hereunder shall be accepted in full settlement of this claim against the United States: Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. MOORE. I move that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, with an amendment striking out the additional proviso contained in the House amendment in the following words:

Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

So as to read:

Provided, That any payment made hereunder shall be accepted in full settlement of this claim against the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment of Mr. MOORE to the amendment of the House was agreed to.

The amendment of the House, as amended, was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of several officers in the Marine Corps.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Carl Watson to be State administrator for Ohio.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

IN THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the nominations for promotions in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the Executive Calendar.

ADJOURNMENT TO FRIDAY

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Friday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Friday, April 9, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 7, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our everlasting Father, who dost all things in heaven and earth, mercifully hear our supplication. With each day come fresh duties. May we waste no time on lost opportunities, but turn the leaf of another day and behold the page with confidence and assurance. We beseech Thee to graciously equip us for the tasks that await us. Grant that we may have hearts and dispositions that make labor a delight and doing good to others a sacred privilege. Save us from angry passions and stimulate us with good desires. When we are selfish, forgive; when we wander astray, recall; and when we think ill of others, do Thou restrain. Clothe us, we pray Thee, with that deep wisdom that never fails to bear fruits of happiness and good will, and Thine shall be the glory. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 36]

Allen, Ill.	Englebright	Kloeb	Richards
Amlie	Garrett	Lanzetta	Robsion, Ky.
Bacon	Gilchrist	Lesinski	Ryan
Beam	Goodwin	McGehee	Schaefer, Ill.
Binderup	Hennings	McGroarty	Secrest
Buckley, N. Y.	Higgins	Mouton	Shannon
Cannon, Wis.	Hook	Norton	Tobey
Clark, Idaho	Hull	Parsons	Treadway
Cravens	Izac	Pettengill	Wadsworth
Crowther	Kelly, N. Y.	Quinn	White, Idaho
Curley	Kerr	Reece, Tenn.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and eighty-six Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. RAYBURN, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. FISH. I demand the reading of the Journal in full.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may state to the gentleman the Journal is always read in full.

The Clerk will read the Journal.

Mr. FISH. I am interested in knowing who was present yesterday when I addressed the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal.

THE JOURNAL

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a very interesting and illuminating address entitled "Twenty Years After", delivered over the radio last night by our colleague the gentleman from Ohio, Representative WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a joint resolution from the California State Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the special orders already agreed upon, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by our colleague, the distinguished chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee [Mr. LEA], on April 1 on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of the Interstate Commerce Commission, on the subject of the Interstate Commerce Act and the Interstate Commerce Commission From the Standpoint of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, under the rules of procedure many of the proponents and opponents of antilynching legislation have been denied the privilege of addressing the House. I am one of such Members. I therefore ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on antilynching legislation and to include therein three short telegrams received from constituents of mine.

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the nature of the telegrams?

Mr. BEITER. They are three brief telegrams received from constituents of mine with reference to antilynching legislation.

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. I object to the telegrams going into the RECORD, but not to the gentleman extending his own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from New York extending his own remarks?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk I may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a radio address which I delivered today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the roll of committees.

Mr. CELLER (when the Committee on the Judiciary was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I call up the bill (H. R. 2251) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) if any officer, agent, or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof shall have any person in his custody by virtue of his power or authority as such officer, agent, or employee, and shall, without lawful justification or excuse, suffer or permit such person to be taken from his custody and injured or put to death or to be unlawfully injured or put to death while in his custody, the said State shall be deemed to have denied to the said person the equal protection of its laws. (b) Proof that any person being in the custody of any such officer, agent, or employee was unlawfully injured or put to death or unlawfully taken from such custody and injured or put to death shall be prima-facie evidence that such officer, agent, or employee suffered or permitted such person to be so taken from his custody or injured or put to death therein.

SEC. 2. (a) Any officer, agent, or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof who shall have any person in his custody by virtue of his power or authority as such officer, agent, or employee, and who shall, without lawful justification or excuse, suffer or permit such person to be taken from his custody and injured or put to death or to be unlawfully injured or put to death while in his custody, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

(b) Proof that any person being in the custody of any such officer, agent, or employee was unlawfully injured or put to death or unlawfully taken from such custody and injured or put to death shall be prima-facie evidence that such officer, agent, or employee suffered or permitted such person to be so taken from his custody or injured or put to death therein.

SEC. 3. Any officer, agent, or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof, acting as such officer, agent, or employee under authority of law, having in his custody or control a prisoner, who shall conspire, combine, or confederate with any person to injure or put such prisoner to death, or who shall conspire, combine, or confederate with any person to suffer or permit any person to take such prisoner from his custody or control to be injured or put to death, shall be guilty of a felony, and those who so conspire, combine, or confederate with any officer, agent, or employee shall likewise be guilty of a felony. On conviction the parties participating therein shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 2 years and not more than 10 years.

SEC. 4. If any person shall be taken from the custody of any officer, agent, or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof and unlawfully injured or put to death, or shall be unlawfully injured or put to death while in the custody of any such officer, agent, or employee, the said State and the said governmental subdivision of the said State shall be deemed to have denied to such person the equal protection of its laws, and the said governmental subdivision of said State shall be liable to the injured person, or, in the event of death, to the legal representatives of the deceased, for a sum of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000, which sum may be recovered in a civil action against such county or other governmental subdivision of a State in the United States district court of the judicial district wherein such person is injured or put to death: Provided, That when any such person shall have been taken from the custody of any such officer, agent, or employee of any State who is not an officer, agent, or employee of any governmental subdivision thereof, the county or other governmental subdivision of said State wherein the said person shall have been so injured or put to death shall be liable to the injured person, or, in event of death, to the legal representatives of the deceased, as aforesaid. When any person shall have been injured as aforesaid, the cause of action for such injury shall not abate with the death of the person.

SEC. 5. If any provision, sentence, or clause of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of this act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. CELLER (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. FISH. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill. With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "(a)."

Page 2, line 1, after the word "laws", strike out the remainder of line 1 and all of lines 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7.

Page 2, after line 18, strike out all of subsection (b), from lines 19 to 25, inclusive.

Page 4, line 3, after the word "death", strike out the proviso ending in line 11.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the House Calendar.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York raises the question of consideration.

The question is, Will the House consider the bill (H. R. 2251) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching?

Those who favor the consideration of the bill will say "aye" when their names are called and those opposed will say "no."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CELLER and Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois) there were—ayes 103, noes 100.

Mr. BOILEAU and Mr. GAVAGAN demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. FISH and Mr. ANDREWS objected to the vote on the ground there was not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and forty-one Members present, a quorum.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the yeas and nays on the proposition of whether or not the House will consider the bill. As many as are in favor of taking the vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After a pause.] Evidently a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

Those in favor of considering the bill will, when their names are called, say "yea" and those opposed "nay."

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. GAVAGAN. To submit a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I understood the Chair to state that those who are opposed to the consideration of this bill will vote "nay" and those who are in favor of its consideration will vote "yea." Did the Chair so announce?

The SPEAKER. The Chair in just as definite and clear terms as possible announced that that was the vote.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I thank the Chair.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 123, nays 257, not voting 50, as follows:

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to consider the bill and lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that that motion is not in order on a vote of this character.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the antilynching bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT JUDGES, NINTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary I call up the bill (S. 1550) to provide for the appointment of two additional circuit judges for the ninth judicial circuit and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, two additional circuit judges for the ninth judicial circuit.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes two additional judges for the ninth circuit. That circuit embraces seven of the Western States and runs from Canada to Mexico. It has jurisdiction of Alaska, the Hawaiian Islands, and our court in China. The bill passed the Senate unanimously and has been reported unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House. I believe everybody who has examined the situation agrees that it is imperative that that court have relief.

If there are any questions any Member of the House would like to ask I should be very glad to yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, these are circuit judges?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. TOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 4985) entitled "An act to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. NEELY, Mr. BULKLEY, and Mr. DAVIS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4064) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes."

APPEARANCE BY ATTORNEY GENERAL IN CASES INVOLVING CONSTITUTIONALITY OF ACTS OF CONGRESS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I call up the bill (H. R. 2260) to provide for appearance on behalf of and appeal by the United States in certain cases in which the constitutionality of acts of Congress is involved.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, there is opposition to this bill. I object.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2260, with Mr. WOODRUM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will make a very brief statement about this bill and will then be glad to answer any questions which I may be able to answer.

There have been some statements made about this bill already and I believe the membership of the House understands that the bill provides that in any case of private litigation in a Federal court, where the constitutionality of an act of Congress is drawn in question, the Attorney General may intervene to defend, solely, the question of constitutionality.

In this connection may I state there will be offered an amendment also giving to the Attorney General the right to appeal directly to the Supreme Court from an adverse decision on the question of constitutionality; in those cases where the Government is an original party or where some agency of the Government is a party, and where such right to appeal does not now obtain.

This legislation is drawn on the theory which seems to me and to a majority of the Committee on the Judiciary to be sound. It is our view that when, in private litigation, the constitutionality of an act of Congress is drawn in question, that question of constitutionality becomes the big question in that litigation. Not only is the question as to whether or not the legislative branch of the Government has operated within constitutional limits of concern to the Government as an entity, but there may be many thousands of private citizens who have various sorts of relationships depending upon the constitutionality of that act; but in that private litigation there is no opportunity for those other people whose interests are just as vital as the two litigants, to appear, and there is nobody there to represent this House of Congress.

If we can get away from the legalistic mind, the mind of a lawyer, and visualize a situation as it often actually is, we can appreciate how absurd it is for the question whether you and I have acted within constitutional limitations to be dependent for its proper presentation upon some person who may not be a real lawyer at all, selected by a private person and appearing in a private lawsuit.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Just in a moment I will yield.

Now, it ought not be so that litigation is determined by the quality of lawyer one has, but we know that much is determined by the legal ability of the man who appears in the case.

I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I am interested in getting the gentleman's opinion as to what benefit would result from intervention in such a case by the Attorney General, other than that it might expedite final determination. In other words, how would intervention on the part of the Attorney General in such a case result in a better determination of the issues involved?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I make this statement? As a matter of fact, when the constitutionality of an act of Congress is drawn in question in private litigation, there is absent, as a matter of fact, a necessary and proper party insofar as representation is concerned. You have involved in that case the right of the two litigants. There is also involved in that case the constitutionality of an act of Congress. The Government is a necessary and proper party, practically speaking.

The rights of citizens; maybe thousands of citizens are involved, and only one citizen is there represented. There is a public question and a public interest involved. There ought to be a public representative of that interest.

I do not want to mention the case, but I call to mind that within the last 2 or 3 years the committee of which I am a member reported a very important bill. The constitutionality of that bill was drawn in issue in private litigation. The constitutionality of that act was poorly defended, I thought, and I have always thought none too well considered in the Court. After the committee had gone to a great deal of effort to try to work that thing out and many private persons all over the country had come to depend upon the constitutionality of that act, that whole matter was determined in a private litigation, with the public interest dependent upon a private lawyer hired by a private person to try his case. Nobody anywhere in the whole proceedings undertook to speak for the Government, for the Congress, whose act was under attack, for the many and varied interests of other people which were in fact being determined in that lawsuit.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. COX. Is it the gentleman's expectation that the intervention of the Attorney General will bring to bear upon the issue some extraordinary legal power?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. My answer, of course, is "yes."

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I approve of the purpose and design of this legislation, but I ask the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary if in the deliberations of his committee the rights of the litigants on such appeal were considered?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes, they were. That subject was very much discussed.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. What protection have they against being visited with extra costs?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. There is no arrangement in this bill dealing with the matter of costs.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. No; I do not find any. I think they should be protected.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. What is the gentleman's suggestion about it?

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. COX. I have no objection whatever to the intervention of the Attorney General, but I thought his intervention was to be in the interest of expedition rather than of aid to the Court in deciding the question.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is for expedition, but I would not be candid, I may say to the gentleman from Georgia, if I did not say that the committee had the expectation that the great law officer of the United States ought to be the best prepared of anybody to defend an act of the United States Congress when it is challenged.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. In connection with what the gentleman from Minnesota has suggested, what thought did the committee give in reference to the delay that the intervention of the Attorney General might cause the litigation? I think this is an excellent piece of legislation and I want to see it passed, but I think some amendment should be offered to require the Attorney General to intervene within a reasonable time and that the Government pay the expense of his intervention.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I may say to my friend, the gentleman from Mississippi, that the committee considered that, too. There were many suggestions with reference to time, but it was finally concluded by the committee, finally determined by the committee, to let him come in as an ordinary intervenor and be governed by the rules of procedure of the court. We thought that should be the practice at least in the experimental stage—and this is merely experimental—we would not attempt to say that we have a bill here that ought not to be amended. We had one or two main thoughts. One was that acts of Congress are often attacked with nobody in court whose business it is to defend the acts of the Congress. We have sought to remedy that. We considered whether we should undertake to write into the bill limitations as to the length of time which the Attorney General may have in which to intervene, and so forth. We decided, and I think decided unanimously, and I believe wisely, that in the experimental stage of this bill we would let the Attorney General come in as an ordinary intervenor under the general rules of the court governing such situations.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. COX. May I not inquire of the gentleman if his committee had not well worked out this proposition in a general way prior to the time that the proposal to reform the judiciary, which some have referred to as a packing of the Court involving a sacking and a stacking, arose?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. This bill was introduced by me early in the session, and whatever responsibility there is for it, I must bear.

Mr. COX. And it came about as a result of that original move on the part of the gentleman from Texas, and not as the result of another general proposal which is now being very widely discussed?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It came about as a result of a thought which got into my head and which finally got on paper.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. Supplementing the earlier question as to possible delays incident to the intervention of the Attorney General, with the tremendous territory involved, has the gentleman any figures as to the probable number of cases in which there might be intervention?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I must say to my friend, the gentleman from Maine, that I do not know the number of cases. I doubt that the number will be tremendously large. I do not know, I could not give any estimate; but I may say to my friend that regardless of the number of cases I believe the Judiciary Committee unanimously agreed that we ought to try this thing. I do not think there is any serious opposition.

Mr. BREWSTER. And in what way will it be possible for the Attorney General with his present staff possibly to assume the responsibilities that are involved, without considerable delay, unless he sets up a greatly enlarged organization?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. He would have to conform to the rules of the Court.

Mr. BREWSTER. But, obviously, the Court cannot require that he, with his limited staff, shall be present in every tribunal in this country where lawyers are delighted to raise constitutional questions.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I suggest to the gentleman, this matter is discretionary and I do not believe the Attorney General would appear in all cases. In the first place, under this bill he comes in only when the judge thinks the constitutional question involved is a serious one. When the Court thinks there is a serious question raised, then the Attorney General is advised. We thought the Attorney General ought to be advised when the Court thinks the question is serious, and be given an opportunity to represent the public interest involved.

Mr. BREWSTER. May I make it clear I am entirely in sympathy with anything that will obviate delays in our courts so far as determination of constitutional questions is concerned.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. As a matter of fact, if the same constitutional question was pending in many tribunals, in order for that constitutional question to be determined it would be necessary for the Attorney General to appear in only one forum?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. In one forum, yes; and may I suggest, having appeared in that one forum, if the determination is against the constitutionality of the act he can go immediately to the Supreme Court, which shuts off a long period of suspense for the litigants in other cases.

Mr. LANHAM. That would make it unnecessary to go to more than one court where the same question was pending in more than one court?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. Because of the fact that this action on the part of the Attorney General would speed up the final determination by the Supreme Court, it would probably be to the advantage of everybody to let some of those other cases stand by until the matter was settled.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The bill provides that the Attorney General may appeal directly to the Supreme Court?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. There is no provision, as I read the bill, for private attorneys in a case to go directly to the Supreme Court in case the Attorney General does not intervene?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No.

Mr. RANKIN. Why not permit the litigants through their attorneys, if they so desire, to appeal directly to the Supreme Court where a constitutional question is involved?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I may say the committee did not consider that in connection with this bill and I hope it will not be injected into the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. I have certain reasons for making this inquiry.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I can appreciate the force of the gentleman's thought.

Mr. RANKIN. We have in my own territory a number of instances in which the municipalities have been paralyzed. Now, then, we want the attorneys for those municipalities to be able to appeal directly to the Supreme Court of the United States in order to get the constitutionality of the particular statute cleared up.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I may say that the committee will be glad to consider the question if it is presented.

Mr. RANKIN. If this bill is passed, I fear it will be the end of the matter.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; it is not.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLER. I may say to the gentleman from Mississippi that we are giving that matter consideration now; but in undertaking to settle the rights of private litigants, or in considering the question of amending the law providing for appeal by private litigants, it involves giving consideration practically to the entire appellate jurisdiction of our courts. I do not think that would be wise, notwithstanding the laudable statement made by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. That could only be done in cases where a constitutional question is involved.

Mr. MILLER. I know; but if the constitutional question is decided, that is a question based on the merits of the act.

Mr. RANKIN. A man of ordinary means nowadays cannot get to the Supreme Court of the United States. He is under a judicial handicap, and his case is determined without getting to the Supreme Court.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We give the Attorney General the right to intervene in that case or any other case; but may I say one of the most serious things the committee had to consider in this connection was whether or not, even with this limitation, we were not putting too great a burden upon the Supreme Court. Everybody was apprehensive in that regard. May I also say we recognize this is an experimental piece of legislation, but it seems to be a step in the right direction. I had given a good deal of thought to it before I introduced the bill. I would not undertake to say it is going to work, but we think it will.

Mr. RANKIN. If the burden becomes too heavy for the Court, we will provide for some additional Supreme Court Judges.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Some people have a doubt as to how much we can help the Supreme Court by adding Judges, but we will not go into that matter now.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES. There is one question that bothers me in reference to the duty of the Court to notify the Attorney General. I heard the latter part of the gentleman's explanation. The way this bill is worded, would there not be the opportunity to delay a suit by raising the question? It is simply stated, "If the constitutional question is drawn into issue."

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. JONES. The Court is not given proper discretion, it seems to me, to determine that there is a real serious question involved.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; we do.

Mr. JONES. If someone wanted to delay a suit, could they raise the question?

Mr. MILLER. The bill answers the question of the gentleman from Texas on page 2, line 1.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We took care of that situation, I may say to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES. I just read the first part.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We gave that considerable thought.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Is it not a fact that the Attorney General intervening in a case under this bill is subject to the same rules as laid down by the Supreme Court as anyone else that intervenes in the Court?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; that is right.

Mr. MAGNUSON. He is subject to the same time limitation and the same rules of the Supreme Court?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. As I stated a moment ago, many suggestions were made in committee that we fix time limits, and so forth; but we finally arrived at the conclusion we better let the Attorney General come in under the rules and regulations as prescribed for litigants generally.

Mr. MAGNUSON. And under that situation he could not delay proceedings any more than the proceedings may now be delayed?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In line with the question asked by the gentleman from Texas with reference to the authority and power of the Court, in section (a) it is stated:

Provided, That if the Court believes there is a real constitutional question presented, it is the mandatory duty of the Court to notify the Attorney General.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Suppose the Court does not do this, or suppose at the beginning of the trial of the case the constitutional question does not appear, and later, before the case is concluded, it appears a real constitutional question is involved, but there is not enough time to notify the Attorney General and the Court goes ahead and decides the case. Let us turn now to section (b). In section (b) you provide the Attorney General may come in at that time, after the decision, even though he has not been in the original trial, but you have no provision making it mandatory on the Court to notify the Attorney General the Court has decided a case in which there is a constitutional question. I presume the committee may have thought the Attorney General by that time ought to be wide enough awake to know something about the constitutional question. Is that the reason the committee did not insert such a provision in the bill?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; that was not the original reason.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SPENCE. As I understand it, the Court itself decides whether or not there is substantial ground for questioning the constitutionality of the statute?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. SPENCE The Court will not notify the Attorney General until he has come to a tentative judgment, at least, on the subject?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. My idea is that when he reads the pleadings and from other sources he will discover whether or not a serious question of constitutionality is presented.

Mr. SPENCE. He would have to anticipate; he would have to decide against the constitutionality before he notified the Attorney General?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. He would have some idea, at least, that it was a serious question. I may say to the gentleman it is exactly like the situation the gentleman has undoubtedly experienced many times in court, when one counsel gets up and the court says, "I do not want to hear from you, but I will hear from Mr. Jones, on the other side." That is about the situation.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Is not the net effect of this bill the absolute destruction of the opportunity of the poor man to have his case heard in court?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That would be very bad, would it not?

Mr. TABER. It would occur in this way: The minute a poor man begins a suit in an attempt to protect himself or his property from an infringement of his constitutional rights he has to go up against the full power and full force of the Attorney General's office, under this provision.

The Attorney General is not only permitted to come into court and argue the question, which perhaps might be proper, but is permitted to intervene as a party, and to conduct an appeal and to play horse with it. It seems to me this operation is simply making it a little bit more difficult than it was before for the poor man to have any chance to have his day in court. The rich man will be able to spread himself out so that he can get his day in court regardless of the intervention of the Attorney General, but the poor man will have no chance whatever. Is not this about the situation which is presented?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. If it is, it is a funny thing it has not occurred to the committee, is it not?

Mr. TABER. It has occurred to a lot of Members.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not think the gentleman is right about it.

Mr. TABER. It would work that way.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Here is a concrete proposition: You are a Member of this Congress. You have gone to a lot of trouble getting a bill through. I think you must assume, however violent some may consider the assumption, that when Congress expresses its legislative judgment it thinks it is acting within constitutional limitations and passing a good law. Does the gentleman object to that position being presented to the trial court properly by someone who is representing you and your colleagues, the Government, and nobody else? I do not think the House does.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I think the question propounded to the chairman of the committee by the gentleman from New York is very pertinent. I think there is some ground for the apprehension the gentleman from New York expresses, because I find in my experience here that on a number of different occasions there have been presented to me instances where representatives of the Department of Justice have intervened in cases before the patent courts of this land to prevent poor American citizens from securing rights to certain patents they would have under the law if they had the financial resources to proceed to the same length in prosecuting their claims people in affluent circumstances would be permitted to proceed. I think it is a very pertinent question which has been raised by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman from Michigan does not think this is a case similar to that, does he?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I beg your pardon?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will not ask the question.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. I may say to my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF], that if he were a lawyer he probably would not make the comparison he has just made. The gentleman is a good doctor, but not a doctor of law. This bill affects only constitutional questions. It has nothing to do with procedure before the departments in patent cases.

In answer to what the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has stated about the poor man, as the chairman of the committee well knows, for a number of years the committee, with the assistance of the judiciary, has been trying to make it possible for the poor man to have his case disposed of by a final tribunal with as little expense as possible. It occurs to me the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is just as wrong as he can be in his analysis when he states this bill will injure the poor man because the poor man cannot get his case tried. The real trouble today is that the man of means goes into the court of original jurisdiction and may linger long in that court of original jurisdiction. Then he appeals to the circuit court of appeals, another court, and takes this poor man about whom we are talking away off yonder somewhere to have his case heard. Then, if the poor man has sufficient funds, when he gets through in that court way off yonder, he is dragged down here to Washington by the man of means who can do that, so that the man without means is cut off.

The bill provides that in certain cases where this poor man, whom the committee is trying to help, has a direct appeal, he does not need to print briefs, it is not necessary for him to hire counsel to go to the circuit court of appeals, ofttimes several hundred miles from his home, and spend a week or 2 weeks in having his case disposed of, but he may go directly to the Supreme Court of the United States, where there is justice, and from which Court there is no appeal. I cannot see for the life of me how you are going to injure the poor man in a case like that.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It would depend on which side of the constitutional question the poor man stood, would it not?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, I was under the impression the gentleman from Texas had the floor.

Mr. MICHENER. I asked the gentleman from Michigan if he had finished his statement.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman from Michigan will recall he passed some remarks about his colleague from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. I hope they were complimentary.

Mr. WOODRUFF. They were not.

Mr. MICHENER. If they were not, I withdraw them and apologize to the gentleman.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas yield to me?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. May I say that while this particular gentleman from Michigan does not happen to be a lawyer, he is familiar enough with court procedure in this country to know that what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] has said is correct. I realize that, and I understood that before the gentleman told the House about it, but I know also, Mr. Chairman, that the matter I related to the House a moment ago is true. There have been many instances where all the power of the Department of Justice has been used before the courts of this country to keep the poor people of the country from receiving justice at the hands of the courts.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I say to my friend from Michigan that as I understood his colleague from Michigan, he stated that in these patent-appeal cases, to which the gentleman from Michigan referred, there was no constitutional question involved.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I will say to my friend that the gentleman from Michigan knew that perfectly. The thing I was calling to the attention of the House was the fact that whenever all the power of the Department of Justice is taken into a court to prevent a poor man from getting justice, it is usually successful.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I wish to add just a word to what our colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], has said, as well as our distinguished Chairman. I find, as a general rule, the people who are looking around with spy glasses and questioning the constitutionality of nearly all the acts of Congress, are not the poor men referred to by our friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], but the powerful corporations, the powerful rich fellows, and this measure brings in the Attorney General to uphold not only the act of Congress, but the rights of the average poor man under an act of Congress, and I think, as a general rule, this will help the poor man instead of hurting him.

Mr. RANKIN. And, if the gentleman from Texas will permit, as a rule, it is a foreign corporation, incorporated in some other State, and using the Federal court because it is to his advantage to do so.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I think in, perhaps, the great majority of cases this will put the Attorney General and the Government on the side of the poor fellow and against the powerful, foreign corporations.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to my friend from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. If this poor man that so many Members are worrying about questions the constitutionality of an act, he is going to be at a disadvantage, because the Attorney General is going to be against him; on the other hand, if he relies on the constitutionality of an act, the Attorney General is going to be for him. So the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Michigan are both correct.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I want to make this statement, and I want the folks on my side of the aisle to observe it. All on earth you have got to do, if you are wondering why they keep on sending Republicans here, is to see the members of the Committee on the Judiciary on the Republican side of the House in action. You will then know why they send them here. [Applause.]

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas yield to me to ask a question of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan, who made a statement about the Attorney General's Department, to tell just where and when the power of the Attorney General's office has been projected against the poor man.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I may say to the gentleman who just propounded the question that if he will examine the records of the Court of Patent Appeals in the District of Columbia he will find all the evidence he wants.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I would like to have the gentleman make a definite statement.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I shall have to ask the gentleman to make his own investigation, as I have done. The gentleman can follow my advice and get all the information he wants, and more besides.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, these delays that are caused by present procedure fall very heavily on the poor man, but they are of great interest to the attorneys, who get additional fees by carrying these cases up to the circuit court of appeals and then to the Supreme Court. I think, perhaps, some of these attorneys are speaking for themselves rather than the poor man.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I believe the poor man is being taken care of pretty well in this bill.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. In the early part of the gentleman's remarks, as I recall it, he referred to a certain case, which was carried up from the lower courts to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the constitutionality of the act was involved. Am I correct in inferring from the remarks the gentleman made that had that case been tried on a different theory, had it been argued by the Attorney General of the United States, who should have been vitally interested, and was, but could not appear, the case might have been decided differently by the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. If the gentleman will just add one thing to that—that is, if I had been the Attorney General I believe I could have won the case [laughter].

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, if this act becomes a law, we seek to protect the acts that we pass by having competent and reputable counsel from the time the constitutionality is attacked until it is finally decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. It not that true?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We are doing our best.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. PACE. It appears from the reading of the bill that the Attorney General would have the right to present evidence and arguments. Do I understand that the Attorney General would not have the right to make motions?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I think he would have every right that an intervener would have.

Mr. PACE. Does the bill cover that?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not know. I have not examined it carefully on that point. I have the general notion about the bill that when the Attorney General is in Court he would be there practically in the status of an ordinary intervener, and would be limited to the one thing, and that is the defense of the constitutionality of the act.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. Do I understand that the question of the constitutionality still rests with the Court in its discretion—that is, as to whether or not the Attorney General shall be called in?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. In other words, it is within the power of the Court to determine whether it wants the Attorney General in the case or not.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; not that. It means in substance that the Attorney General would be called in when the judge thinks the question of constitutionality is a serious question, and in practical application the Court would not decide an act unconstitutional without having given the Attorney General an opportunity to appear.

Mr. DONDERO. But the Court itself would be the judge of whether he should be called in?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; because the Court is going to render the judgment.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. Did the committee consider the fact that placing that discretion in the Court to determine, that might itself be unconstitutional?

Mr SUMNERS of Texas. No; we do not think so.

Mr. CHURCH. Discretion that one party might get the benefit of it and the other party might not get the benefit.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; we do not have any apprehension about constitutionality on that score.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In line with the question asked by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO], if the Attorney General can make a showing of the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of a law he may ask to intervene. The Court may then permit him, if he can show sufficient reason for his intervention.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. On that point I do not think the committee has any apprehension that the Court will decide a question unconstitutional without having given the Attorney General an opportunity to appear. That is a comprehensive statement and gives the view of the committee.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. As a matter of fact, this bill does not make any serious change when we consider the present procedure, as we know it today, in almost every instance. The Attorney General could really intervene as amicus curiae in a case involving the constitutionality of any question if he wished, so that really in substance we are not changing our procedure in a very serious way?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Except that this gives him the right to intervene as a matter of right, and there the intervention is dependent upon the will of the Court.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Is there not also this additional difference between the law, if enacted, and the present law—that, if this law is enacted, the fact that the constitutionality of a statute is attacked will be immediately presented to the Attorney General by the court before whom it is attacked, whereas under the present situation that is not the case and the Attorney General may not know of it?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. If the court thinks it is a serious question, he will notify the Attorney General, but assuming that the question of constitutionality is raised and the court thinks it is a trivial thing, in that sort of a case he would not notify the Attorney General.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. But under the law as it exists at present, even if a substantial question of constitutionality is raised before the trial judge in a Federal court, he does not notify the Attorney General.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The Attorney General therefore does not know of the question being involved.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Under this bill the Attorney General can introduce evidence also, and under the present procedure he cannot.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right; and he could appeal also.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. If the court is going to allow the Attorney General to intervene, he will put it right in the order that he must intervene within 30 or 60 days?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. He would limit the Attorney General to the same rights given to ordinary litigants.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. After the court notifies the Attorney General, then it is discretionary with the Attorney General whether or not he wants to go into the case?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Even if a case is decided by a district court, under this law the Attorney General would have the right to intervene, would he not?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; anywhere up the line.

Mr. RANKIN. Just so long as it was a constitutional question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; anywhere up the line.

Now, I do not want to trespass further on the House myself. I want to be as useful as I can.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MAY. As I understand the purpose of this bill, it is to give the Attorney General of the United States authority to intervene in any suit in which the constitutionality of an act of Congress is brought into question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Under the provisions of the first section it is stated that when a question of constitutionality is raised, then you leave it to the trial court in which the question is raised to determine whether or not it is a substantial question.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right. He is going to pass on it.

Mr. MAY. Do you not think it would be better, if we are going to allow the Attorney General to intervene at all, to himself be judge as to whether it is substantial?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No. We do not think that.

Mr. MAY. Because when it is raised it will be raised by the pleadings?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MAY. The Attorney General ought to be lawyer enough to know whether or not the pleadings raise a question that is substantial. If not, he ought not be Attorney General.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. Assuming that that question arises, if the Attorney General is of the opinion that it is not a substantial question or that it has been settled, he will not intervene, in any event?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. May I say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] we tried to prevent the necessity of hiring enough lawyers to intervene in every case where the question is raised, when the judge does not think it is serious. That is what we tried to do.

Mr. MAY. Let us say that the Attorney General is of the opinion, in good faith, that there is a substantial constitutional question involved but that the Court is not of that opinion. The Court then has the power to prevent his intervening, not withstanding his judgment.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right, but it is the duty of the Court not to decide the constitutional question adversely until the Attorney General has been notified and given an opportunity to appear and defend. Later on we may have to amend if this does not work. The committee, however, thinks that this is as far as we want to go now.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. Suppose there is a substantial question in the case and the Court does not ask the Attorney General to intervene, that the case goes to decision. If this bill becomes law, what will be the effect upon that decision in case the Attorney General has not been asked to intervene or to represent the Government?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That, of course, would present a question; but we are assuming that the courts of the country would not do that. We are bound to assume that.

Mr. DONDERO. Might it invalidate the decision?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It might; but we think that before a court decides a constitutional question, if this law is on the statute books, the court would notify the Attorney General; that if the court did not, we would fuss at the court or in some way straighten it out so that the court would not do it again.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. In the event that the court decides a statute unconstitutional and the Attorney General has not intervened, could he intervene on appeal?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. He could protect the law just the same.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I understood the gentleman was asking as to the effect on the judgment. The Attorney General, under this bill, can intervene anywhere along the line.

Mr. DONDERO. That, of course, might cause delay and more litigation.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It might; yes.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. At what point in the case is it intended that the judge shall notify the Attorney General of the pendency of a constitutional question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Before he decides against the constitutionality of the act, I think the way it will work out is that when the case is filed the Court will know what questions are at issue, especially in an important case where the question of constitutionality is raised, and then the Court will make up its mind as to whether or not it should notify the Attorney General.

Mr. KENNEY. But does not the gentleman know that in some jurisdictions pleadings are filed and remain on file a year or two before they are brought before the Court? Should there not be some provision in those cases where constitutional questions are involved, of having that fact brought to the attention of the Court in the first instance so that the Attorney General may have opportunity to prepare his case before it actually comes up for trial?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It might be so, but I may say to my friend, the gentleman from New Jersey, that we feel that in any case where an important constitutional question is involved the Attorney General will be notified. It may not work out.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. SPENCE. Is it not a fact that in the majority of instances these questions of constitutionality are raised in respect of municipal corporations and public-service corporations? I have had some experience on this line. We know that the municipal corporation is usually represented by the city attorney and the large public-service corporations by a great array of lawyers. The case may be poorly presented and decided, yet it will stand as a precedent for all other cases involving like questions, and we see a gradual accretion of the rights of these corporations and a diminution of the rights of the plain people. I think this bill, if enacted into law, will have a very beneficial effect on such situations.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We think it will have a beneficial effect, and if it does not we are willing to amend it; but may I say to the gentleman from Kentucky that this is as far as we felt we wanted to burden judicial procedure and burden the Attorney General at this time. Let us take this bill now as we have presented it. If it does not work right, this Congress is not the last one.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. I notice the bill, at the bottom of page 2 and the top of page 3, would allow the Attorney General, in his discretion, to appeal directly to the Supreme Court. Would this take the entire case directly to the Supreme Court in case of such intervention, or just the question of constitutionality?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It would come up on the question of constitutionality.

I do not like to take all the time, Mr. Chairman, but I do not want to quit if any Member wants to ask me a question.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Just a question on that same subject: In case the Attorney General does intervene, the language now carried in the bill provides that such case shall have precedence over every other case in the Supreme Court. Would that mean that such case would have precedence over other cases which raised constitutional questions, or would it come up in the regular order?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Under the language now carried in the bill it would take precedence, but I would not be surprised if something has to be done about that. I think the gentleman has asked a very pertinent question. We will put that up to the Senate, probably with a suggestion, and see what they think about it.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I want to make this observation. Perhaps it has been made already. Do not the district courts, the circuit courts, and the Supreme Court permit the Department of Justice to intervene as a friend of the court without any law of this kind?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. This merely gives the Attorney General an additional right?

Mr SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. I think the bill itself answers the question asked by the gentleman from South Dakota. It says the case shall take precedence over pending litigation. It is stated, "and appeals so taken shall have precedence over other cases in the Supreme Court."

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. But the question which has been raised is a proper one and a very important question.

It is whether the case should have precedence over other cases in which a constitutional question may be raised.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. I think the language clearly means it takes precedence over other cases that may be pending, but will retain its place in connection with other cases of the same nature. It would take precedence over cases coming up otherwise.

Mr. MICHENER. If there is any question about that, it can be settled very easily by a word or two by the way of an amendment.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. I do not think there will be any objection to the amendment, but suppose we let it go through as it is and if the bill should be amended, we can take it up in the Senate.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. Assuming that litigants have other questions involved and that on the other questions an appeal is taken from the district court. Assume further the Attorney General intervenes on a constitutional question. How would the litigant proceed in the court of appeals so far as their appeal is concerned?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not know what arrangement will be made in reference to a split case. It will be somewhat similar to a case that goes up on an appeal from an interlocutory order, an injunction or cases of that sort.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. In answer to the query of the gentleman from Georgia a moment ago, I think it ought to appear specifically in the RECORD that this bill was introduced by our learned, genial, popular, and distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee on January 8; but the President's message to Congress on the subject of Federal courts was not delivered until February 5.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. May I ask the gentleman a question with reference to a particular situation. The constitutionality of many of our important statutes, of course, is raised in the trial of criminal cases under a practice of procedure in the United States district courts; that is, the same as in most of the State courts. It frequently happens a trial actually starts and an indictment must be changed or the pleadings might be changed. In case the constitutional question was raised after the trial had started, I understand then it is the court's duty to declare a mistrial and suspend all proceedings until the Attorney General can catch up and enter his appearance?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not know. What does the gentleman think?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I am asking the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I think it is a situation that might easily arise under this bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. When the question of the constitutionality of an act of Congress is raised, and it is a serious question, it is the judgment of the members of the committee that that question ought to be presented to the Supreme Court just as quickly as it can be carried there properly. If it should happen to cause delay in the trial of one specific case, the committee believed that case should be delayed until the big question that might affect a thousand persons similarly situated is disposed of. That is my judgment.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. In cases where the Attorney General intervenes, and similar cases, this act means that the Attorney General, the Government, in criminal cases may intervene?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. He is already in there.

Mr. CHURCH. He is already in there; yes, but he will delay those cases necessarily under this act, thereby depriving a defendant of his rights because this act brings the civil cases into the Supreme Court ahead of other cases. That in itself raises a constitutional question.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I was a prosecutor myself for some years and I never heard many defendants raising Cain because they could not get to trial.

Mr. CHURCH. If the defendant had won out in the lower court, he is entitled to a decision by the Supreme Court. The Attorney General denies him that right and delays the matter under this act because the Attorney General is involved in a civil suit, which would be taken to the Supreme Court ahead of other cases. I just raise that question.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Do not raise it. I have enough questions now.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. At the bottom of page 1 and at the top of page 2 there is this language:

> If the Court is of the opinion that a substantial ground exists for questioning the constitutionality of the statute.

Then the Attorney General may intervene. Suppose the Court holds an act unconstitutional and says nothing to the Attorney General. Can the Attorney General then, on his own motion, intervene?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Does the gentleman mean after decision of the lower court?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. He may intervene anywhere along the line.

Mr. RANKIN. He would not have to have the Court's consent?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] 10 minutes.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, may I say at the outset I am in favor of the general purpose of this legislation; however, I cannot vote for this particular bill for several reasons.

In the first place, parts of this bill, in my judgment, are of doubtful constitutionality; in the second place, the bill puts an unnecessary hardship on litigants; and, in the third place, it goes beyond the needs of the Attorney General in these particular cases.

As has been suggested, in most instances important constitutional questions are settled in cases in which the Government is a party.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to make it clear at the outset that I favor the general purpose of this type of legislation. The decision of the courts on any constitutional question is of importance to the people.

I do not, however, favor this bill in its present form for several reasons:

First. Parts of the bill are, in my opinion, of doubtful constitutionality.

Second. It will put unnecessary hardship on litigants.

Third. It goes far beyond the needs of the Office of the Attorney General.

In most instances great constitutional questions are decided in cases in which the Government is necessarily a party. In those cases this legislation is, of course, unnecessary. This bill is designed to apply only to litigation in which the Government is not a party, and under ordinary rules cannot become a party. It provides for an interference with orderly litigation between private parties in a manner not contemplated in the Constitution. The history of the Constitution and the cases decided under it make this clear.

In England the House of Lords has a right to summon the judges and require their opinion as to a legal question. At the time of the adoption of the Constitution I believe the King of England also had this right. Seven States of the American Union provide in their constitution for advisory opinions. The framers of the American Constitution rejected the advisory opinion, although it was urged upon them and although it was then well established in England.

Instead the framers established a government with three coordinate branches: Executive, legislative, and judicial. The judicial branch is established in article III, from which I quote the following:

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. * * *
> SEC. 2. The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, * * * to controversies to which the United States shall be a party—to controversies between two or more States, * * *. In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned, the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make.

Under this power Congress may create inferior courts and define their jurisdiction. It may make exceptions and regulations in matters of appeal. However, it has always been held that the power and authority of the courts depend, not upon Congress but upon the Constitution. The Supreme Court has held that it has no jurisdiction, either original or appellate, which is not included in this general grant of judicial power set out in article III (La. v. Texas, 176 U. S. 1; Duhne v. New Jersey, 251 U. S. 311). Consequently Congress cannot put upon the courts other than judicial duties (In re Spingarns Estate, 159 N. Y. Sup. 605), nor can it provide for an appeal to the Supreme Court from other than a judicial tribunal acting in the exercise of its constitutional judicial power (U. S. v. Ferreira, 13 Howard 40).

The judicial power of the courts is limited by the Constitution to cases and controversies. A case was defined by Chief Justice Marshall in Marbury v. Madison (1 Cranch, 137) to be a suit instituted according to the regular course of judicial procedure. The term "controversies" is less comprehensive than "cases", and includes only suits of a civil nature (In re Pacific Railway Com., 32 Fed. 241).

In Muskrat v. United States (219 U. S. 346) the Supreme Court said:

> By "cases" and "controversies" are intended the claims of litigants brought before the Court for determination by such regular proceedings as are established by law or custom for the protection or enforcement of rights or the prevention, redress, or punishment of wrongs. Whenever the claim of a party under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States takes such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting upon it, then it has become a case. The term implies the existence of present or possible adverse parties whose contentions are submitted to the Court for adjudication * * *. In that case Chief Justice Marshall, who spoke for the Court, was careful to point out that the right to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional could only be exercised when a proper case between opposing parties was submitted for judicial determination; that there was no general veto power in the Court on the legislation of Congress.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. Has the gentleman ever heard of the right of a friend of the court to appeal?

Mr. GWYNNE. A friend of the court has no such right. A friend of the court may appear by the grace of the court and make an argument as to the law, which is as far as this privilege has ever been extended.

Mr. CHURCH. As the gentleman is pointing out, a friend of the court is not a party to the proceeding?

Mr. GWYNNE. That is right.

In a long line of cases the Supreme Court has repeatedly held that the jurisdiction of the courts is confined to actual lawsuits between actual litigants who are there to protect some right or to enforce some obligation. In other words, the courts have no jurisdiction over purely moot questions.

Now, what is the criterion for determining whether there is an actual case or controversy, or simply a moot question? That apparently is determined by the character of the judgment which the court may render. The courts have no jurisdiction in any case where they cannot render judgment in the legal sense of the term, and they have no jurisdiction over any party if they cannot render judgment either for or against that party. The court has no jurisdiction either over moot questions or over moot litigants, as the Attorney General would be in this type of case.

In Muskrat v. United States (219 U. S., 346), the Supreme Court considered the constitutionality of a statute of Congress authorizing Muskrat et al. to bring a suit in the Court of Claims for the purpose of determining the validity of certain acts of Congress. The act further provided for appearance on behalf of the Government and for the necessary appeal to the Supreme Court.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER. I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE. In other words, the statute attempted to set up the necessary machinery for getting an opinion from the Supreme Court as to the legality of its acts. In dismissing the petitions for want of jurisdiction the Supreme Court had this to say:

> It is therefore evident that there is neither more nor less in this procedure than an attempt to provide for a judicial determination, final in this Court, of the constitutional validity of an act of Congress. Is such a determination within the judicial power conferred by the Constitution, as the same has been interpreted and defined in the authoritative decisions to which we have referred? We think it is not. That judicial power, as we have seen, is the right to determine actual controversies arising between adverse litigants duly instituted in courts of proper jurisdiction.

I submit the Attorney General in this type of case is not an actual litigant and has no adverse interest. He has no interest at all which he is entitled to be defending in this Court or any other court. If he has such a right as a representative of the executive arm of the Government, then he could appear in the court, anyway.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think when the constitutionality of an act of the Government is attacked the Government has an interest which it has a right to appear to defend?

Mr. GWYNNE. I am afraid not. I admit it has an academic interest, but the point I make is this: The power of the Court to decide cases does not depend upon the Congress, but upon the Constitution. The Court can decide no case unless the party comes into Court in defense of some actual material right.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Under present conditions the Attorney General may appear, in the discretion of the court, as a friend of the court and argue the constitutionality of a question which has arisen in the pleadings or during the conduct of the proceedings in the court.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is right.

Mr. HEALEY. This bill merely gives him the right, which he now has at the discretion of the court, to come in as a friend of the court.

Mr. GWYNNE. No; we go beyond that in this bill. We make the Attorney General an intervenor. We make him a party. He is entitled to come into the case, to be heard on the constitutional question, and to offer evidence. Then—and this is the part of the bill which seems to me to be clearly unconstitutional—he is given the right to appeal.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. The language of the bill is:

> When * * * the constitutionality of any statute of the United States is brought in question.

Is it the contention of the gentleman that not only should this feature appear but it should likewise appear that a determination of the validity of the statute is necessary in order for the court to decide the issues between the parties?

Mr. GWYNNE. No.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Is not the gentleman making that distinction?

Mr. GWYNNE. No; I am not making that distinction. Of course, by a committee amendment, as I understand, the word "validity" will be taken out of the bill and "constitutionality" put in. The point I make is that in those cases in which the Attorney General appears in defense of some right of the Government, he has a right to appear, of course, just as you or I or any other litigant, but if he has only the academic interest of a man who is interested in what the Court is going to say about some law that some Congress has passed—and this is all the interest he has in this type of cases—I claim that under the Constitution he has no right to appear at all.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. In other words, if the decision is on the validity of the statute in question, it becomes more than an academic question; it becomes an issue in the case which is necessary to its determination.

Mr. GWYNNE. Very true.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. COX. Under those circumstances the question would be entirely moot so far as the Government is concerned.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is the point I make; yes.

Mr. COX. As it could have no possible interest which it would be called upon to defend; in other words, the question of the validity of an act might arise in litigation between parties, and if the Attorney General is permitted to intervene then, of course, we are obliged to assume he will necessarily dominate the litigation to the extent he participates, and if he should bring to bear upon the question any considerable influence, he would put the other party to the case at a great disadvantage.

Mr. GWYNNE. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he has stated my objection to this legislation, which is that the Attorney General in this type of case has nothing but a moot question on which the courts will not hear him.

Mr. COX. In other words, the Government has no possible interest to defend justifying its intervention.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is right.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. The gentleman speaks here of the United States "intervening." The language of the bill is not such. The language of the bill, at page 2, lines 15 to 18, gives the Attorney General the same right of review of such decision "as if the United States were a party to the suit or proceeding." I apprehend there would be no difficulty about inducing the party to the litigation against whom a decision had been rendered to avail himself of the services of the Attorney General. What I am emphasizing is that this measure does not provide for the Attorney General or for the United States becoming a party to the case.

Mr. GWYNNE. From my reading of the bill I think it does provide for him to be a party.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Will the gentleman point out that language? Perhaps I have overlooked it.

Mr. GWYNNE. I refer the gentleman to the first paragraph of the bill. I gather from that language he can appear and offer evidence and do almost anything a litigant can do, including an appeal.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. But the gentleman's argument is based on the fact that the Attorney General or the United States actually becomes a party in the proceeding. Such is not the language of the bill.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is where I disagree with the gentleman.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. The Attorney General would not become an actual party any more than a friend of the court is a party.

Mr. GWYNNE. No; I cannot agree with the gentleman about that.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GYWNNE. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Does the gentleman know of any case where the Attorney General has asked to be allowed to intervene as a friend of the court where such request has been refused?

Mr. GWYNNE. I have heard of no such case.

Mr. MOTT. I have not either.

Mr. GWYNNE. I have heard of no case where any interested party was denied the right to appear and argue questions of law.

Mr. MOTT. As a matter of fact, where any officer asks to intervene in an important case as a friend of the court, whether he is the Attorney General of anyone else, the court is usually glad to allow him to intervene.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is true.

Mr. MOTT. If I may ask the gentleman a further question, does the gentleman conceive it is any of the proper business of the Attorney General, as an agent or a member of the executive department of the Government, how a Federal court may rule as to the constitutionality of a law?

Mr. GWYNNE. Not the slightest. The Attorney General is simply the attorney for the executive branch of the Government. He has no more interest in the legislation than I have or the gentleman, as a Member of the Congress.

Mr. MOTT. I concur in the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Under the terms of this bill the Attorney General is confined to a presentation of facts and law relating only to the constitutional question which has been raised.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is true.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman stated that the Attorney General would have no interest, or that the United States would have no interest. Does not the gentleman understand that the purpose of this bill is to give them an interest?

Mr. GWYNNE. That is true. I agree with the gentleman that that is the purpose of the bill, but the answer is the Constitution does not allow Congress to give the Attorney General that interest.

Mr. COX. In other words, subject their right to litigate to the right of the Attorney General to intervene?

Mr. GWYNNE. That is right.

On March 23, 1792, the Congress passed the first Invalid Pension Act, and required of the courts certain nonjudicial duties in determining who was eligible for a pension. Many of the lower Federal courts raised the question as to their authority to perform these acts. In Hayburn's case (2 Dallas, 408), the Attorney General Randolph appeared in the Supreme Court asking for a writ of mandamus against a circuit court in Pennsylvania, commanding the said court to proceed in a certain pension of William Hayburn, who had appealed to be put on the pension list as an invalid pensioner. The Attorney General made the motion ex-officio without an application from any particular person but with a view to procure the execution of an act of Congress particularly interesting to a meritorious and unfortunate class of citizens. The Court held that the Attorney General had no right to appear in such cases merely by virtue of his office.

Suppose the Congress should pass a law in some way interfering with the rights of religious worship guaranteed in the first amendment, not, however, putting upon the Attorney General any duty of enforcement. Such a law might be a matter of great concern to many citizens, to certain religious organizations, and even to the Attorney General. However, the Attorney General could not bring a suit in court simply for the purpose of learning the view of the court in the matter. The question of constitutionality could only be raised by someone whose rights were directly invaded. Their academic interest gives no one a standing in the court. In this respect the Federal Government is exactly on the same basis as every other litigant. Its representative, the Attorney General, is on the same basis as every other lawyer. If the Attorney General has no standing in court to try what is to him purely a moot question, how can he acquire any such right by hitching himself onto someone else's lawsuit? It is an attempt to do indirectly what he cannot do directly.

Now, note how far this bill wanders from ordinary judicial process. Whenever, in private litigation, the constitutionality of a statute is drawn in question, the trial court is required to certify that fact to the Attorney General. Whether or not that is putting a nonjudicial duty upon the court I will not here stop to inquire. He must then give the Attorney General the right to appear and present argument on the constitutionality of the statute. Against that part of the bill there should be no complaint. In fact, the Attorney General now does that as amicus curiae. This bill virtually gives the Attorney General the right to intervene and introduce evidence. It is an attempt to make him a party to a lawsuit where, by well-established rules of jurisprudence, he has no right to intervene. If we can allow him to do so, then Congress may give a right of intervention to any citizen, to any case in which he has an academic interest. That such a person has no standing to maintain such a suit is declared in Fairchild v. Hughes (258 U. S. 126).

This bill further contains provisions allowing an appeal by the Attorney General, even giving him greater rights in this respect than the actual litigants.

From what is the Attorney General going to appeal? Here is a case between A and B involving the constitutionality of a statute. A judgment is rendered against one of them. There can be no judgment against the Government, because, admittedly, the Attorney General is not appearing to protect any right of the Government. Otherwise, he would be a party in the ordinary sense. From what, then, does the Attorney General appeal? Upon what theory can he carry on the litigation in the appellate courts when the real parties at interest have decided to accept the judgment or decree of the trial court?

In United States v. Evans (213 U. S. 297) the Supreme Court considered the constitutionality of a statute for the District of Columbia giving the Government a right of appeal upon a verdict of not guilty. The appeal was for the purpose of establishing the law, so that the Government would be advised as to the future. The Supreme Court held that the appeal presented only a moot question and declined to consider it. If the Government cannot appeal to settle a moot question in a suit in which it is actually a party, how can it do so in a case in which, from the very beginning, it has nothing but a moot interest?

Furthermore, the law would seriously handicap litigants. This is the way it would operate: John Smith brings a suit against a railway in his State. The case is removed to the Federal district court. At the trial the railway company raises the question of constitutionality. And, bear in mind, the question of constitutionality can easily be raised at the trial, or still more easily when the issues are finally made up just prior to the trial. If the court so decides, the Attorney General must be given an opportunity to appear. This would necessitate a continuance. I dare say that, out of an abundance of caution, the trial court would certify most constitutional questions; out of an abundance of caution the Attorney General would appear in most such cases; out of further abundance of caution, his representative would introduce evidence so that the question of constitutionality might be presented favorably to his view. Suppose the question involved were that of interstate commerce, as under the N. R. A. Think of the record that might be made by the Attorney General.

In any event, there is bound to be delay. How easy for the railroad company, for example, to raise a constitutional question for the very purpose of delay. On the other hand, the litigant, without means to finance a protracted lawsuit, might hesitate to raise a constitutional question because of this certain delay. Furthermore, suppose the question raised is one upon which the Government does not desire an immediate decision. You remember it was said in the N. R. A. case that the Federal Government displayed no great haste in getting before the Supreme Court.

Could not this law be amended to give more consideration to the rights of litigants and less to the convenience of the Attorney General? I would prefer a law giving the Attorney General the right to appear only in appellate courts. If, however, it is deemed desirable to allow the Attorney General to appear in the trial courts, some amendments should be added to this bill. Indiscriminate introduction of evidence by the Attorney General in many cases might prejudice the rights of the real parties. In my judgment, the Attorney General should be allowed to introduce testimony only with the consent of the trial court. This would probably result in a sufficient record for all purposes through the cooperation of the Attorney General, the parties, and the court. Furthermore, the record having been made under the supervision of the court, there would be less danger of reversal on account of prejudice to any of the real litigants. The bill should further provide that not more than one continuance should be granted to the Attorney General. It should be further provided that all appeals involving constitutional questions should be direct to the Supreme Court and should have precedence over other appeals.

Mr. COX. In other words, the parties to the case might get a determination entirely satisfactory to them; and with the Attorney General intervening, he could, in effect, take it away from them and bring it to the Supreme Court for review.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is true.

Mr. RAMSAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. RAMSAY. Is it the gentleman's contention that the Constitution prohibits the Congress from passing any rules regulating the pleading and practice of the inferior and Federal courts?

Mr. GWYNNE. No. My contention is simply this: Under the Constitution, the judicial power is limited to cases and controversies; and the Attorney General has no case or controversy. That is the point I make, and we cannot give him one.

Mr. COX. Is not that the rule that is not only practiced by the Supreme Court but by practically all of the courts of the various jurisdictions?

Mr. GWYNNE. That is true.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. Does not this run contrary to the very principles of our Government, namely, the three divisions, administrative, judicial, and legislative? And in that connection, does not this encourage Congress to enact measures that are not constitutional? In other words, we are inviting another department to come in here and make constitutional the things which we do, and we will do them more carelessly if this is enacted?

Mr. GWYNNE. I favor the general theory back of this bill. I think it would be possible to pass some kind of law embodying the good features set out in this bill. My fear is that this bill will be held unconstitutional, particularly that part of the bill that provides that the Attorney General may appeal. For instance, here is the case of the United States against Evans, where the Congress provided that in the District of Columbia, if a defendant were acquitted in a criminal case, the Government could appeal for the purpose of getting the law settled. The Supreme Court held that law unconstitutional. They said the Government has nothing in this appeal but a moot interest. I submit that if in that kind of a case they say we cannot appeal, we cannot appeal in a case in which from the very start we had nothing but a moot interest. That is the point.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill which to my mind should be disposed of on its merits and not just because it has been brought in here by a great committee of this House. To my mind, I do not believe that any step has been taken by the Congress which is more apt to bring into disrepute the constitutional and legal system of this country than this particular bill. It provides that the Attorney General shall be advised by any court which has jurisdiction of a suit or proceeding, if in the opinion of that court a substantial ground exists for questioning the constitutionality of any statute of the United States. If that situation is found, the Attorney General is given an opportunity to intervene in the suit and have the same rights as a party, to the extent necessary for the proper presentation of the facts and the law relating to the constitutionality of the statute.

Now what happens? The Congress might perhaps pass a law which would infringe upon the constitutional rights of a poor man. It might provide that property shall be taken without due compensation. It may destroy his right to work. It may, by some other provision, impose such restrictions upon him that he will be unable to pursue his ordinary livelihood. What happens? He attempts to protect his rights by a suit in the United States district court. He comes into court, and he has a good case, but he does not have very much money, not enough so that he can pay for the papers, the briefs, the printing bills, and pay a high-priced lawyer to go into court and follow that case all the way through. The Attorney General is advised of the status of the case and he comes into the case and by means of interminable appeals and by means of bringing to bear the power and strength of the Government of the United States, he so bears down on that poor man that he leaves him absolutely stranded and absolutely helpless.

Frankly I do not want my name to be a party to voting for such a bill. We can all remember when poor men, not so very long ago, were oppressed by the Government of the United States. There are not many of us who cannot remember the Schechter case, how that poor man was played horse with, his business ruined, and he was carted all over the lot before he could get a determination in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. If this law had been in effect at that time the Schechter case would have been appealed directly, and the man would have been saved from bankruptcy. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. No; he would not. He would not, because that provision does not apply to that kind of a case. The provision to which the gentleman refers at the bottom of page 2 does not apply to that kind of a case, because the Government was a party to that case, and this bill only applies to suits between private parties. I was using that case, not as an illustration of how this appeal would work, but as an illustration of how the Attorney General and the Government of the United States, with the power of the Government behind it, could play horse with a private individual and ruin him. That is what I was using it for. That provision at the bottom of page 2 only applies to a case where it is litigation between private parties and the Government is not a party.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we are going far afield when we come to think of passing this kind of bill and placing that almost insuperable burden upon the poor man who might want to have his case determined in court. I can see no advantage to it except the glorification of bureaucracy and the lowering of the level at which the individual in this country must stand.

I hope that this House will not pass this kind of bill abridging and interfering with the rights of the ordinary man in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I think we are all interested in the effort on the part of the gentleman from Michigan to defend the dilatory action of the Attorney General and the Department of Justice in connection with the famous Schechter case. It is generally admitted and acknowledged on all sides that in connection with the famous N. R. A. the Department of Justice waited until it could secure a case which would best suit its purposes in its efforts to establish the constitutionality of the N. R. A.; and it seems hardly fitting for the gentleman from Michigan to question the declarations made by the gentleman from New York, which were purely for the purpose of analogy to show the possible lengths to which legislation of this kind can go in the hands of an all-powerful administration. I think all of us realize that the present tendencies of government—and I am not applying this directly to our own Government but government generally—the general tendency of government today is to overreach, to go into, as far as it can, the field of the individual's life and liberty, and to explore into those activities that heretofore have been looked upon as sacred to the individual. In this legislation that is before us today it seems to me that it is only another step on the part of governmental agencies to concern themselves with those matters which are purely the affairs of the individual.

No one can deny here that this bill definitely gives to one party in a litigious matter a distinct advantage. Two litigants appear before the bar of justice, the one claiming that an act is constitutional and the other questioning the constitutionality of the act. This legislation brings in back of one of the parties litigant the power of the Department of Justice and the Attorney General with all of the ability, experience, and power of that Department, and leaves the other litigant absolutely helpless to effectively combat the combined efforts of his opponent and the Government. If you are going to the point of providing for this intervention by the Attorney General, then why should we not go a step further and provide that the other party to that suit should have counsel provided for him at the expense of the Federal Government? If you are going to bring the prestige and power of the entire Department of Justice behind one litigant in order to establish constitutionality and to maintain constitutionality, then you should bring to the other man a lawyer, or a battery of lawyers, paid for by the Government to protect his position with the same fervor, and the same enthusiasm, and the same ability, as you give to his opponent to maintain the constitutionality of this particular act.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. It seems to me that the question of constitutionality is not one that is of interest solely to the parties in litigation.

Mr. DITTER. The gentleman will agree with me that it distinctly affects the individual citizen.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Of course it does, and the question is to get it determined correctly, because it affects not only the litigants in the particular case, but it affects many others. It ought to be decided right in the public interest.

Mr. DITTER. Does the gentleman, by his statement, infer that the constitutional questions that have been raised and decided in the past, particularly within our own experiences, have been incorrectly decided?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. In many instances, yes; and I may say that Justices of the Supreme Court in the history of our country have said that the character, the mentality, the legal learning of gentlemen representing litigants has had its effect in determining the question of constitutionality; and, oftentimes, even our courts, our highest Court, calls in "a friend of the court" in order that the constitutional question may be the more carefully considered.

Mr. DITTER. I did not yield to the gentleman for a speech. Then, I think the gentleman will probably be in accord with me that the Government should provide to the other litigant the same type of counsel as the Government has at its command to establish the constitutionality of the act. That would be justice.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I think that the gentleman, to develop that point, would have to assume that the Government had interest in the litigation. The Government's concern is a public interest; that is, the interest of having the question of constitutionality determined correctly.

Mr. DITTER. That is exactly the point, Mr. Chairman, that I wanted the gentleman to raise, for it certainly seems to me that the Attorney General being a part of the executive department of the Government would be most anxious to establish the constitutionality of the act, and under no circumstance would he be inclined to question the constitutionality of the act.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I could not help but yield to my friend from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Assuming that Congress passes a bill and that the Attorney General advises the President that the act is unconstitutional, whereupon the President vetoes the act and Congress passes the act over the veto of the President and makes it a law. Then in a court the question of the constitutionality of the act arises and the Attorney General intervenes.

Will he sustain the constitutionality and give it as his written opinion that the law is unconstitutional?

Mr. DITTER. I appreciate the contribution my distinguished friend from New York has brought to the case.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. The mere fact that the Attorney General was wrong in the first place is no reason why the litigant, having had his rights determined in the lower court, should have to go all the way to the Supreme Court, brought there by the Attorney General and the administrative end of this Government.

Mr. DITTER. May I say in perfect candor to the Members of the House, of course the observations I am presently making are very naturally colored to some extent by the experiences that have been ours during the last 4 years, especially in the light of the present Attorney General's position in desiring to continue the constitutionality or establish the constitutionality of many of those acts that have been previously declared unconstitutional. The pertinence of an inquiry directed by my distinguished friend the gentleman from Georgia during colloquy this afternoon presents itself to me, when he asked with respect to the ability of the present Attorney General; but whether there is ability or not, I am convinced that he would have but one motive and that is to drive through to constitutionality the enactments of the present administration.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. It may be of interest to the gentleman to know when the matter was presented to us in the Judiciary Committee, we were told in many cases where there was a constitutional question of great public interest, the question was not presented properly from the constitutional side; that, on the contrary, these arguments were presented by lawyers of inferior talent. One purpose of this act is to see to it that when the constitutional question is defended there shall be somebody of consequence, ability, ingenuity, and resourcefulness to present the Government's side. Does not the gentleman think it would be rather unfair to leave constitutional questions to be presented by persons who may be inferior in the presentation of such questions?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, from what the gentleman says, I take it he feels that the Government has a side it should take in litigation between private individuals?

Mr. CELLER. Only where there is a constitutional question involved of real and substantial importance.

Mr. DITTER. It seems to me that is the very point I am opposed to. With respect to litigation as between private individuals the Government has no part.

Mr. CELLER. If it were limited to private interests, I would say "yes", but there is something more involved. The Government's point of view is involved. The constitutionality of the question is involved for you and me and the rest of the people of the land. Our interests are involved and our interests are at stake.

Mr. DITTER. The gentleman admits by his statement it is making the Government a party to a private lawsuit.

Mr. CELLER. That is getting into the Muskrat case.

Mr. DITTER. Is that not the position the gentleman is contending for?

Mr. CELLER. No. Nowhere in this bill does the gentleman find words making the Government an actual party.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman distinguish for me between this present program and an ordinary interpleader proceeding? Is not this an interpleader proceeding on the part of the Government?

Mr. CELLER. There is an analogy, but the Government does not interplead as a party at all.

Mr. DITTER. It is a party.

Mr. CELLER. It is not a party in interest in the case.

Mr. DITTER. But the gentleman admitted a moment ago that the Government should be made a party in interest.

Mr. CELLER. I said the Government should have the right to come in and protect what it believes to be the constitutionality of the question. But that does not make the Government a party.

Mr. DITTER. Does the gentleman mean by that that the Government has a duty placed upon it through the Attorney General to defend the constitutionality of all legislation?

Mr. CELLER. No; it is not a duty. I would say the Attorney General under this act would be doing little more than he has the right to do now. He may come in and defend the constitutionality of a statute as amicus curiae. I do not think there would be a judge anywhere who would deny the right of the Attorney General to come in and argue the constitutionality of a particular statute, regardless of the fact that the controversy might be between private litigants.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield to the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. To make a suggestion and get the gentleman's judgment, in many jurisdictions where the court may pass on the constitutionality of the act of a legislative body, they have the right to ask the court in the first instance as to whether or not the law is constitutional. This is an effort to do the next best thing we can. There is at present a great deal of confusion in this country by reason of the long delays in the proper determination of constitutional questions.

Mr. DITTER. May I interrupt the gentleman there to say that I want under no circumstance any misunderstanding. I am for expedition, and were I convinced that litigation would be disposed of more speedily and satisfactorily and without harmful attendant conditions, then I certainly would not be opposed to it; but there has not been any effort at expedition so far as appellate work is concerned thus far. This will not bring about expedition. The Attorney General may or may not intervene. He may be dilatory if he sees fit, or he may be expeditious if he sees fit. It is a matter entirely within his own discretion.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I appreciate the gentleman does recognize the public interest that is involved in the expeditious determination of questions involving constitutionality. This is the best we can do.

Mr. DITTER. May I say to the gentleman right there that no matter how great the value of expedition may be, it seems to me that expedition sinks into insignificance when the probable rights of party litigants under our present constitutional scheme may be jeopardized in the future by hasty legislation of this character.

In my opinion, this is simply an effort to protect the enactments of the Congress and to disregard the rights of the citizens. Our first duty is to be jealous of the rights of the people and not to be concerned chiefly about the maintenance of the bills which we pass. If we concern ourselves more seriously during the consideration of legislation about its constitutionality instead of passing bills irrespective of any question of constitutionality private litigants will be able to take care of their own interests in the courts.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE].

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of this legislation. I have introduced H. R. 4899, which in effect carries out the same purposes as does this legislation. I think the record made during the past few years certainly justifies this kind and character of legislation. It is our duty to expedite in every way possible the determination of the constitutionality of acts under the order of things as they now exist. I am one of many Members of this body who has never been able to agree that the Supreme Court has ever been given the right to declare acts of Congress invalid. I believe that Madison's notes of the Constitutional Convention clearly show this to be true; but this is a matter to be determined later.

It seems to me this legislation, as the chairman has just indicated, is the best plan which has been offered. It is easy to criticize, but it would be hard to suggest a better remedy. Certainly this is the best remedy which has been brought before the House thus far to expedite the testing of the constitutionality of acts of Congress. As Members of Congress we have a very great interest in seeing our acts upheld, and this legislation will bring this about.

I know and you know that during recent years—yes; I will say recent months—measures have been brought before the Supreme Court in which the validity of acts of Congress has not been as well presented as it should be, and the acts have thus been declared invalid. This bill will place all the force of the legal department of the Government behind the acts of Congress. Certainly every Member of this body ought to want to see the measures we enact into law, if possible, upheld as being valid. That is what this legislation does.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. COX. Is it contemplated by this proposed legislation the Attorney General shall intervene in every instance where the constitutionality of acts is questioned, or is the Attorney General vested with discretion, leaving him to intervene where he thinks the public interest is such as to justify such intervention?

Mr. McFARLANE. I think that is a matter which is left with the discretion of the Attorney General. However, the gentleman can read the bill for himself. I think that depends upon the questions as they arise. Certainly, as Members of Congress, we ought to be interested to the extent of seeing that every possible force is brought into effect to uphold the validity of our own acts. For this reason I cannot see how any Member can vote against this legislation.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. The bill itself provides the court will not notify the Attorney General unless and until a substantial constitutional question has been raised.

Mr. McFARLANE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HEALEY. Thereupon, the Attorney General is afforded an opportunity to appear and to argue for the constitutionality of the law.

Mr. McFARLANE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman has made the challenge that we suggest a better remedy.

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes.

Mr. CHURCH. May I suggest a better remedy, far better than the bill now under consideration, is that the Congress stop passing legislation of doubtful constitutionality. This is my answer to the gentleman's challenge.

Mr. McFARLANE. Well, tweedledee and tweedledum, that is my answer to the remedy the gentleman suggests. I believe Members of Congress under the direction and with the cooperation of our legislative counsel have just as much sense as those who pass upon these laws.

Mr. CHURCH. Laws of doubtful constitutionality are the ones I am questioning at this time. There is too much passing of laws of doubtful constitutionality.

Mr. McFARLANE. I understand the question the gentleman is raising, but I do not think he has brought forth any remedy which will correct that. I am not willing as a Member of Congress to admit we have not given every consideration to the measures we have enacted into law. The fact we have put through a program which has benefited the country and has raised us out of the depths and put us well on the road to prosperity, although we have had a large number of these acts nullified, has not convinced me, and I am sure it has not convinced a large majority of the people of this country, that such acts were not valid, even though they have been declared unconstitutional by a majority of the Supreme Court.

Mr. CHURCH. Does the gentleman think that justifies the Attorney General in bringing the poor defendant all the way from the lower court to the Supreme Court to get the same kind of a decision?

Mr. McFARLANE. If I had more time, I would be pleased to answer the gentleman's question.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I am very much impressed with one idea with reference to this discussion which was brought out in the address made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER]. I am afraid this bill is going to open up an avenue by which the Government of the United States may inject itself into all private litigation which involves constitutional questions. I cannot see why that will not be true.

Answering the question brought out by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] when he asked whether or not the Government would be a party if the Attorney General appeared in a case between private individuals, regardless of how the case was decided and whether the parties were satisfied or not, I will say that the test is that if the Attorney General wants to take the case up to the Supreme Court he can do so. If that is so, he is surely a very important party, is he not? If the Attorney General can carry on an appeal when both parties to the litigation are ready to quit, when they are ready to settle and adjust their differences, he can thus take the place of both plaintiff and defendant. He can control the whole case from then on to its final conclusion.

When we first started the discussion of this bill I was inclined to favor it, but I am afraid of this proposition. Why should the Attorney General be protected in this way? Why should the judges of our courts be compelled to be a watching post for the Attorney General? The litigation has been brought by a private individual. When he brings the case he does not turn his interests over to the judge. He simply asks the judge to preside over his trial. The judge is not bound to notify either of the counsel of the interested parties. Why should he be compelled to notify a person not a party and why not at least substitute the word "may" for the word "shall"; then it would read:

The judge may notify the Attorney General.

Why should he be brought into the case and made practically a compulsory party in litigation between private individuals? If a real question of constitutionality is involved, the Attorney General can come into the case at any time. Any judge sitting anywhere will, of course, permit the Attorney General to intervene if the Attorney General comes before the court and represents to the court that an important constitutional question is involved.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we have gone far afield in our discussion of this matter. There has been a great effort on the part of some here today to use the argument about increasing the number of agencies and administrations during the last 4 years, and to bring a tinge of politics, so to speak, into the argument, and then to start arguing whether or not we favor the legislation which has been enacted during the last 4 years. That is all beside the question. Possibly I favor as little of it as any man on the floor, but this has nothing to do with the legislation before us, and I hope I am big enough and broad enough and fair enough, as a legislator, to look at proposed legislation of this merit without any personal bias, especially where it affects the courts, and surely should not in any sense be a political question.

In a sense this bill is a measure for the protection of laws passed by the Congress. The purpose of this bill is to guarantee a competent presentation to the Court of the constitutionality of laws passed by the Congress. The Constitution places this duty upon the Congress to pass only such laws as the Congress believes to be constitutional. We must assume that the Congress never disregards this constitutional mandate. The Congress has taken an oath not to do otherwise. When the Congress has thus conscientiously passed a law, it seems to me that the Congress has a perfect right, as well as a duty, to see to it that the Congress' constitutional right to pass the law is properly presented to the Court; that is, of course, if the constitutionality is questioned.

We must not lose sight of the fact that the Congress has full authority to pass legislation even over the President's veto. When a law is enacted by the Congress, it then becomes the duty of the Executive to execute the law. The executive branch of the Government, through the Attorney General, is presumed to see to it that the laws on our statute books are carried out. It is the duty of the Supreme Court to determine whether or not the Congress exceeded its constitutional authority in enacting law. It seems to me that the Congress has full authority to make provision for the protection of its laws before the courts when such laws are questioned by litigants. Where the constitutionality is questioned, more than the rights of individual litigants in the suit are involved. The rights of all of the people who might be affected by the laws are involved, and in these days time is of the essence in many of these important cases coming before the Supreme Court.

This bill makes it possible that whenever a constitutional question is raised in a Federal court for the Attorney General to intercede at once, see to it that the validity of the statute is properly presented to the court, and then to appeal directly to the highest tribunal when that course seems advisable to sustain the law. Personally, I favor a law permitting a direct appeal to the Supreme Court in every case where a substantial constitutional question as to the validity of the law is raised. Whether or not the question is substantial and not frivolous must be determined by the Court. In this way much delay and expense will be eliminated. So-called court justice is not justice at all if its benefits can only be bestowed upon the citizen who has sufficient financial resources, as well as endurance, to travel the gamut of all the courts from his home town in the interior to the Supreme Court in Washington.

This statute has two primary purposes. First, to guarantee that where important constitutional questions are involved before the courts, there is a proper presentation on the part of the Government in an effort to sustain that which the Congress determined was a constitutional law. Second, to expedite the question and get a speedy determination with the minimum cost and inconvenience not only to the litigant involved but also to all of the people who are expected to be the beneficiaries of the law enacted by their representative, the Congress.

We must have some faith in our courts, and whenever the court believes a substantial, constitutional question has been raised, the court must or shall notify—and I am perfectly willing to make it "may", because I am willing to trust the courts—the Attorney General of the United States that a constitutional question of vast importance, not only to private litigants but to all the people, is involved, then the Attorney General—the branch of the Government whose duty it is to enforce the law—is asked to come in and defend the law as to its constitutionality.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; although I have only a moment.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman explain whether, under the terms of the bill, the Attorney General on intervening in a pending cause, would be compelled to defend the constitutionality of the act that had been attacked against his conviction that it is unconstitutional? In other words, does the bill compel him, where he intervenes, to defend the constitutionality of the act?

Mr. MICHENER. No; there is no such compulsion whatever. The Attorney General is notified and then he will use his discretion in the matter. However, my personal opinion is that when the Congress has exercised its constitutional duty and has enacted a law, under its oath, that it believes to be constitutional, it is almost the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to appear in any such a case when any court of the land suggests that he appear, and present all the arguments that he has at his command to sustain the Congress in the enactment of a law which the Congress believes constitutional.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. Does this bill provide that the constitutionality of such a law must be raised by the pleadings in the case?

Mr. MICHENER. No; but whenever it appears to the Court that there is an important constitutional question involved the Attorney General must be notified.

Someone suggested here today that this is a part of the President's program. As I said when the bill was up on the floor once before, this bill was not born in the manger at the White House——

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. COX. How would the court know of its duty to inform the Attorney General unless the question of its constitutionality was raised by the pleadings in the case?

Mr. MICHENER. If the judge on his own volition felt that an important constitutional question was involved, he could notify the Attorney General. This bill does not make it possible for the rich corporations referred to to wear out the poor litigant; exactly the opposite is true. The more courts through which a litigant must pass the more expensive it is for him. The people have a right to have the laws passed by Congress protected within the Constitution. Every time a law is attacked a public interest greater than the interest of the individual attaches. The maintenance of the statutes is a public question. This bill will aid the courts, but will not interfere with the courts. It will expedite procedure in the courts to the end that the poor litigant can have his day in court, and the laws will have the protection to which they are entitled. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to take so much time, but here is the practical situation we confront in this country. All over this country we hear a demand to deny the Supreme Court the right to pass on constitutional questions. That demand is augmented by two or three things which we can do something about; first, the delay, and second, the fact that courts pass on constitutional questions and hold laws unconstitutional sometimes when they have not been properly represented. It is of the highest public importance that the Supreme Court, before it holds an act of this Congress unconstitutional, should have all the assistance which legal knowledge can give to it. [Applause.] There ought to be just as little delay between the enactments of Congress and the determination by the Supreme Court as can be arranged. If that is not good, practical common sense, then I do not understand anything about the situation.

All over this country there is this demand to take away from the Supreme Court the right to pass upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress. Now, we want to try this thing which we can do by legislation before we try that thing by amending the Constitution, and see if it will not be possible to take a middle ground; see if it will not be possible for the Supreme Court to back out of the field where governmental policy is fixed; if it would not be possible for proper presentation to aid the Supreme Court to hold a larger percentage of the acts of Congress constitutional; if it would not be possible for the Congress more and more to legislate consciously under its obligations to stay within its constitutional limitations.

We have a lot of things to straighten out in this country, and we believe this will help. We admit it is experimental in a sense. We do not claim to have a perfect bill. We do not know what will happen, but it seems to the members of the committee the proper thing to do, to afford the Court as quick an opportunity to get to these acts as possible. In many jurisdictions we submit such questions to the Supreme Court in the first instance. It is ridiculous that the final determination as to the constitutionality of an act of Congress be held in abeyance for 2 or 3 years and nobody knows whether or not it is constitutional. We have tried to short circuit that. It is absolutely ridiculous that the defense of the constitutionality of things you and I do here under our duty as national legislators should be left entirely to some little 2-by-4 lawyer in a private litigation, with nobody there to speak in behalf of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Some time ago the distinguished gentleman appeared before the Supreme Court, in addition to the Attorney General, and argued a case before it. We were all very proud of him and we believe the opinion of the Supreme Court was founded on his argument; but this is what bothers me: How does the gentleman reconcile this, that an appointee of the executive department represents the legislative department in a controversy in the courts, as to whether or not the legislation we pass should be passed?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I suggest to the gentleman that that is his job. He appears day after day in the Supreme Court in matters in which this Government is a party, to defend the constitutionality of the acts of Congress.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I should like to direct the gentleman's attention to a situation such as this: The practice in our United States courts permits, of course, the amendment of or the filing of new pleadings, in the discretion of the court, even during the trial of the case and it frequently happens on the first day when a case is assigned for actual trial, just as a plea to an indictment is drawn and a demurrer is filed, that the pleadings in a civil action are also changed. This procedure is, of course, analogous to the rules of procedure in most of our State courts. With that situation admitted, under this bill, is it the opinion of the distinguished chairman of the committee that in the conduct of a case, at any stage of the trial, when interrupted with the approval of the court or the injection of new pleadings, and for the first time a constitutional question would be injected, then, all further proceedings, even though the case might be before a jury, would be suspended pending the certification of the fact that a constitutional question was involved, to the Attorney General and his appearance subsequently entered in the case? I do not know whether I have made myself entirely clear, but I am sure the gentleman understands without a greater length picture, the very obvious situation which I am sure will arise, and I would appreciate any statement he might make as to how this bill would operate in such cases.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. All such questions would be settled by the court under its discretion within the general applicable rules governing procedure. The Attorney General now represents us in those cases where the Government is a party. He is the chief law officer of the Nation. Will you tell me that the chief law officer of the Nation ought not be permitted to defend an act of the great legislative branch of the Nation?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. Why is not the complete answer to the gentleman that we should refer the actions of this Congress to the Supreme Court when we finish? Is that not reducing it to the last degree?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That cannot be done. This is as near as we can do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. All time has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) whenever in any court of the United States in any suit or proceeding to which the United States or any agency thereof or any officer or employee thereof, as such officer or employee, is not a party, the validity of any statute of the United States is drawn in question, the court having jurisdiction of the suit or proceeding shall certify such fact to the Attorney General if the court is of opinion that a substantial ground exists for questioning the validity of the statute. The court shall afford an opportunity for presentation of evidence (if evidence is otherwise receivable in such suit or proceeding) and argument on behalf of the United States by the Attorney General or counsel designated by him. In the suit or proceeding the United States shall, subject to the applicable provisions of law, have the same rights as a party to the extent necessary for a proper presentation of the facts and law relating to the validity of the statute.

(b) In any suit or proceeding in which the decision of a court of the United States is against the validity of any statute of the United States, the United States, by the Attorney General or counsel designated by him, shall have the same right of review of such decision in the proper appellate court, and subject to the same provisions of law relating to appellate jurisdiction, as if the United States were a party to the suit or proceeding. Such review may be had whether or not appearance and argument on behalf of the United States in a lower court has been made under the provisions of subsection (a).

(c) The Attorney General is authorized and directed, by himself or by counsel designated by him, to appear and argue in cases described in subsection (a) and to invoke appellate jurisdiction in cases described in subsection (b).

(d) As used in this section, the term "court of the United States" means the courts of record of Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico, the Customs Court, the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, the Court of Claims, the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, any district court of the United States, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, any circuit court of appeals, and the Supreme Court.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "validity" and insert "constitutionality."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 2, strike out "validity" and insert "constitutionality."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 10, strike out "validity" and insert "constitutionality."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 12, strike out the word "validity" and insert "constitutionality."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 21, after the period, insert "In such cases the Attorney General may also in his discretion appeal directly to the Supreme Court, either from a final or interlocutory judgment, decree, or order, or from an intermediate order, and appeals so taken shall have precedence over other cases in the Supreme Court."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota to the committee amendment: On page 3, line 1, strike out the word "other", and in line 2 strike out the period and insert "in which a substantial question of constitutionality has not been drawn."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the amendment to the committee amendment explained.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The purpose of the amendment is to correct the defect indicated by my question during the debate. As I then pointed out, the language of the original bill would mean that appeals taken by the Attorney General would not only take precedence over every other ordinary case but over appeals on constitutional questions which had come up in the regular order. My amendment merely provides that these appeals so taken shall take precedence over cases which do not involve the question of constitutionality, but shall not take precedence over those cases which do involve constitutional questions and which come up in the regular order.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 3, line 3, strike out the words "and directed."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENKINS of Ohio: Page 1, line 9, strike out the word "shall" and insert in lieu thereof the word "may."

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I lodge an objection to that amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, my reason for offering this amendment is that, as I said a while ago, it appears to me that there is no question but that this bill if it is enacted might open the door to the entrance of a Government bureau in many private lawsuits that might be brought in any United States court. I am not ready to cast my vote to permit such to occur. Litigation between private parties should be no concern of the Government if it is not legally interested. I am ready to vote for this kind of proposition, that if a district judge sitting in the district court, or a circuit court of appeals judge sitting anywhere, feels that in a case before him a substantial constitutional question is involved, and that it is a major proposition transcending all other propositions, he should request the Attorney General to intervene.

But let us take the case of two individuals litigating. One feels that his rights are being invaded by the other. They get into court. That is a private right that is just as dear to a man as his very life. When he brings a lawsuit he selects a court as the forum for deciding his case. He brings it where the law says he must bring it. There are two lawyers in the case. Let us say that I am on one side and that the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], who is much interested in this legislation, is on the other side. We are litigating our case, and we know each other. We have been lawyers opposing each other many times. We know what we want to do. We want our case tried to a conclusion. But if either one of us should bring out anything that would appear to be a constitutional question, the judge is bound under this bill to report it to the Attorney General. Then the Attorney General comes into that case and he takes it away from us. We may not want that case to go off on a constitutional question. We want it to go off on its merits. The constitutional question may be so small and the merits so transcendental that we do not want to be delayed with the question of constitutionality. We are the lawyers, we represent the people who brought the lawsuit, and we ought not to be forced to go out of that court in any way except the way we want to go out. We should have the control of the method of procedure. Suppose I represent the defendant, and I know I can win and my client does not want to rely upon a defense of unconstitutionality. I should be permitted to conduct my client's defense as he wishes it conducted.

I say to you that if you will change this word "shall" to "may", I am willing to depend on the judge. I have the highest regard for the judges of this country. I think the judge would be moved by consideration of justice to all parties concerned. If the judge thinks that the case involves a constitutional question of great importance, then I think it ought to be his duty to thrash out that constitutional question, but he ought to have the right to say whether or not it is important. He should not be bound to submit it to the Attorney General regardless of whether its consequences to the lawsuit in question may be small and its consequences to some other cases that might come up are great.

Mr. HEALEY. He has that right now.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. He has that right under the bill. The bill says if the court is of opinion that a substantial ground exists, the court shall notify the Attorney General.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I want that word "shall" changed to "may." Then the judge will have a chance to use his discretion. He will have the option of submitting or not submitting, even if there is a constitutional question which might be an important question to the country. Why should the Attorney General come into my case if the constitutional question is not a material one to me? Why should he not be required to go and start a law suit of his own? Of course, if the question is material to the decision of the case by the judge, then let the judge indicate as much and ask the Attorney General to intervene.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I call the gentleman's attention to the qualification that appears at the bottom of page 1 and the top of page 2, which states that if the court is of opinion that a substantial ground exists for questioning the constitutionality of the statute the court shall certify such fact to the Attorney General. That gives the court the option the gentleman asks by his amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; it is not optional; it is mandatory. The word "shall" is mandatory. The word "may" is optional. You cannot get an option out of the word "shall."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. But you can out of the words that I have quoted.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I know; but the question then will be whether or not it is a substantial question, and the court will be concerned with whether it is a "substantial question" and he will be afraid to make a mistake, and all questions will be "substantial questions" and the Attorney General will project himself into many cases where he has no business.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will vote down this proposed amendment.

The judge, under this bill, does not certify the question unless he thinks it is substantial. In such a situation we want the bill to provide that he shall certify to the Attorney General that there is pending in his court a constitutional question which he, the court, regards as substantial. There is discretion in the Attorney General, but we put the whole bill out of kilter if the judge considers a question substantial and the Attorney General is not given an opportunity by notice to appear.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Suppose the litigants are ready to dispose of their case by settlement. If there is a substantial constitutional question involved, the court shall refer it, regardless of whether the litigants want to settle or not.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; and that is what we want.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLER. There would not be a substantial constitutional question raised if the issues in the case were ready for settlement. When the merits of a case are settled, the case passes out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GWYNNE: Page 2, line 2, after the period, strike out the balance of the paragraph and insert the following: "The Attorney General, or counsel designated by him, shall be entitled to appear in said suit, or proceeding, on behalf of the United States and be heard on the constitutionality of said statute. With the consent of the Court, he shall also be entitled to present evidence bearing on said subject. Not more than one continuance shall be granted on motion of the Attorney General except with the consent of all parties. Subject to the above, and all other applicable provisions of law, the United States shall have the same rights as a party, to the extent necessary for a proper presentation of the facts and law relating to the constitutionality of the statute."

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, I suppose I should say it comes with rather poor grace from me to offer this amendment because I am frank to say, and I want you to know, I expect to vote against this bill because I believe it to be unconstitutional. However, the amendment is submitted in the hope that if the bill is passed with this amendment inserted therein it will be an improvement over the present bill.

Let us consider for a moment the practical situation here. Someone has asked if constitutional questions must be raised by pleading. Of course not under this law. It is true, I suppose, in 95 percent of the cases it will be so raised. However, we should bear in mind constitutional questions may be raised right at the time of trial and in a ruling on certain testimony. In my own district, for example, it is the practice to make up the issues a day before the case goes to trial.

Let us consider for a moment the following situation: I bring suit against a railroad company. The railroad company gets that case into the Federal court, and you may trust them to do that very thing. The case comes to trial and suddenly a constitutional question is raised. There is nothing for me, my client, and witnesses to do but go home. The matter then has to be certified to the Attorney General, involving a great deal of delay.

I object very much to any provision which allows the Attorney General to come into a court like a bull in a china shop and introduce evidence that he thinks is right and present his views on any constitutional features that may be raised in the case.

If this amendment is agreed to, here is the practical result. If the evidence could be introduced with the consent of the court, and by cooperation between the Attorney General and the attorneys representing the real litigants, a sufficient record would be made for everyone concerned. When the case is appealed the fact that the court had consented to this intervention and had heard in advance probably the testimony would be a strong reason for the appellate court refusing to reverse the case on the ground there had been some prejudice to some of the parties.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. Do I understand by any stretch of the imagination that the amendment which the gentleman offers will cure the unconstitutionality that he has alluded to?

Mr. GWYNNE. No.

Mr. CELLER. As set out in the Muskrat case?

Mr. GWYNNE. No.

Mr. CELLER. Under the bill as presently drafted the Attorney General, once he is in the case, would have the right to present evidence without asking the permission of the court. The gentleman's amendment would place the burden upon the Attorney General, in the event he wishes to present evidence, to ask permission of the court, and he could not present evidence unless the court granted that permission.

Mr. GWYNNE. The gentleman is correct, and that is the purpose of my amendment. He could not introduce any evidence at all unless the court granted him permission.

Mr. CELLER. Suppose there were a case in which there appeared to be collusion between private litigants—actually a manufactured case—in which a constitutional question has arisen. Does not the gentleman think it would be necessary for the Attorney General to introduce some sort of evidence without asking permission of the court? The court may refuse to grant him permission under the amendment which the gentleman has offered; then you would have this collusive case go on without the Attorney General, the Government of the United States, or the people of the country having any right or say in the litigation. It might be essential to present evidence in order to properly raise the constitutional feature.

Mr. GWYNNE. Does not the gentleman think, if there was collusion, the court might see it just as quickly as anyone else and allow the evidence to be introduced?

Mr. CELLER. I understand in Baltimore, in connection with the Wheeler-Rayburn Act, there was a case in which absolute collusion occurred.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is ill-advised, because if the Attorney General is to intervene in a case he should have the full and complete right to do so, and among those rights there should be the privilege of presenting evidence. If you do not present evidence properly, skillfully, and carefully, then your right to appeal may be a worthless right. It is an inane proposition. Therefore there might be a situation I adverted to before, involving a case in which there was collusion. There was a case recently brought to test the constitutionality of the Wheeler-Rayburn bill. There seemed to be collusion, and it was a very important case. If there were a repetition of such a case and the Attorney General sought to come in, under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa he would enter as a spectator only. He could not do much more than that. He might get up on his feet on occasion and make objections; he might make a motion; but on appeal it is quite essential to have a record in which you participated, one which you helped to prepare and which you helped formulate; and I think those who have practiced in appellate courts realize this; otherwise there is no need to appeal, because it would not do very much good. Unless we give full and complete right to the Attorney General, this bill may be torn into tatters and may be absolutely useless.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE. Does not the gentleman think it would be better in the long run and in 99 percent of the cases if we left the trial under the control of the judge and not under the control of the Attorney General?

Mr. CELLER. We do not take the control out of the Court.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The judge would control and would not permit evidence which was not admissible to be introduced.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is true; I agree with that.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Should not the party who has this responsibility be permitted to introduce evidence which, under the ordinary rules governing the introduction of testimony, is admissible?

Mr. GWYNNE. May I be permitted to answer that in the gentleman's time?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLER. May I suggest, Mr. Chairman, we had this same amendment before the committee and discussed it rather thoroughly. I call the attention of the Committee to lines 3 and 4 of page 2 of the pending bill, which limit the admission of evidence in a case considerably, because it is conceivable there are cases where a constitutional question is raised which should not be cluttered up by evidence. If you will notice the bill, the provision to which I have just referred limits the admission of evidence to those cases only where it is absolutely essential the record be made in order that the facts may be clearly presented, not only for a complete adjudication in the lower court, but also in the appellate court. If you are going to inject the Attorney General into the situation at all and give him any authority, then why not follow the provisions of the bill as drawn? Let him go in as a party, let him be bound by the rules which bind other parties, and let him have free sway to test the constitutional question. There is no use of saying to the Attorney General, "Go into court", and then tying his hands by restrictions which will prevent a full and free discussion and a full and free presentation of the question to the court, if we are to have the question finally determined.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 21, noes 82.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. SUMNERS of Texas: Following subsection (b), add a new subsection, as follows:

"(c) In any suit or proceeding in any court of the United States to which the United States or any agency thereof, or any officer or employee thereof, as such officer or employee, is a party, in which the decision is against the constitutionality of any statute of the United States, the United States may, in its discretion, in its own name or in the name of such agency, officer, or employee, as the case may be, appeal therefrom to the Supreme Court. This subsection shall not apply to any judgment, decree, or order of a district court of the United States which may, under existing provisions of law, be appealed directly to the Supreme Court."

Redesignate the present subsection (c) as subsection (d), and redesignate the present subsection (d) as (e).

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I take the floor only for the purpose of asking the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] to insert in the RECORD any information he may have with regard to the Baltimore case to which he referred a few minutes ago as a case of collusion, which was instituted against the Wheeler-Rayburn Act. The Wheeler-Rayburn Act is the Holding Company Act, a very important piece of legislation. I have heard it stated a number of times that a collusive suit was started in Baltimore in the Federal court for the purpose of obtaining an adverse ruling on the constitutionality of the act, and that when the distinguished corporation lawyer from New York City, Mr. Morgan's personal attorney, appeared in court to try the case, he had to be introduced to his client. He was only there to lend the weight of his august name and connections against the law.

The fact is we have had a perpetual open season in the inferior Federal courts of this country against acts of Congress. If I had my way about it, instead of aiming to reach the evil by a bill of this character, giving the Attorney General the right to intervene when the question of constitutionality is raised, I would require, whenever such a question was raised in the lower Federal courts, the immediate certification of the case to the Supreme Court of the United States for its determination of the question [applause] and then I would require that the case be remanded in accordance with whatever procedure should follow the ruling of the Supreme Court. If this procedure were followed, you would find you would knock in the head 90 percent of the suits attacking the constitutionality of acts of Congress.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. It might interest the Members of the House to know that when this case came up in the Federal court in Baltimore both sides to the controversy indicated clearly and publicly that they did not believe in the constitutionality of the act but, on the contrary, believed the act to be absolutely unconstitutional. This was a case where both sides tried to show the act was unconstitutional, and no opportunity was given to any branch of the Government or the Attorney General, or anyone outside of the parties, to argue the constitutionality of the act. Furthermore, the United States Supreme Court refused to entertain the appeal because of collusion.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. May I ask the gentleman from New York whether or not they followed their usual procedure of first hunting a friendly court in which to try the case?

Mr. CELLER. I do not know about that, but undoubtedly there was collusion.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I make this motion for only one purpose and that is to have the amendment explained.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the amendment simply provides that in cases where the Government or some agency of the Government is a party and the decision is adverse to the constitutionality of the act in question, the Government, in such event, may appeal directly to the Supreme Court in order to expedite the determination of the constitutional question.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Does that take care of cases now pending as well as those that may arise in the future?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment for the purpose of asking whether the proposed amendment relates to criminal cases as well as civil causes. If it relates to criminal cases, the acquittal of the defendant ends the litigation, and I believe the point raised by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] would make it advisable that the word "civil" should be inserted before the word "suits", or the words "of a civil nature" inserted after the word "proceedings."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. With pleasure.

Mr. RANKIN. That would not be the case, though, where there was a quashing of a demurrer or a motion to strike out.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is true, but in those cases the statute already provides for direct appeal to the Supreme Court, and therefore that point is not involved here.

Mr. RANKIN. The amendment only adds to that provision, and they would not be affected.

Mr. CHANDLER. But it now says "in any suits or proceedings", and it might apply to a case which has been tried on its merits, and the party having been put in jeopardy, the right of appeal by the Government would not lie.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. In criminal cases, is not the Attorney General's Office represented by a United States attorney inasmuch as criminal cases are instituted by the Government itself?

Mr. CHANDLER. But I am speaking about this particular amendment, which seeks to give direct appeal in all suits in which the United States is a party, and I am simply raising the point whether as to criminal cases it would be an error to provide that.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I make this suggestion to my colleague? Of course, this would not attempt to give the right of appeal where the right to appeal does not now exist under the law; at least, that is our view. It gives the right of appeal directly to the Supreme Court in cases where the right to appeal would now be to the Circuit Court of Appeals.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I did not so understand the proposed amendment when it was read. If criminal cases are included, certainly the case cited by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] would make that part of the amendment invalid. United States v. Evans (213 U. S. 297) is exactly in point. The appeal would lie only in behalf of the defendant; and if he were acquitted by reason of the unconstitutionality of the Federal statute, the case would be a moot one, because the judgment could not be affected by the decision of the appellate court.

Mr. Chairman, the right of direct appeal to the United States Supreme Court now lies in almost every civil cause involving important statutes, except, strangely, the constitutionality of acts of Congress. For example, Congress has seen to it that in antitrust litigations appeal from the decree of the district court lies only to the Supreme Court, and must be taken in 60 days. There suits against monopolies have been expedited by Congress. Congress has seen to it that the constitutionality of State statutes can be determined by direct appeal from a three-judge court to the United States Supreme Court. It has seen to it that decrees of the district courts in the Packers and Stockyards Act are reviewable by direct appeal to the United States Supreme Court. It has seen to it that appeals from injunctions by the district court as to orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission are direct to the Supreme Court, and in that statute Congress provided that notice had to be given to the Attorney General of the United States. And in criminal cases, in which preliminary questions of law are decided against the United States, appeal lies direct to the United States. But Congress seems to have overlooked the prime point of interest, and that is the sustaining of the acts of this body. We pass laws affecting the whole people, and yet we have not expedited the determination of their constitutionality when the lowest courts declare them invalid. The interest of all the citizens is paramount to the interest of the private litigants themselves. This bill fills a gap, and will not add materially to the costs; but it will hasten the settlement of cases. Generally, the question of constitutionality is the controlling one in the case. If the parties do not want that determined, they can withdraw it and let the case rest on other grounds; but they should not raise constitutional questions and complain if Congress is sufficiently interested in backing up its own enactments to send in an effective counsel to defend our acts.

But I rose to raise the question here as a matter of clarification and in order to avoid making a mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RABAUT: On page 2, line 10, after the word "statutes", strike out the period, insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That not more than one adjournment of such cause shall be granted on the motion of the Attorney General except with the consent of all parties in such cause."

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is a very simple amendment. It follows the word "statute" in line 10, page 2, and reads:

Provided, That not more than one adjournment of such cause shall be granted on the motion of the Attorney General except with the consent of all parties in such cause.

The amendment is offered for the simple purpose of expediting the business before the Court. To accomplish that purpose, it is provided that the Attorney General's office may not be accused of delaying matters that come before the Court and holding up litigants before the Court.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield.

Mr. SACKS. Does this not supersede the discretion of the Court? Does it not take away the discretion of the Court to try the case, and set it up in the act as mandatory upon the Court to try it after the first adjournment?

Mr. RABAUT. I would not say that it does, if the parties to the case agree.

Mr. SACKS. The Court is not a party to the case. For instance, under your amendment, would that not make it mandatory for the Court to try the case after one adjournment?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I suggest to the gentleman that it seems the best policy, when we are more or less in the experimental stage with regard to this matter, to not do too much to hamper the Court or anybody else? I hope the gentleman will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, in deference to the request of the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. SUMNERS], I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania a few moments ago made the statement that at the moment of intervention on the part of the Attorney General those who are trying the lawsuit might as well pack up their books and go home. Now, suppose we pass this law, and suppose the Court has certified to the Attorney General that it is a case where the Attorney General should appear, I wish to know if, under this bill, it would result in a continuance of the trial of the lawsuit upon the merits, aside from the question of constitutionality?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not think it would occasion much delay; but, to be entirely candid with the gentleman, it is conceivable that conditions would develop in which some delay might result, but that would be under the control of the Court, governed by the ordinary rules of procedure that govern in the trial of cases. That is about the best we can do.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. In other words, it is not written in the bill that any continuance would result from interference on the part of the Attorney General?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. FRED M. VINSON] having resumed the chair, Mr. WOODRUM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2260) to provide for appearance on behalf of and appeal by the United States in certain cases in which the constitutionality of acts of Congress is involved, directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demended on any amendment? If not, the amendments will be considered en bloc.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were ayes 122 and noes 14.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the life of Horace Mann.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the bill just passed and include certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL REGISTER ACT

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, by order of the Committee on the Judiciary, I call up the bill (H. R. 5721) to amend the Federal Register Act.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of the Federal Register Act, approved July 26, 1935 (49 Stat. 500), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. (a) On July 1, 1938, and on the same date of every fifth year thereafter, each agency of the Government shall have prepared and shall file with the Administrative Committee a complete codification of all documents which, in the opinion of the agency, have general applicability and legal effect and which have been issued or promulgated by such agency and are in force and effect and relied upon by the agency as authority for, or invoked or used by it in the discharge of, any of its functions or activities on June 1, 1938. The Committee shall, within 90 days thereafter, report thereon to the President, who may authorize and direct the publication of such codification in special or supplemental editions of the Federal Register.

"(b) There is hereby established a Codification Board, which shall consist of six members: The Director of the Division of the Federal Register, chairman ex officio; three attorneys of the Department of Justice, designated by the Attorney General; and two attorneys of the Division of the Federal Register, designated by the Archivist. The Board shall supervise and coordinate the form, style, arrangement, and indexing of the codifications of the various agencies.

"(c) The codified documents of the several agencies published in the supplemental edition of the Federal Register pursuant to the provisions of subsection (a) hereof, as amended by documents subsequently filed with the Division and published in the daily issues of the Federal Register, shall be prima-facie evidence of the text of such documents and of the fact that they are in full force and effect on and after the date of publication thereof.

"(d) The Administrative Committee shall prescribe, with the approval of the President, regulations for carrying out the provisions of this section."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday, after the special order that has already been made for that day, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

SUGAR QUOTAS

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Agriculture has had before it for some time a new sugar control act, sent up from the Department with the usual demand, I suppose, to pass it without undue delay. A subcommittee was appointed to hold hearings on that bill and proceeded for some days. Suddenly the bill was recalled by the Department. It seems that certain other departments of the Government desired to have something to say about what that bill should provide. I understand that the Department of State, the War Department, and certain other departments have been in a huddle as to the provisions of a new bill, each claiming some vital interest therein.

We have not been able to secure a copy of the new bill as yet, and I am wondering if a dispatch appearing in the papers within the last day or two, coming from the sugar conference in London, has had anything to do with the delay in presenting the new bill to the committee.

Mr. Norman L. Davis is our representative to the conference. As to his knowledge of sugar production I am not informed, although it is generally recognized that he is fully informed as to the President's program in foreign affairs.

I find in an article appearing in the New York Journal of Commerce this statement concerning negotiations that are going on over there, and I quote:

Arguing in favor of an adjustment of the world sugar market, the United States promised to make proportionate sacrifices either by reducing production or enabling more foreign participation in the American market.

Mr. Speaker, the farmers of this country produce only a little more than 25 percent of the sugar consumed in the country. We have seen the quotas so arranged as to be rather disturbing to the sugar-beet industry, particularly to that part of it in the eastern section of the country. In my home city I have seen one fine beet-sugar refinery go out of business since the Jones-Costigan law was put into effect. Within the past few weeks it has been announced by the officials of still another sugar company that their plant will likewise close.

Mr. Speaker, with these things in mind it is pertinent to ask what is going on in these negotiations in which our roving Ambassador, Mr. Davis, undertakes to make a pawn of the American sugar industry without the knowledge of the American beet- and cane-sugar producers. Is the American sugar industry to be made the pawn in some secret international arrangement, to be moved about, squeezed, and eventually strangled, because foreign interests desire it?

We know the attitude of Secretary Wallace, who has declared before the Senate Finance Committee that if he had planned the economy of the United States years ago he would never have permitted the American sugar industry to be established.

We know the attitude of the then chief of the sugar section, who admitted on the witness stand before the House Committee on Agriculture that the legislation proposed at that time could be likened to a "shot in the arm" before our domestic sugar industry was put out of existence.

Is this still the attitude of the administration? In the face of the needs of American agriculture, and in the face of the solemn promises of this administration to give earnest, honest, and constructive consideration to the needs of American agriculture, are the sugar-beet farmers and the cane growers of the United States to have their market traded away from them in some international game in which a dream of world amity is to be attempted by giving away our markets and selling our own people down the river?

In the face of the admitted unemployment now existing in the United States, are more American workers to be thrown into the ranks of those on relief, are American refineries to be shut down, and the investment of American farmers and American refiners to be sacrificed ruthlessly to some secret international game of "you scratch me and I'll pat you?"

What shadow of excuse can be offered, Mr. Speaker, for giving away our American sugar market, exposing us more and more, as a Nation, to dependence on foreign supplies of sugar in the event of war; for forcing more American workingmen into relief ranks, more American businessmen and more American farmers into bankruptcy, because foreigners want the markets of America, while American producers are not permitted now to produce more than 25 percent of our own requirements?

What shadow of justice or sense in a policy that declares, as Mr. Roosevelt declared, that we would take care of troubles in America first—meaning unemployment, stale business, dead investments in industry—and then trading away—aye, giving away—the market for one domestic industry that contributes the greater part of production costs to payments to beet growers and in wages to American working men and women?

Why all this secrecy about the bill now held from the committee? Why the reticence of the departmental officials regarding its terms? Why the reluctance of those same officials to take the stand and explain the provisions of the bill so recently withdrawn from the committee? Why these strange reports from abroad? What is this game? What lies behind this situation? Is the American sugar industry marked for slaughter?

The United States, producing as it does only 25 percent of its own needs through its domestic industry, certainly is not contributing to any world surplus of sugar.

We do not need to enter into engagements with the rest of the world to further restrict our production of sugar. The fact is we already give to producers outside continental United States 75 percent of the domestic market. That should be considered a reasonable contribution toward the stabilization of the sugar production of the world.

Further, we do not need to enter into any engagements in order to insure a fair price in this country for the producers of sugar. Experience under the quota clause of the Jones-Costigan Act has established the fact that a fair price can be maintained at all times.

My criticism of the present sugar program is that it has not been administered primarily in the interests of the American producer and the American consumer. This is confirmed by the idle sugar-refining plants in certain beet-growing areas of the country.

If this negotiation now going on abroad results in a commitment by the United States which will further curtail the American production of sugar, it means that in all probability still other sugar operations, now active and profitable in this country, will be strangled and destroyed.

Is it the policy of this administration to settle the troubles of the world first and then do whatever may be done for America?

Is it the policy of this administration to look after the interests of all the foreign producers of sugar and other products now made in this country, and if anything be left to sustain American industry to hand the morsel to American business?

Is it the policy of this administration to have care for the wage earners of all other countries before caring for our own?

Is it the policy of this administration to trade away, give away, or submit to the forcible taking by foreign interests, of our domestic markets in some hope that the other countries of the world will feel more kindly toward us?

Again I ask, What lies behind these moves to sacrifice American farmers, American industry, American workingmen to a policy of placation and persuasion of other countries to regard us kindly? Is it a lack of vision, lack of courage, or lack of interest in America?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF and Mr. MARTIN of Colorado asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute on the same subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

SUGAR QUOTAS

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan said that a sugar factory in his district had closed since the sugar quota bill had gone into effect.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. He said that another one is going to close. The point is that the factory could not have closed on account of any sugar legislation passed by this administration, because, under the quota provisions of the sugar bill, the beet-sugar people have never produced as much sugar as we allowed them to produce under the bill.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I am perfectly frank to admit that the quota system, if administered for the benefit of the American producer, is a lifesaver for the American sugar industry. I concede that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LANZETTA, for 1 day, on account of important business.

To Mr. IMHOFF, for the balance of the week, on account of the death of secretary.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan has stated that a fine sugar plant has been shut down in his district. May I say to him that during the Coolidge-Hoover administrations I had two very fine sugar plants shut down in my district and may I say to him further that at the time of the passage of the Jones-Costigan Sugar Act the sugar industry in my State was bankrupt. The stocks of the companies had gone down to almost nothing and had quit paying dividends. Sugar beets were worth only about $4.50 a ton. Labor was only getting about $11 or $12 an acre. At the present time every sugar factory in my district and my State are making money, sugar beets are $6.50 a ton and labor gets $18 to $19 an acre. Their stocks have gone back to par. The farmers have been getting 50 percent more for their beets and labor has been getting 50 percent more for its work. The Jones-Costigan Act has saved the sugar-beet industry in my State.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman has challenged a statement I made.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No; I did not challenge the statement. I challenged the inference that the shut-down was due to the Jones-Costigan Act.

Mr. WOODRUFF. If the gentleman will listen to me for a moment I think he will agree I am quite correct in the inference I conveyed. I have already said to the gentleman that the quota system has saved the sugar industry of the United States. The gentleman agrees to that?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I say to the gentleman that the quota allowed the eastern refiners and the eastern growers has not been enough to permit all of our Michigan sugar companies to operate.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. May I say in answer to that the beet-sugar industry has only once in its history reached the quota allowed it under existing law, and in all other years has fallen below it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the domestic sugar industry has ever but once reached the quota allowed under the Jones-Costigan Act. The gentleman further made the statement that domestic sugar was about 25 percent of the consumption. I do not believe it is that much, and it has never exceeded that in history, notwithstanding all of the sugar laws and tariffs going clear back to the bonus under McKinley. It has never been able to reach 25 percent of consumption.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman will agree that inasmuch as we have a number of idle sugar factories in Michigan, and the conditions under which beets can be grown and sugar manufactured now being satisfactory, if we had a proper quota in Michigan the wheels of every one of those factories would be turning each year during the time the beets are being refined?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I cannot state about conditions in Michigan. I know the conditions in Colorado.

Mr. WOODRUFF. It does not require information about local conditions to tell you if a man has a plant he can operate profitably, he will operate it.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Why did not the gentleman's plants operate profitably before this administration came in, and the quota law, as well as the processing tax?

Mr. WOODRUFF. For the same reasons the Colorado plants did not operate.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman's observation was only to answer the inference that the gentleman from Michigan conveyed?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That is all.

Mr. McCORMACK. Under Republican regime there was no quota and if they had continued in power we would have had no refineries.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman is correct. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts we did not have anything but a lot of busted sugar factories and sugar-beet growers when the other party went out of power. Colorado sugar is now prosperous.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is quite right.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I conveyed to the gentleman my satisfaction that we have the quota system. I have already conceded that. I have said that at other times, I have said it back home, I have stated it at other places, and I repeat it here for the benefit of the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think we can thank the gentleman, coming from the Republican side, for his statement in reference to this great piece of work which the Democrats have done.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado, Mr. RABAUT, Mr. GWYNNE, and Mr. MICHENER asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including in the Appendix of the RECORD a speech I made at Benton Harbor, Mich., on April 2.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that Committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

1647. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Hampton Roads Maritime Exchange, Norfolk, Va., concerning Senate bill 4; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

1648. Also, petition of the Ecological Society of America, concerning the Atlantic-Gulf or Florida ship canal; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 8, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, morning, noon, and night, out of Thine own divine nature, Thou art bestowing upon us those affections which enkindle happiness and enlarge the spheres of human life. Almighty God, Thou art transcendent in power, infinite in excellence over all, and blessed forevermore. We pray for all classes and conditions of men. Take them unto Thyself, and may they be united in a genuine desire to succor their fellow men and be raised from the carnal life into a truly brotherly life, in which there is justice, peace, and good will. Speak to their storms and passions and allay strife and contention. We pray that all men may become free by becoming better, fuller of the divine manhood; thus bound together in a common sympathy and fraternity. Be pleased to be with us this day, O Lord, through Christ. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

Mr. MAVERICK (interrupting the reading of the Journal). Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the Journal is not being read in full.

The SPEAKER. The Journal is being read in full.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk read that the following Members failed to answer to their names, and did not read the names of the Members who failed to answer. Obviously the Journal is not being read in full.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the Journal.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the Journal.

Mr. MAVERICK (again interrupting the reading of the Journal). Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order the Clerk is not reading the Journal in full. I made the same point of order before, and I think, as a matter of good faith, it should all be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the Journal.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the Journal.

Mr. RAYBURN (further interrupting the reading of the Journal). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal of yesterday be dispensed with, and that the Journal be approved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

DIRECTOR OF THE COLUMBIA INSTITUTE FOR THE DEAF

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Section 4863, Revised Statutes of the United States, the Chair appoints as director of the Columbia Institute for the Deaf, to fill the existing vacancy, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KINZER].

MINUTE MEN OF 1937

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a minute and a half.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, with the minute and one-half allotted to me I want to refer to the meeting called by the President of the United States upon his return from Warm Springs, Ga., several weeks ago when he called together the leaders of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the majority leader, and others to discuss the sit-down menace raging in our land, where the sit-downers confiscate private property without due process of law. Since the meeting the President, the Speaker, the majority leader, the leaders of the Senate, the Governor of Michigan, the Governor of Pennsylvania are all sitting down. It seems as though they cannot get up.

THE FARMERS OF PENNSYLVANIA THE MINUTE MEN OF 1937

Law and order is not now maintained by the elected authorities, or they would not permit confiscation of property by sit-down strikers.

In the great State of Pennsylvania—of which I am proud and of its people—the Governor will not protect private property. Up in Hershey yesterday it became necessary for those loyal Americans, the farmers and the employees of the Hershey Chocolate Co., to drive from the plant of that concern "sit-downers" who undertook to seize private property and interfere with the legal operation of the plant. Those patriotic American citizens, according to reports, drove the "sit-downers" from the plant and from the town of Hershey. This action was necessary in order to save their daily supply of some 800,000 pounds of milk, and to protect the employees who wanted to faithfully perform their duties, and the right to support their families.

Mr. Speaker, the farmers of Pennsylvania who yesterday demonstrated their independence and devotion to American principles will take their place in history with the patriotic fervor of John Brown and his ante-bellum activities. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, as usual, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is wrong. As usual, he does not know his facts.

Mr. RICH rose.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am not going to yield.

The President of the United States did not call a conference of the Speaker and the leader of the House and the Vice President and the leader of the Senate to discuss sit-down strikes. There was no policy concerning sit-down strikes discussed in the meeting, as far as the Speaker and the leader of the House are concerned. I want this statement to go in the RECORD in repudiation of what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has stated. As usual, the gentleman does not understand what he is talking about. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-three Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 38]

Allen, Ill.	Gilchrist	Lesinski	Richards
Amlie	Goldsborough	Long	Robertson
Buckley, N. Y.	Goodwin	Lord	Scrugham
Byrne	Griswold	McGehee	Sullivan
Chapman	Healey	McGroarty	Taylor, Colo.
Clark, Idaho	Higgins	Maas	Taylor, S. C.
Cravens	Hildebrandt	Magnuson	Taylor, Tenn.
Culkin	Hull	Mouton	Thomas, N. J.
Cummings	Imhoff	Norton	Tinkham
Curley	Keller	O'Connor, Mont.	Tobey
Dingell	Kelly, N. Y.	Parsons	Treadway
Ferguson	Kerr	Pettengill	Wadsworth
Fries, Ill.	Kniffin	Quinn	White, Ohio
Garrett	Larrabee	Reece, Tenn.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and seventy-four Members having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. RAYBURN, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture may meet during sessions of the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein the preamble to the constitution of the Military Order of the World War and an address made on the night of April 6 by the Secretary of War, the Honorable Harry Woodring.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, today the Children's Bureau is celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of its foundation. I know the Members of the House are extremely anxious to have the children of the country given all opportunity for health and happiness, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point and to include therein certain material from the Children's Bureau which shows that the Bureau has helped many a child to better and happier living.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the very first bill ever introduced in Congress proposing a children's bureau was that of Senator Winthrop Murray Crane, of my own State of Massachusetts, in 1906. President Theodore Roosevelt was strongly in favor of the creation of such a bureau, and he recommended the legislation in his annual message to Congress.

President William Howard Taft, who has been widely quoted for his comment, made a speech in 1910, in which he cited the large amounts of money then being spent by the Department of Agriculture in telling the farmers how to raise hogs, cattle, and horses, and then advocated the expenditure of money for a bureau to tell people how to develop good men and women.

Every Member of Congress knows of the fine work of the Children's Bureau. Its Chief, Miss Katherine F. Lenroot, is held in highest esteem for the excellent and conscientious work she is doing. Most of us know of the vitally important work the Bureau has done in the distribution of bulletins pertaining to prenatal care and the raising of children. These publications are recognized everywhere as authority upon the subjects covered. Nursing organizations all over the country use them to educate mothers in the care of their children. The booklets have played a large part in the strides made in the improvement of our child-mortality rate.

I hold in my hand the first copy of a new Children's Bureau publication just off the press today. It is entitled "The Children's Bureau—Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow", written by Mrs. Elizabeth Shirley Enochs. I commend it to you for your reading, for it draws the picture so well of how, why, and when the Bureau was created, and what have been its accomplishments. After reading it, one realizes how important a part this Bureau is playing in the lives of all of us.

The following statement issued by the Children's Bureau gives the facts concerning its establishment and work:

The bill creating the Children's Bureau was signed by President William Howard Taft April 9, 1912, and the first appropriation became available August 23 of the same year. By this act Congress enabled the United States to lead the nations of the world in establishing a Federal agency in the sole interests of children and to consider as a whole the problems affecting them. Since 1912 children's bureaus have been established in 28 countries, 8 nations having organizations similar to that of the United States.

The creation of such a Federal bureau was first suggested in 1906 by Lillian D. Wald, founder of the Henry Street Settlement in New York City. The idea was taken up by the first White House conference on child welfare called by President Theodore Roosevelt in 1909, and President Roosevelt in his message to Congress, recommended the creation of such a bureau. The impetus given at that conference by the Nation-wide support of social-service workers and educators, judges, and philanthropists finally carried the measure through.

The National Child Labor Committee (of which Miss Wald was a member at that time) was sponsor for the bill introduced in Congress in 1909. It was supported by a concerted effort of 25,000 clergymen in sermons asking their hearers to recognize society's obligation to the child. At the same time national organizations of women's clubs, the consumers' leagues throughout the country, college and school alumnae associations, societies for the promotion of special interests of children, the various State child-labor committees—representing in their membership and executive committees education, labor, law, medicines, and business—officially gave their endorsement.

Many bills were introduced from 1906 to 1912. The first bill was introduced by Senator Winthrop Murray Crane, of Massachusetts, January 10, 1906. Others were introduced by Senator Frank P. Flint, of California, Representative John J. Gardner, of New Jersey, Representative Henry A. Barnhart, of Indiana, Representative Andrew J. Peters, of Massachusetts, and Representative Herbert E. Parsons, of New York. The bill, which finally passed, was introduced by Senator BORAH.

One of the most enthusiastic advocates of the establishment of the Children's Bureau was President Theodore Roosevelt. In urging Congress to favorable action on February 15, 1909 (about 3 weeks after the first White House conference), he said:

"It is not only discreditable to us as a people that there is now no recognized and authoritative source of information upon these subjects relating to child life, but in the absence of such information as should be supplied by the Federal Government many abuses have gone unchecked; for public sentiment, with its great corrective power, can only be aroused by full knowledge of the facts. In addition to such information as the Census Bureau and other existing agencies of the Federal Government already provide, there remains much to be ascertained through lines of research not now authorized by law; and there should be correlation and dissemination of the knowledge obtained without any duplication of effort or interference with what is already being done.

"There are few things more vital to the welfare of the Nation than accurate and dependable knowledge of the best methods of dealing with children, especially with those who are in one way or another handicapped by misfortune; and in the absence of such knowledge each community is left to work out its own problem without being able to learn of and profit by the success or failure of other communities along the same lines of endeavor. The bills for the establishment of the Children's Bureau are advocated not only by this conference but by a large number of national organizations that are disinterestedly working for the welfare of children, and also by philanthropic, educational, and religious bodies in all parts of the country."

President Taft was also one of the advocates of the establishment of the Children's Bureau. In a speech in Albany, March 19, 1910, he said:

"We have an Agricultural Department and we are spending $14,000,000 or $15,000,000 a year to tell the farmers, by the result of our research, how they ought to treat the soil and how they ought to treat the cattle and the horses, with a view to having good hogs and good cattle and good horses. Now, there is nothing in the Constitution especially about hogs or cattle or horses, and if out of the Public Treasury at Washington we can establish a department for that purpose, it does not seem to be a long step or a stretch of logic to say that we have the power to spend the money in a bureau of research to tell how we may develop good men and women."

The Children's Bureau was directed to "investigate and report * * * upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of our people." It was especially charged with investigating "infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents and diseases of children, employment, legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories."

At first a part of the Department of Commerce and Labor, the Bureau was transferred to the newly created Department of Labor March 4, 1913. The first Chief of the Bureau was Julia C. Lathrop, who was succeeded in August 1921 by Grace Abbott. Miss Abbott in turn was succeeded in 1934 by Katharine F. Lenroot, the present Chief.

Two quotations from the annual reports of its two Chiefs may be cited as expressing the spirit and method by which the many and interrelated problems of child life and child welfare in our country have been approached by the Bureau:

Miss Lathrop: "It is obvious that the Bureau is to be a center of information useful to all the children of America, to ascertain and to popularize just standards for their life and development."

Miss Abbott: "The trial-error method in the care of children is giving way to a scientific determination of their needs through careful study of community resources and of accumulated experience as to methods of care and training, and through carefully conducted experiments along lines indicated by experience."

Neither mothers nor those who are working in the field of child welfare need any introduction to the work of the Children's Bureau. More than 16,000,000 copies of its popular bulletins on prenatal care, infant care, child care, and child management have gone to mothers during the Bureau's existence. Physicians and public-health workers are familiar with its studies of maternal and infant mortality and of basic problems related to the physical, mental, and emotional health of children. Social workers are familiar with its studies of illegitimacy, dependency, delinquency, child labor, recreation, unemployment, and legislation affecting children. They all know the part the Bureau has played with the cooperation of acknowledged leaders in their respective fields in the development of minimum standards which have been used as a basis of community action for child welfare. They know, too, of the varied methods the Bureau has developed to report its findings in order that the facts may be useful to all—its popular literature, exhibits, health conferences, and radio talks for mothers; its technical scientific reports for students and workers; and its use as well of the conference with local and national groups.

Great progress has been made in the whole field of child welfare since the Children's Bureau was established. But much yet remains to be done. Miss Lathrop's statement in 1921 may well be cited now as expressive of what lies ahead:

"Plainly the task of social study is progressive and cannot be completed, and thus far the Bureau has hardly made a beginning in performing the vast task assigned to it."

Among those who attended the first White House conference and urged the creation of the Children's Bureau were the following: Jane Addams, Lillian D. Wald, Julia Lathrop, Mrs. William Einstein, Dr. William P. Spratling, Adolph Lewisohn, Lee K. Frankel, Judge Ben B. Lindsey, Jacob A. Riis, Julius Rosenwald, Andrew Carnegie, Dr. Edward T. Devine, Samuel S. Fleisher, Ernest P. Bicknell, Judge M. W. Pinckney, Homer Folks, Judge Julian W. Mack, Rabbi Emil G. Hirsch, Dr. Charles F. McKenna, Michael J. Scanlan, Rt. Rev. D. J. McMahon, Prof. Samuel McCune Lindsay, Thomas Mott Osborne, Jacob H. Schiff, Owen R. Lovejoy, Myron T. Herrick, Dr. Hastings H. Hart, Prof. Charles Richmond Henderson, V. Everit Macy, Rev. INVESTIGATION OF SIT-DOWN STRIKES AND UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

DICKSTEIN AND DIES RESOLUTIONS SHOULD BE DEFEATED

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, we have coming before the House today some of the most important matters that will come before us in probably 10 or 15 years. I refer to the resolution introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] and the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

I have heard it said that the sit-down strikes presage fascism. I do not believe the people are about to march on Washington in black shirts to overthrow our Government. I still think democracy and parliamentary government are supreme in this country.

We also have the Dickstein resolution that proposes to go out and hunt Fascists. I have received many scurrilous letters against the Jews, but I know they are unfounded. But if the Dickstein resolution is passed it will hurt them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe these scurrilous letters. But I believe the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is bringing criticism on his own people and bringing forth anti-Semitic propaganda all over the United States, and therefore his resolution ought to be killed. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I think there is another thing to be said about both of these resolutions. Neither of them is necessary and both of them are a waste of money and both will hurt the prestige of the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

DICKSTEIN RESOLUTION WILL HURT JEWS, GERMANS, AND ALL OTHER AMERICANS

Now, what will the Dickstein resolution do? It will not help the Jews in this country. It will subject them to embarrassment from every source. It will not help the German-Americans in this country in any way whatsoever. It will help no one, and will only cause distress to all citizens.

The resolution of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] will not help labor, it will not help capital, and it will not help the American people.

They should both be defeated.

LIBERTY LEAGUE LAWYERS ADVISE EMPLOYERS TO VIOLATE LAW

Let us now review especially the resolution concerning the sit-down strikes. The Congress of the United States passed legislation for the purpose of protecting the employers and the employees in their disputes, but what did the Liberty League lawyers do? These smug-mug attorneys told their clients, "Go out and violate the law of the land."

They told them to do this. They conspired to violate the law. Worse, they openly defied it.

What else did they do? They told their employers to fight the Labor Relations Board and get injunctions to break down the law of the Congress, the law of the land. Then who is to blame for sit-down strikes? Is it altogether the people who sit down?

LET THE AMERICAN PEOPLE STAND IN JUDGMENT

Mr. Speaker, it may be some of the employers had something to do with it. Let the American people stand in judgment.

I now call attention to the Dies resolution. One of the whereases states:

Whereas people are picketing the courthouses.

My God, are we to be the nursemaid of all the sheriffs and police in the country? Why, there is not anything in this that concerns Congress in any way whatsoever.

PRESIDENT HAS NO CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO INTERFERE IN LOCAL DISTURBANCES

I also call your attention to the fact that, whether any man states the contrary or not, the President of the United States has no constitutional right to interfere with the local affairs of this Nation. Then they say to us, "Congress, you have no power to settle disputes, you have no power to mediate, but have the President of the United States go out and do it."

TALK ABOUT DICTATORS—THIS RESOLUTION CALLS FOR ONE

How can he do this? He could only do it by using his extraordinary powers as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States; in other words, by the passage of such a resolution we would be putting the President of the United States in the position of being a dictator.

The Constitution provides that the President, in the event of domestic violence, can only send out troops at the request of the Governor of a State or the legislature, if it is in session. So I would say to all of these people who are constantly talking about States' rights that they go back to their States and enforce their own laws.

NOBODY HAS ASKED TO INVESTIGATE SIT-DOWNS

Let us see just what situation we have here. First of all, the employers have not asked us to investigate the sit-down strikes; second, the employees have not asked it; third, the State of Michigan has not asked it; and, fourth, the American people have not asked it. Therefore this Dies resolution is nothing but a lot of show, a lot of noise. It accomplishes nothing; it embarrasses Congress—the Legislature of the United States—and the President; and both the Dies resolution and the Dickstein resolution ought to be defeated. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call the attention of the House to what I think is a violation of the rules of the House.

Yesterday, the House will recall that when the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER] rose and asked permission to put certain documents in the RECORD I objected. Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER], without the consent of this House, put one of those documents in the RECORD over my objection and without the consent of the House. I hold that is a violation of the rules of this House, and what he has put into the RECORD ought to be stricken. I shall later move to have this unauthorized matter stricken from the RECORD, so that it will not appear in the permanent RECORD.

I wish to say further that this is characteristic of the propaganda that has been used by those who opposed the consideration of my antilynching bill, H. R. 2251, which resulted in kicking my bill out the front door of the House yesterday.

[Here the gavel fell.]

SIT-DOWN STRIKES

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for time on the Dies resolution. It is highly important to every Member of Congress from Michigan that we be heard, but we are unable to get time. This committee has seen fit to gag those who oppose this resolution.

I just want to bring out this one fact this afternoon—the Democratic Members of Congress from the State of Michigan are unanimously opposed to the Dies resolution. [Applause.] We are against it unanimously. It is a direct attack upon labor. We are handling the situation in Michigan very nicely. Governor Murphy has done a fine job. There has been no bloodshed. There is no need for this House to create trouble by appointing this useless committee to agitate and aggravate labor. The Chrysler strike has been settled; the General Motors strike has been settled. Those strikes are being taken care of in the proper way. We have the La Follette committee in the Senate, and the report on their investigation is available to every Member of this House. They have made a most thorough investigation of every phase of the labor situation and the causes of the strikes in Michigan and throughout the country.

Every Member of the House knows the causes for the sit-down strikes. Labor has used it as a weapon to enforce the right of the majority to bargain collectively. This right is guaranteed to labor under the Wagner bill. It is imperative that the Supreme Court make an early decision on the National Labor Relations Act. Why is the Supreme Court postponing action? The Court is responsible for a great deal of this unrest. The remedy for industrial discontent is not this Dies investigation, not new legislation, but rather the enforcement of the National Labor Relations Act. [Applause.]

INVESTIGATION OF UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 88 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 88

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a special committee, to be composed of seven members, not more than five of whom may be from the same political party, for the purpose of conducting an investigation of facts regarding (1) the character, objects, extent of operations, roster of membership and officers, all sources of revenue, and distribution of finances by and of any organizations or groups of individuals acting together found operating in the United States for the purpose of diffusing within the United States of slanderous or libelous un-American propaganda of religious, racial, or subversive political prejudices which tends to incite to the use of force and violence or which tends to incite libelous attacks upon the President of the United States or other officers of the Federal Government, whether such propaganda appears to be of foreign or domestic origin; (2) the extent and method of use of the United States mails and United States Postal Service for the transmission and diffusion within the United States of all information and propaganda by, for, or in behalf of all organizations herein authorized to be investigated, including a study of all possible violations of existing postal laws and regulations; and (3) and all other questions in relation thereto which would assist Congress in the enactment of necessary remedial legislation, including necessary amendments to the postal laws.

Such special committee when organized, is hereby authorized to have custody, for its use, of all the records, documents, files, and other papers which were in the possession of the special committee of the House of Representatives, which was appointed and operated pursuant to H. Res. 198, H. Res. 199, and H. Res. 424, of the Seventy-third Congress, second session.

Such special committee is authorized to request the fullest cooperation in the conduct of this investigation from the Department of Justice, the Post Office Department, and such other departments of the Government that the committee may deem necessary, including access to all files from such departments pertinent to the investigation, and use of such employees and facilities of such departments as may be advantageous to the conduct of such investigation.

That said special committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such records, books, papers, and documents, by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony as it may deem necessary.

Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives at the request of the chairman and shall be served by the Sergeant at Arms of the House or any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses.

Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized or who, having been required to produce records, books, papers, and documents pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, fails or refuses to produce such required records, books, papers, and documents, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 192), as amended.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half of the time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I prefer to make my statement in an orderly way, and then I will be glad to yield.

Mr. SNELL. I wanted to ask the gentleman if he would not consider extending the time. I appreciate that 1 hour is the usual time on one of these resolutions, but on account of the extraordinary interest and the extraordinary demands for time, I wondered if the gentleman would not ask to extend the time?

Mr. GREENWOOD. There is another matter or two to follow this today. I have not had unusual demands for time on my side of the House. I think I will be able to take care of the requests on our side within the time allotted. I would not at this time want to ask for any such extension.

Mr. SNELL. There are several requests for time coming from the gentleman's side of the aisle.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I would like to make a request for time.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I prefer to make my statement first.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I wanted to ask about time.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I will make a notation, and I will yield at the close of my remarks.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield so that I may submit a parliamentary inquiry, not to be taken out of the gentleman's time?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman yields, it comes out of his time.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Then I prefer to make my statement. I will not yield for that purpose at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] that the only exception where interruptions are not taken out of the time of the speaker is on points of order.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to make a parliamentary inquiry, the time not to be taken out of the gentleman's time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, this resolution and the one to follow it, the Dies resolution, provide for the appointment of investigating committees. Each resolution is somewhat extensive and contains separate paragraphs and sections that relate to different subject matters. My inquiry is, Will there be opportunity to read the resolutions section by section and to offer amendments to them?

The SPEAKER. The resolution is being considered in the House under the rules and precedents, and it will be considered in its entirety.

Mr. MAPES. To construe the Speaker's ruling——

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is ordered, of course, there will be no opportunity to offer amendments to the resolution.

Mr. MAPES. There will be no opportunity for amendments?

The SPEAKER. Not if the previous question is agreed to.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD] is recognized.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I decline to yield further at this time.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. After I have concluded my statement, I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. Speaker, I again make the request that I be not asked to yield until after I have made my statement. Then I shall be glad to yield to anyone for any question he may desire to ask.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution before us was reported by the Rules Committee after rather extended hearings. It provides for the appointment of a special committee of seven members to investigate un-American activities and is reported as the result of evidence which was presented before the Rules Committee. I am one who does not necessarily favor investigations. I think many of them often are futile and do not reach a place where we can follow them with legislation. On the other hand, they are often of great value to the Nation by uncovering facts that are needed both for Congress to legislate intelligently and in order that the American people may know all the facts surrounding any particular circumstance. If this were a question merely of freedom of speech, of people having the right under all circumstances to define their ideas of government, or perhaps changes, that would be one thing. I think we would all be in favor of that. If it were just a question of haranguing by a radical on a soap box somewhere or in a hall, none of us would object to that; that is American. But the evidence that came before the Rules Committee was that foreign money was coming into the United States and was being used to formulate certain organizations that were drilling in uniform, the members of which were taking an oath to support a foreign power; it was being used for the purpose of gathering children together and hauling them in buses to certain concentration camps where they were drilled and took an oath to support a foreign power. The evidence showed that this was being done to bring the Government of the United States into disrepute. The evidence also showed that foreign money was being used for the delivery of questionnaires to people of foreign birth asking them in what section of the foreign military service they preferred to enlist. Further facts were presented to the committee that I think the Congress and the American people ought to know and understand. I think the House has the right to hear it and pass upon it.

So I appreciate that we are all more or less against investigations. They do cost a little money, but many of them, in my experience in Congress, have been well worth the expenditure. We believe that this committee when selected, if the House shall see fit to support this resolution, should be a select committee of Members who have had nothing to do with presenting this matter before the committee. The Members will understand, of course, that I am not suggesting what the Speaker ought to do. We all have full confidence that he will select a committee that has no predilections or prejudices to be satisfied. One Member said this morning, in a short speech before the House, that we are going out to hunt fascism. That is not the idea of this investigation. There are many un-American organizations in the United States. It is not necessary to confine this investigation to fascism, nazi-ism, or communism. It is expected to cover all of these un-American activities that advocate the overthrow of our Government by force. To bring out the facts by giving the committee power not only to summon but to compel those who are connected with these activities to come before the committee, and also giving the committee power to compel them to testify when they do come.

If the Congress of the United States is going to act with reference to these un-American activities, they must do it with intelligence and should know the facts. This investigation could lead to legislation. There are certain handicaps or limitations in the matter of the mails, one of them being lack of power to prevent the use of the mails for many of these un-American activities; and the mails are being used for this purpose. There are certain amendments that could be made to our immigration laws growing out of an investigation of this kind leading to deportation of aliens who have not taken American citizenship and who are engaged in this kind of activity to help destroy or undermine the American Government. There should be deportation provided against this undesirable and vicious group.

This proposition has been supported by many patriotic societies—the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and other patriotic organizations. They have had their own committees investigating certain of these activities, and they are willing to present that evidence to a committee of this Congress. So I assumed, and the Committee on Rules assumed, that these facts, which were rather unusual, ought to be presented to the House of Representatives for their consideration.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. TABER. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, why the appropriate committees do not bring in legislation to outlaw the activities involved, and why the authorities do not enforce the law that exists instead of having an investigation?

Mr. GREENWOOD. In the first place, I do not assume that all of the facts embodied in the question are true; and if they be true, I am not in a position to give the gentleman the correct answer.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Is it the intention of the gentleman to move the previous question so that it will be impossible for some of us Members who would like to amend this resolution to make it apply to all organizations engaged in the dissemination of propaganda to offer such amendments?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I think the resolution is broad enough to enable the committee to investigate all such organizations; and when the time allotted for consideration of the resolution shall have expired I expect to move the previous question. It will then be up to the House to decide whether they will open it up for amendment.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. Did the gentleman have before the Rules Committee any officer of the United States Army or Navy Intelligence Department showing an overt act against the Government?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I did not attend all the sessions of the Rules Committee, but I do not recall that there were such officers present.

Mr. MAVERICK. Did the committee ask Mr. J. Edgar Hoover or any of that group about these various activities?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I do not recall that Mr. Hoover appeared before the committee.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. I agree with the gentleman that the only excuse for an investigation is to get information as a basis for legislation. We have been investigating this general subject for the last 8 or 10 years. Can the gentleman state any piece of constructive legislation that has been introduced and passed by the Members of the House as a result of any of these investigations?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I may say to the gentleman from New York, I do not recall whether there has been or not. There have been some laws passed with reference to immigration matters. Since then I do not know what effect the facts brought out by those investigations had. However, the activities are continuing and have done so even since the former committees were in existence. They have grown in their intensity and in their viciousness, and those investigations, I may say, occurred 3 or 4 years ago. We still think, from evidence presented to the Rules Committee, that there is abundant reason why there should be an investigation as provided by this resolution.

Mr. SNELL. The last committee ceased its investigation only with the last Congress. I notice by this resolution you are going to take the information compiled by that committee and furnish it to this new committee. What advantage was there in the other investigation if you are going to continue this one?

Mr. GREENWOOD. It would be an advantage to take the results of that investigation as a basis upon which to make this one.

Mr. SNELL. If there have been certain results that came from the other investigation, why is not legislation introduced based on the information secured in the last investigation?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I have stated I think an investigation like this could lead to proper legislation. There is another item of legislation to which it might lead.

The Constitution of the United States gives the Congress the power to pass laws punishing people for treason. The Constitution says that treason is the levying of war. There is a division of opinion as to just how far the Congress can go in defining treason under the Constitution. The question arises in my mind whether we have to wait until war actually breaks out with a foreign power before we defend the sovereignty of the United States against organizations that are boring from within and are attempting to destroy our Government, which in the end would lead to war. It might be that a proper committee of this Congress could lay down a congressional definition of treason which would cover some of the more radical elements that appeared in the evidence which came before our committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I think the Members of the House are entitled to know before they vote on this resolution just where the committee is going to go. What is meant by un-American activities? What is meant by the un-American organizations that are the source of this trouble that is being investigated? Will the gentleman give the Members of the House a definition of what he considers "un-American propaganda of religious, racial, or subversive political prejudices"?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I do not expect to be a member of that committee. The committee may read this resolution and put whatever interpretation they see fit upon it without any limitation, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. That is the danger of this resolution.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman states that the Rules Committee had certain evidence which brought about the introduction of this resolution. The House ought to know what that evidence consisted of. Where is this money coming from and what foreign power is supporting these organizations which may bring about a state of war between this country and that foreign power?

Mr. GREENWOOD. We had evidence of that. There was also presented to our committee photographs showing the camps that have been organized. These photographs also showed the people in uniform and taking the oath to certain foreign powers.

Mr. O'MALLEY. What foreign power did they take that oath of allegiance to?

Mr. GREENWOOD. The evidence was presented to the Rules Committee and should be heard by a special committee.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Does not the gentleman think the membership of the House, before voting on this matter, should know what foreign power is involved?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I may say there are other gentlemen who will speak on this matter. I have yielded one-half of the time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR], who was a member of the former committee. I have given the House what has come to my attention as a member of the Rules Committee.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I wanted to find out the name of the foreign power.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. I am very much interested in the remarks of the gentleman in regard to this resolution. The gentleman will remember that some years ago the Department of Justice not only conducted investigations but also raids on communistic organizations all over the country. Unless it destroyed the records, the gentleman can get photostatic copies of the documents found in these various places that were raided at that time. He will find in these documents the instructions that were given in the communistic schools, conducted in the basement of various buildings in cities, where the children were taught to repeat in unison "I hate the American flag." He will find all of that down there. That was known years ago. If we had taken steps to cut out this subversive cancer at that time, as we should have done with the information available at that time, we would not be in the position we are today. The committee has full power now to secure that evidence, which was brought up on the floor of this House. They can then bring in legislation, have it properly debated and passed, and put a stop to this business. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. There is more evidence abroad in the land than I had thought there was. I think a committee of the House should consider all of these documents and evidence. I think a high-class committee, selected by the Speaker of the House, in whom we all have confidence, can look into the documents suggested by the gentleman from New York as well as the other things the Rules Committee discovered.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman tell me whether this investigating committee will investigate the owners of these great munitions plants that are trying to involve us in war? The gentleman spoke about people from other countries coming into our country and trying to get us into war. It seems to me if this proposed investigating committee would investigate the owners of these great munitions plants it would be doing something for the benefit of the people of the United States.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I have no desire to put any limitations upon this committee. The committee will take this resolution, and it is broad enough to investigate all matters of a subversive or un-American character that have been inaugurated in this country. I assume the gentleman from Pennsylvania could request the opportunity to appear before the special committee and lay any matter before that committee which he saw fit.

Mr. DUNN. But would I be successful in getting the information? I would not have the power of subpena; and would they do it?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I cannot tell the gentleman what they will do. They have the power to do anything—to subpena and compel testimony.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. The gentleman made the statement the American Legion is supporting this bill. Do I understand correctly the national organization of the American Legion has gone on record specifically for this bill, or is it some branch or auxiliary of the national organization?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I understand they have done so, but I would not like to make a positive statement to that effect. They have a committee on un-American activities. This committee has approved the resolution.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Can the gentleman from New York answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. FISH. Yes. I have never heard of the American Legion endorsing any such bill at all. If the gentleman had included the words "communism, fascism, and nazi-ism", I think the Legion would have come out for that; but this bill does not include any of these names. This bill sets up an un-American check-up, nothing more or less, and restores the alien sedition laws. The American Legion would never be for that.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. May I say to the gentleman from New York the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars, through their headquarters in Washington, fully endorse this investigation, which is broad enough to cover all subversive activity within the United States.

Mr. FISH. Not this bill at all. I am quite sure the American Legion would never endorse it.

Mr. MAVERICK. Give me the endorsement of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1938

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5232) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and request a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. UMSTEAD, Mr. THOM, Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia, Mr. SCRUGHAM, Mr. FERNANDEZ, Mr. DITTER, and Mr. PLUMLEY.

UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, there is very little of material interest I could add to the very able presentation of this resolution by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana.

This is the second investigation of this character which has been conducted by Congress during the past 7 years. In 1930 Congress set up a special committee, of which the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] was chairman, which carried on a very extensive and thorough and very beneficial investigation at that time.

The Seventy-third Congress set up a special committee to investigate un-American activities, and I had the honor to be a member of the committee. We were seriously handicapped due to the fact that we did not have sufficient funds, less than $30,000, and, furthermore, we did not have authority to compel attendance of witnesses except when we sat in the city of Washington, or to require witnesses to produce documents and material of that kind. However, as the result of this investigation Congress has since enacted a statute which confers such authority upon special committees. It is an authority which the committee now sought to be created can employ if it is permitted to make this investigation. We were seriously handicapped and embarrassed by the refusal of witnesses whom we summoned to appear and to produce papers and documents. If this resolution is passed, however, the committee set up will not have this difficulty.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. I was somewhat surprised at the statement that under the original resolution the committee could not compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and papers.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Only when the committee sat in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SNELL. So that was it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I know we did that years and years ago, for a long time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Since that time, may I say to the gentleman from New York, Congress has enacted a statute which confers that authority on special committees.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman kindly tell the House what legislation resulted from this long, protracted investigation?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. This one piece of legislation I have mentioned resulted from it. May I say, modestly, because I was a member of the committee, that I think the special committee set up by the Seventy-third Congress did a splendid work. It had as chairman the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], a man of outstanding ability, who rendered really high-class constructive service as the chairman of the committee.

Mr. COLDEN. Did the committee hold official hearings in Mexico City and in Germany and other foreign countries?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. No; we did not leave the United States.

It seems to me recent developments certainly warrant an investigation of un-American activities in this country. I think it is universally agreed that communistic influences to some extent are back of the sit-down strike epidemic which is afflicting our Nation. In reading accounts in the press of the speakers who have harangued the strikers in Detroit, I noticed that of the score or more of so-called orators who harangued the mobs out there only two or three had American names. I think perhaps a large percentage of them were alien Communists.

Mr. BOILEAU. If the gentleman will yield, will the gentleman tell us what an American name is, in his judgment?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I think I can. I think I can recognize a good American name.

Mr. BOILEAU. It seems to me that in this House there are Members with names of various nationalities.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I think "Boileau" is a good American name.

Mr. BOILEAU. Thank you very kindly. I appreciate that. However, it seems to me that is one of the fallacies we have to get out of the minds of the American people.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. This resolution is not directed at any particular class or any particular group. It is universal in its application.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I must decline to yield; I have so many requests for time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. The gentleman mentioned the C. I. O.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I understand the C. I. O. has repudiated the sit-down strikes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. What I would like to find out is what is un-American. I cannot seem to get anybody on the committee to give us a definition of that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The gentleman should experience no difficulty in determining a proper definition for "un-American." May I cite Fritz Kuhn, who was naturalized in Detroit December 3, 1934, after Hitler had ordered all the members of the Friends of New Germany to be American citizens.

By the way, may I say that in my opinion our investigation 3 years ago was responsible for the disruption and disintegration of the organization known as the Friends of New Germany, but another organization has sprung up in its wake, known as the Storm Troopers, whose leader claims a membership of over 200,000 in the United States. They have purchased large tracts of land where they are training German youths of the United States.

Mr. KELLER. Where?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. In the State of New York, on Long Island. They bought the camp that was used by the United States Government to mobilize troops during the war before sending them abroad. They own this camp, and on Sunday mornings they go out there in German uniforms and march and salute, "Heil, Hitler." There is another camp in New Jersey where they have such training schools on Sundays, and children 5 and 6 years of age are taught reverence for and loyalty to the German Government instead of reverence and loyalty for their own Government.

They dress in uniforms patterned after the storm troops of Germany and are trained the same as German storm troops; trained in good Hitler fashion to salute, "Heil, Hitler", and take an oath of allegiance to Hitler, using the Nazi flag and the swastika instead of using the red, white, and blue.

I contend that a situation of this kind should not be tolerated on American soil.

A moment ago, just before I rose, there was some controversy about the endorsement of this bill by the American Legion. I have here a letter from Mr. Chaillaux, director of the national Americanism commission of the American Legion, dated March 4, in which he says:

> The last two national conventions of the American Legion have unanimously expressed their bitter opposition and their determination to oppose communism or fascism and nazi-ism in the United States. It is hoped that if H. R. 88 is adopted and a committee appointed the committee will go into a very thorough investigation of the activities of organizations and individuals of all three of the before-mentioned "isms."

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey and Mr. O'MALLEY rose.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I should not consume further time, as I have so many requests for time, but I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Did the gentleman see the parade that passed the Capitol here the other day?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I did.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Did the gentleman notice in that parade the soldiers that were dressed in Scottish kilts and playing bagpipes?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I do not believe I saw that.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Well, they were in the parade.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Perhaps so; and that was very appropriate under the circumstances.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Under this resolution we should really investigate them, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Oh, no; but we should investigate the organization of which Mr. Fritz Kuhn is the director.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. CARLSON. May I ask the gentleman if the committee went into the proposed or estimated cost of this investigation in any way, and what we may consider to be a fair estimate of the cost?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Of course, if the committee is set up it ought to be adequately financed. A committee that is hampered or crippled by lack of funds is absolutely useless and its efforts are abortive. I would say that from $50,000 to $75,000 would be ample.

Mr. CARLSON. Would that be the maximum?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I would say that $75,000 would certainly be the maximum.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman is denouncing communism, Hitlerism, and fascism, and we are all opposed to such isms, and I think we all would like to have an investigation of those activities, and I suggest to the gentleman that if he really wants this bill to pass he should have it provide for an investigation of communism, Hitlerism, and fascism and then it will pass, but if the gentleman keeps the present language in here, the bill will not pass.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I think the language is sufficiently broad to cover the point raised by the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time and yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, if the House is in the mood today to do something that is truly worthless and useless, I can conceive of nothing more fitting than the passage of this resolution. [Laughter and applause.] It proposes to let another investigation committee sit until January 3, 1939.

This is just a fine example of the type of investigation the House has been ordering, because we find it had completely finished its work in the Seventy-fourth Congress, and now they seek to revive and rehash everything that was done at that time.

Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to be unkind. I speak entirely impersonally, for I do not refer to any individual Member, but investigations of this nature, and the membership of the House knows it, are generally for the self-glorification and advertisement of those who conduct them and who have an itch and flair for publicity and advertisement in the papers of the Nation, rather than in the sober forum of the committee rooms. [Applause.]

Now, what has the House of Representatives been doing on this question? In 1930, Mr. FISH, investigating the Communists, spent $20,000. In 1934, Mr. DICKSTEIN comes in and gets $30,000 for an investigation he now seeks to continue. The then Speaker of the House prevailed upon the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] to head that investigation. My love and affection and esteem and my admiration for his outstanding ability is well known by most of the Members. Certainly any report that he brings to this body is worthy of careful consideration and thought. That report was filed and six recommendations were made. Five required legislative action. One minor one was passed, and what became of the others? A bill was introduced and was favorably reported by a committee of this House to shorten and terminate the stay in the United States of certain aliens not admitted for permanent residence. What happened to it? It was reported out of committee on February 21, 1935, in a session of Congress that lasted until August 30. Then we had the entire second session of that Congress to consider that measure. It was embalmed and put to sleep without a rule being brought in to permit us to consider it.

What else did they do? They brought in a bill to provide for the exclusion and expulsion of alien Fascists and Communists. Is there anything wrong with that? That was reported out on May 17, 1935, and what became of that? It quietly rested without a rule during the duration of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. If either one of those measures were ever in the Rules Committee, the Rules Committee was never conscious of it. Nobody ever spoke to the Rules Committee about them being there.

Mr. MCCORMACK. What bill did the gentleman first mention?

Mr. WARREN. I am referring to a bill to shorten and terminate the stay of certain aliens in the United States.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Two bills were reported out, one making it a crime to willfully and knowingly advocate the overthrow of government by force and violence. The Rules Committee never gave a hearing, and the gentleman knows I talked with him many times about it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. On that particular "crackpot" proposal the gentleman has in mind——

Mr. WARREN. I do not yield further, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The Rules Committee was never even asked to give a hearing.

Mr. MCCORMACK. When the gentleman talks about a "crackpot proposal", that leaves the gentleman open to criticism.

Mr. WARREN. I decline to yield further, Mr. Speaker.

Now, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] just stated, a third bill recommended by this investigation committee was to prohibit statements and publications advocating the overthrow of the Government by violence. That was reported out on August 21, 1935. Where is it? What is the matter with a bill of that nature? Why should not the House of Representatives have a right to vote upon it? The McCormack committee acted with due diligence. It reported out these measures as a result of its investigations, and the House was never permitted to consider anything they did.

Now, here is the irony of it: The same committee that either failed or refused to bring in rules to pass legislation as a result of that investigation now brings in this resolution today to continue the investigation. [Laughter and applause.] Ah, Mr. Speaker, why should the House of Representatives wish to do anything more to stir up racial and religious intolerance and bigotry throughout this Nation? [Applause.] Why should we again fan the flames for the personal gratification of someone who might wish to be on some investigating committee? [Applause.]

Here is a letter I received from the editor of one of the leading Jewish papers in America. It is dated March 26. It is from the editor of the American Hebrew. He says:

> Convinced that the present pressure on Members of the House of Representatives to secure congressional sanction for another investigation into un-American activities is unwarranted and unsupported by public sentiment, we beg to call to your attention the attached editorial from our current issue.
> Our views are based on first-hand contact with responsible Jewish opinion throughout the Nation as well as on the impression that Americans generally would prefer legislation in accordance with recommendations made some time ago by the House committee on un-American activities.
> We all realize the dangers of un-American propaganda, but we are convinced that those earlier recommendations provide amply for remedial legislation—if acted upon concertedly and without delay. Certainly, a fresh investigation would only tend to leave the gates open for a further influx of propagandists, not to speak of the known sinister activities of existing subversive factors.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Not now.

What are we going to investigate again? We have the Department of Justice in Washington. We have a Bureau of Investigation that is the pride of this Nation. We have postal inspectors who have made their mark throughout the history of the Post Office Department. If subversive movements are going on, if legislation is necessary, let us pass a law. If men are marching the streets of this country in alien uniforms, let us pass a law. Let us resurrect the bills which the able gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] brought out here at the last Congress and pass them, and not go ahead and create another investigating committee every time anyone says "boo!" at Congress. [Laughter and applause.]

I do not know anything about all this un-American stuff, Mr. Speaker. It does not exist in the section of the country that I come from. No crank or "crackpot" or alien or Fascist or Communist is going to undermine this Government. If this Nation is destroyed, if this Nation is undermined, if our form of government is ever changed, it is going to be by the duly elected representatives of the people, gathered here in the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I happened to be chairman of the special committee of the Seventy-third Congress, to which the distinguished gentleman and my personal friend the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] has referred. There is one observation that I want to make which I think overshadows legislative recommendations, and that is that in a democracy the power that is greater than anyone or anything, greater than President, Vice President, Senator, Congressman, Governor, or anyone else elected or appointed to public office, is "the public opinion of the United States." When you start investigating organizations engaged in subversive activities the greatest results that can be obtained from such committees is the arousing of public opinion. If a committee accomplishes that purpose, so far as beneficial results are concerned, it has rendered generally the greatest service possible.

Subversive activities oftentimes operate in a manner so that they cannot be legislated against without invading clearly the constitutional rights of freedom of speech and freedom of the press. Where to draw the line of demarcation from a legislative angle is difficult to determine, because legislation might be recommended and invariably would have to be recommended that would interfere with organizations and activities that are absolutely consistent with our ideals of government.

If a condition exists which requires investigation, in order to present the evidence obtained to the American public to form public opinion, then it should be done without regard to what the legislative results are.

The committee of which I was chairman made 6 proposals out of over 50 proposals before us. Some of them I would not support. I may differ with people, but if they are acting within the law I will insist upon their constitutional rights being protected.

I recognize the right of any person or any movement to advocate anything that they want to under our constitutional set-up, subject to the law of libel and slander, so long as they do it within the law, so long as they do not advocate the immediate or ultimate overthrow of our Government by force and violence. When anybody undertakes to say that a bill making it a crime to "willfully and knowingly to advocate the overthrow of Government by force and violence" is "crackpot" legislation, I challenge that statement. [Applause.) Since when is it "crackpot" legislation to propose a bill making it a crime for a person to "willfully and knowingly to advocate the overthrow of Government by force and violence"? That bill was reported out of the Judiciary Committee but could not get a hearing before the Rules Committee.

Of the recommendations made by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities, five were legislative and one was not legislative. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] has correctly stated the situation from that angle. I think four bills were reported out of the committee, but at least three were reported out. One has become law.

As a result of our investigation, valuable information from an immigration angle was obtained, and became the basis of legislative consideration by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. One bill is now pending before the Committee on Foreign Affairs. This committee, however, has been exceedingly busy with important legislation, and I have refrained from asking them for a hearing, because I appreciated the fact that the committee was so busy. This session and last session they have devoted practically their entire attention to neutrality legislation. When the neutrality bill is out of the way I am going to ask for a hearing before the Foreign Affairs Committee on a bill which I introduced carrying out one of the recommendations of the committee.

Our recommendations were consistent with our ideals of our Government. It must be remembered that a special committee must be very careful in the making of legislative recommendations, because if they are not they will make recommendations which conflict with the constitutional rights which every one of us possess.

The great value of investigating committees of this kind, as I see them, is to obtain the evidence of a subversive nature and give it to the American people, to bring these subversive activities out into the open. If this is done, the public opinion of this country will be aroused in the right direction. The committee of which I was chairman operated for only 6 months. We never had one adverse editorial criticism. Thousands of editorials complimented the committee.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. No elements of the American people were under investigation by this committee. This committee had the confidence of all of the people who were interested in and concerned about the investigation. The committee specifically complimented the Americans of German blood in this country. Because of the fact that nazi-ism was under investigation the committee in its report specifically complimented the approximately 20,000,000 Americans of German blood in this country. We were not investigating them. We were investigating the small group that was trying to transport from Germany to this country vicious persecution, which was trying to array American against American because of difference of religion and blood.

Mr. Speaker, the great value that a special committee of this kind will have to the people and to our country is the arousing of public opinion against subversive activities and in stalwart support of our constitutional and democratic processes of government. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I was a member of the McCormack committee. I yield to no man in paying proper deference to the chairman of that committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. McCORMACK, who has just addressed us; but in spite of that I find myself unable to support this resolution. In the first place, I am opposed to the expenditure of the money necessary to carry on this investigation. It is not wise to spend $50,000 or $75,000 on this investigation. The investigation that our committee made 3 years ago cost the Government approximately $30,000. We brought out enough evidence upon which to build all the legislation necessary. This proposed investigation is for the purpose of gaining information upon which to build additional legislation. I maintain that we already have such information. I think that if the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. McCORMACK, and the distinguished gentleman, Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee, will get together and from the wealth of information that they already have, present legislation to cover this situation. And if they will advocate the same as forcibly and eloquently as they have spoken today, I think the House will support it. Why waste this money? I am against it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

LET US PREVENT WAVE OF ANTISEMITIC PROPAGANDA

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I think we have arrived at the place now where this resolution is going to be defeated. That is the way it looks to me, although I do not know.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this resolution proposed by Mr. DICKSTEIN is a very dangerous thing. I have mentioned before that I have received scurrilous letters about the Jews. Of course, I receive scurrilous letters about everything, including myself. These ill-advised letters are only a beginning to what will come if we pass this resolution.

I am very fearful of this resolution. If it is passed it will have the tendency to start a wave of anti-Semitic propaganda all over this country. I believe the resolution is ill-advised, and of no good purpose whatsoever.

If you want to do Mr. DICKSTEIN a favor, if you want to stand by the Jews of this country, as well as all other citizens, you ought to vote this resolution down.

Mr. Speaker, the Army of the United States has the best intelligence department in the world. The Navy also has a good intelligence department; in fact, I think it is a little better. Mr. J. Edgar Hoover has a fine secret-service department. We have the Department of Justice. This Nation is in no danger.

AH, THE GENTLEMAN WITH A SWASTIKA ON HIS CHEST

This is nothing but a witch-hunt, that is all it is. The last time they were hunting Communists. This time they are going to hunt Fascists. All we ought to do is to have Mr. DICKSTEIN get up and have somebody parade before him with a swastika in front of him, get plenty of pictures, and end the whole business. That would be best for all.

DICKSTEIN RESOLUTION A BOOMERANG OF INTOLERANCE

Mr. Speaker, seriously, this is a dangerous thing. The resolution goes on to say,

> Slanderous or libelous un-American propaganda of religious, racial, or subversive political prejudices.

That covers everything on the face of the earth.

Let the proponents of the bill beware. It may be a boomerang of intolerance, and return to curse those who favor it. Kill this resolution. Cut it down.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I agree with preceding speakers who have stated there is absolutely no justification or necessity for the passage of this legislation. The gentleman from New York has on a number of occasions, if quoted correctly in the press, stated he knows several hundred in our country who are carrying on subversive activities against this Government. May I ask the gentleman from New York if he has submitted those names to the Department of Justice?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have submitted a lot of lists to the Department of Justice and they are helpless. They want some witnesses to testify under oath, so that they may follow some of these agitators right on down the line.

Mr. KNUTSON. The Department of Justice refuses to follow a lot of old women's tales. They are to be commended.

Mr. Speaker, I am not one of those who looks under the bed upon retiring at night, expecting to find a Communist or Fascist.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Or an Irishman.

Mr. KNUTSON. They will take the Irish in before they get through, especially the Hibernians.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to my good friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I correct an erroneous impression that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] unintentionally created? The Department of Justice has no authority to make an investigation unless there is involved the violation of a Federal law. The only law with reference to communism has to do with conspiracy, where two or more persons conspire to violate a Federal statute. They have absolutely no authority otherwise. They did have some authority during and shortly after the war in this respect, but the appropriations were taken away from them after the war.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I have known of a number of investigating committees in my time, and I do not recall any that has brought forth substantial results, except to afford the membership an opportunity to go around the country, live at the best hotels at the expense of the taxpayer, and indulge in a lot of self-glorification. May I say that one or two of these special committees which have been appointed by this House have degenerated into rackets. Indeed, they threaten to become a national scandal. Where are you going to stop under this resolution?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Name those committees.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am not going to.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Why not?

Mr. KNUTSON. Because I think the gentleman is intelligent enough to know what has been going on, and I do not want to insult his intelligence.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution should be overwhelmingly defeated. I am sorry that the racial question has been brought up today, because it has no place on the floor of this American Congress. I realize, however, that in view of what has transpired in the past it was inevitable that it should come up, although I may say to the House that a very considerable element of the Jewish people are opposed to this resolution, and in support of that statement I at this point insert a portion of a leading editorial from the American Hebrew, a leading Jewish magazine, in its issue of March 26:

> Another congressional investigation of racial, religious, and "subversive political" propaganda is being sought, although American Jewry at large does not want it.
>
> The House Rules Committee has been belabored by Representative SAMUEL DICKSTEIN, of New York, all session for approval of his latest investigatorial resolution. What the House itself will do is undetermined, but the powerful Rules Committee may not be able to withstand the strong artificial pressure.
> If you believe as we do that the bigotry and intolerance of the ages cannot be stopped by a congressional head-hunting expedition; that American Jewry's best interests will not be furthered by a daily parade in the papers of anti-Jewish drivel; if you believe sufficient is known about the situation to warrant not investigation but new laws—then get in touch with your Congressman and tell him so. Tell him, moreover, that sufficient effective legislation, if passed, is contained in the recommendations of the original House Committee on Un-American Activities, which were as follows:
> "1. That Congress should enact a statute requiring all publicity, propaganda, or public relations agents or other agents or agencies, who represent in this country any foreign government or a foreign political party or foreign industrial or commercial organization, to register with the Secretary of State of the United States, and to state name and location of such foreign employer, the character of the service to be rendered, and the amount of compensation paid or to be paid therefor.
>
> "2. That Congress should enact a statute conferring upon the Secretary of Labor authority to shorten or terminate the stay in this country of any visitor admitted here under temporary visa, whenever in the judgment of the Secretary such visitor shall engage in the promotion or dissemination of propaganda or engage in political activity in the United States.
>
> "3. We recommend negotiation by the State Department, in collaboration with the Department of Labor, of treaties and agreements with foreign nations by which such nations shall agree to receive back any persons entering this country from such foreign nation at any time such immigrant shall become subject to deportation under our laws.
>
> "4. That Congress will make it unlawful to advise, counsel, or urge any member of the military or naval forces of the United States to disobey the laws or regulations governing such forces.
> "5. That Congress shall enact necessary legislation enabling the United States attorneys outside of the District of Columbia to proceed against witnesses who refuse to answer questions, or refuse to produce documents and records, or refuse to appear, or who in any other manner hold in contempt the authority of any congressional committee vested with the powers herein described at any time during the official life of the committee.

"6. That Congress shall make it unlawful for any person to advocate changes in a manner that incites to the overthrow or destruction by force and violence of the Government of the United States, or of the form of government guaranteed to the several States by article IV of the Constitution of the United States."

Those of the Jewish faith who advocate the proposed investigation are rendering a distinct disservice to their kinsmen in other lands. This constant agitation can only be to their hurt.

We want none of this in our country. Here all should be free to live their own lives, so long as they do not conflict with our laws. In this land of the free there is no place for religious and racial prejudice; but let me warn my friend from New York that such ill-tempered statements as he has frequently made against the German people can only work to the injury of his coreligionists in other lands and perhaps ultimately in this country. I fear that this very serious subject is being made a football by designing and unscrupulous politicians and ultimately may result in untold suffering among millions of innocent people.

I join with the American Hebrew in asking for the defeat of this legislation, and I do so because I have an abhorrence for the evil consequences that its passage would inevitably bring about.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, may I call the attention of the House to the fact that when an appropriation bill came up for consideration a short time ago this House went into a great dither about a legislative limitation in that bill which would preclude committees of Congress from going down to the departments and siphoning people out of those departments and using the regular appropriations for that purpose.

Now, if you will examine the language of this bill on the bottom of page 2 and the top of page 3, you will find that this investigating committee would be authorized to draw upon the employees and the facilities of the Department of Justice and the Post Office Department. Under this bill they could siphon almost every member of the F. B. I. out of the Department of Justice and exhaust their regular appropriation, making no accounting for it. The proposed committee could impound the services of the G-men and divert them from their regular duties. If that is not an abuse, I never saw an abuse in the history of legislation in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY].

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, when the original investigation of this type came up 2 years ago, I opposed the investigation, because I believe it is impossible to fight persecution with persecution, and that it is impossible to fight bigotry with bigotry and expect any success or benefit to our country. There is no need for bringing upon the floor of this House any resolution which questions the Americanism of anybody. I regretted very much to hear a Member of this House say there are such things as American names. I represent a district which has many people of foreign birth, and they are just as good Americans as anybody in this House.

I hope this resolution will be defeated, because all it will do is stir up again the racial prejudice this country happily in the last few years seems to have discarded and forgotten about.

May I also point out that although the committee which was previously created recommended five bills, the gentleman who introduced this resolution never filed a discharge petition to bring out a single one of the bills and never made a move which would give us a chance under the rules to vote on the bills his own investigating committee recommended. If he is so interested in putting through legislation to stop these un-American activities he claims exist, he should get busy on these bills and forget about any further investigations.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am not particularly enamored of this resolution. I developed my objections to it in the Committee on Rules, but they were overcome by evidence which I thought most impressive. We know, Mr. Speaker, that a controversy has been running on for a long time which has been most disturbing to large groups of our people, and which the good of the whole demands should be brought to an end. There are those, Mr. Speaker, who believe the particular propaganda to which reference has been made is fostered by certain governments. I do not believe that. I believe the activities referred to in most instances are rackets that are being engineered by certain individuals. This investigation would at least develop the truthfulness of charges made with respect to these activities. It would tend, in my opinion, to bring about a better understanding and a more friendly relation between these particular groups. The purpose of the resolution is to investigate un-American propaganda which tends to incite the use of force and violence. In that respect the resolution meets all the demands of those who have objected to its adoption, expressing preference for a resolution to investigate communism in this country. Communism is un-American, and these other subversive activities referred to are un-American. Again, the resolution provides for the investigation of un-American activities in this country.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, the good of the country, and particularly the peace of mind of a very large group of our citizenry would be well served if this resolution were adopted and the investigation called for properly conducted. I hope, Mr. Speaker, the House will see fit to adopt the resolution, because I believe this large group to which I have referred will be sorely disappointed, and fairly so, if the House takes unfavorable action upon it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If the motion for the previous question is defeated, the resolution will then be open for amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is well informed.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. If we vote down the motion for the previous question, then, the Speaker states, the resolution will be open for amendment. Will we then be under the 5-minute rule? Will the rest of us who are opposed to the resolution be enabled to speak on it or offer amendments?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Being in the House, its consideration will be under the 1-hour rule.

Mr. RANKIN. Then every Member who rose to speak would be recognized for 1 hour? I am for that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Any Member recognized by the Chair would be entitled to recognition for 1 hour.

The gentleman from Indiana moves the previous question on the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the preferential motion of the gentleman from North Carolina to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. GREENWOOD)—ayes 184, nays 38.

So the motion to lay the resolution on the table was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. WARREN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was tabled was laid on the table.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, in a few minutes another resolution for an investigation will be called up. It deals with the sit-down strike. I, of course, am opposed to sit-down strikes. I condemn and denounce them as lawless and un-American, and stand ready to vote for any proper declaration of policy affecting them. I am opposed, however, to a congressional investigation, for there is no Federal question involved.

The word has gone out on the minority side of the Chamber that all those gentlemen who joined with us just now in defeating one resolution should stand up and vote for the next resolution, for they think it might tend to embarrass the present administration.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WARREN. I said the minority side of the House.

Mr. COX. I was wondering if the gentleman meant to put the administration on record on this proposition?

Mr. WARREN. I cannot yield. I did not say so.

Under this rule there is 1 hour of debate, which is controlled entirely by the Committee on Rules. The gentleman from Georgia informed me yesterday he had allotted at least 20 of his 30 minutes to those in favor of the resolution. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] to say this morning he had tentatively allotted 25 of his 30 minutes to those favoring the resolution.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman decline to yield?

Mr. WARREN. I decline to yield.

Mr. COX. He ought to yield, because I offered him time.

The regular order was again demanded.

Mr. WARREN. I have nothing further to say on this subject. I do not desire any more time; but in the spirit of fairness, this time ought to be extended so it could be equally divided between those who are in favor of and those who are opposed to this resolution. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ELLENBOGEN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

INVESTIGATION OF SIT-DOWN STRIKES

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 162 for immediate consideration.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FRED M. VINSON). For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. BOILEAU. To propound a unanimous-consent request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the consideration of the resolution that is now about to be brought up the time for debate be extended 1 hour, and that one-half of the additional time be yielded to those who are opposed to the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that there is nothing before the House at this time.

Mr. BOILEAU. I refer, Mr. Speaker, to the resolution which will be brought up, House Resolution 162, and ask, when that resolution is brought up, the time be extended 1 hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. At the appropriate time the gentleman may submit his request.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is not this the proper time to make the request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not; the resolution is not before the House.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will I be recognized at the time the measure is called up?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 162 for present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas an epidemic of sit-down strikes is sweeping the Nation and threatening the very foundations of orderly government; and

Whereas many of such sit-down strikes are accompanied by refusal on the part of the strikers to permit the owners of the property to enter their property or to have access to their files or to exercise any of the prerogatives of lawful ownership; and

Whereas such sit-down strikes are doing infinitely more harm to the cause of labor than to the cause of industry and will likely produce a public reaction which will set back the cause of labor for another decade; and

Whereas it has been reported that some of the participants in these sit-down strikes have gone so far as to picket the courthouses and interfere with the orderly administration of justice; and

Whereas it is imperative that the Congress of the United States shall know the cause or causes of such sit-down strikes and what influences are producing same; and

Whereas it has been reported that some of these sit-down strikes are engineered by some who wish to discredit labor in the eyes of the American people; and

Whereas it is imperative that Congress shall investigate the whole situation from every angle and, as the same affects management, stockholders, and employees, to determine not only the causes but to immediately determine what steps the Federal Government can take to remedy this deplorable situation; and

Whereas such strikes have become Nation-wide in scope and directly influence the free movement of commerce from one State to another and from one section to another; and

Whereas labor is losing millions of dollars in consequence of such sit-down strikes: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a special committee to be composed of seven members, not more than five of whom may be from the same political party, for the purpose of conducting an investigation of facts regarding (1) the cause or causes producing such sit-down strikes; (2) the truth as to actual conduct of all parties to such strike, including the management and those acting under the management as well as those who take part in the strike; (3) upon whose advice and instigation such sit-down strikes were called and carried on; (4) the true condition in the affected industries in reference to wages, hours of work, and other conditions under which the employees are compelled to work; (5) the charges that the management of such affected industries have employed agents to perpetrate violence upon their employees; (6) the efforts made by the local and State authorities to prevent such sit-down strikes; (7) and all other charges which have been made or will be made by the representatives of labor on the one hand and the management of industry on the other so that a full, complete, and impartial finding of facts may be had; (8) and all other questions in relation thereto that would assist Congress in the immediate enactment of necessary remedial legislation.

Such special committee when organized is hereby authorized to request the fullest cooperation in the conduct of this investigation from the Department of Labor and the Department of Justice, and such other departments of the Government that the committee may deem necessary, including access to all files from such departments pertinent to the investigation, and use of such employees and facilities of such departments as may be advantageous to the conduct of such investigation.

That said special committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such records, books, papers, and documents, by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony as it may deem necessary.

Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives at the request of the chairman and shall be served by the Sergeant at Arms of the House or any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses.

Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, or who, having been required to produce records, books, papers, and documents pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, fails or refuses to produce such required records, books, papers, and documents, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 192), as amended.

Mr. COX and Mr. BOILEAU rose.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, in view of the very great interest in this resolution which has been manifested here on the floor of the House, I feel justified in asking unanimous consent that the debate be extended 1 hour, making a total of 2 hours of debate on the resolution.

Mr. ANDREWS and Mr. MARTIN of Colorado rose.

Mr. ANDREWS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. COX. Then I may say in connection with this request, Mr. Speaker, that with the time at my disposal I shall undertake to divide the time equally between those for and against the resolution, and I hope the same course will be followed by the gentleman controlling the time for the minority.

Mr. ANDREWS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. COX. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, this is an important resolution, and in view of some statements that have been made here, I ask unanimous consent that the time may be extended 30 minutes, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do this simply for the purpose of correcting the RECORD as it now stands. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] a short time ago made the statement I had said that 25 minutes of the 30 minutes allocated to this side was to be given to those who are supporting the resolution. I know the gentleman did not purposely make a misstatement and it was due to a misunderstanding. I never knew exactly how my time was to be divided until the debate started.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I just came into the Chamber. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I did not hear all the gentleman said. If I misunderstood him, I am sorry and regret very much that I got the wrong impression.

Mr. COX. Will not the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me for the purpose of asking the gentleman from North Carolina a question?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman from North Carolina recall that in the reading room here on yesterday he stated to me he wanted 3 minutes' time?

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

Mr. COX. And I finally consented to give it to the gentleman out of my time?

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman finally consented to give me 2 minutes.

Mr. COX. Did I not tell the gentleman, as we stepped out of the room and were joking with one another, that I would give him the 3 minutes?

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman told me 2 minutes and I told him I did not care for it, and the gentleman told me the only one he had agreed to yield time to who was opposed to it was the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN], to whom he had agreed to yield 10 minutes.

Mr. COX. Yes; Mr. Harlan is a member of the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I object, Mr. Speaker. If we can get only 30 minutes, we do not want any time. It is very obvious the Rules Committee think they can shove this resolution down our throats without any debate. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, may I repeat my unanimous-consent request to extend the time for debate by 1 hour with the understanding the time shall be equally divided between those for and against the resolution?

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I would like to renew my unanimous-consent request to extend the time for debate by 1 hour with the understanding that the time shall be divided equally between those for and against the resolution.

Mr. ANDREWS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. With pleasure.

Mr. TARVER. If it is the desire of the House to have additional time notwithstanding these objections, by voting down the previous question, it could have additional time.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. COX. Only for the purpose of submitting a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended for one-half hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] is recognized.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, this resolution rests upon the assumption that the sit-down strike, which involves the holding of other people's property without their consent and against their will, is unlawful. The proposal is to investigate the cause of such strikes and place responsibility, in order that the public may be informed and the basis laid for legislation, either State or Federal, probably both, as some such practices may come within the jurisdiction of one sovereign and some the other.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COX. I cannot. But, aside from all this, a moral responsibility rests somewhere and upon somebody to speak up and condemn this form of lawlessness that threatens the peace and security of the Nation, and it might as well be here and upon this body as any other. [Applause.]

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I cannot.

No Member should vote for this resolution who believes that the laborer, in the enforcement of his demands, has the legal right to seize and hold the property of his employer in an effort to force compliance with his demands. But for those who believe that such a seizure is trespass, and when used for purposes of compulsion is extortion, that it is contrary to law and good morals, then there should be no hesitation, but each should be eager to express himself and thereby place this branch of the Congress on the side of law and order. [Applause.]

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. No; I do not yield.

There is nothing in the resolution that is unfriendly to labor [laughter], except where labors favors the employment of illegal weapons in the effort to enforce rights, and this labor does not do. It is freely said that the sit-down strike is the result of alien influences in the ranks of labor. This I do not know, but I do know that the cause of labor demands the immediate expulsion from its ranks of all who preach, as well as all who practice, such lawlessness, for no organization can live, or ought to live, that flagrantly violates the rights of others or contemptuously defies the law. These communistic sit-down strikes should turn to the record of railway labor for a lesson from which they could profit.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. No.

This talk about being against the resolution because of a lack of power in the Congress to legislate with respect to the evil is a mere pretense of concern in the maintenance of State rights. Gentlemen who take this position today will tomorrow contend that the Federal Government should go into the States and exercise police powers which are peculiarly the prerogatives of local government. The opposition to this measure arises out of a disinclination to displease labor, and everybody knows it.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution presents an opportunity to the membership of this House to stand up and be counted either on the side of law and order or on the side of a government by lawless mobs. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia has consumed 6 minutes.

Mr. BERNARD. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BERNARD. Is this a democratic body or what is it? Is Mussolini or Hitler ruling here or what?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

ANOTHER OVERLORD SEEKS TO EXERCISE AUTHORITY IN THE PRINCIPALITY OF MICHIGAN

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I request that I be not interrupted.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] a few moments ago made the statement that we on the Republican side of the House voted against the resolution then pending but would later vote for this resolution in order to embarrass the President. That statement is decidedly unfair, is unworthy of the gentleman from North Carolina, and I am sure it is not in accord with the facts. The gentleman might at least credit those on this side and those on the Democratic side who voted "no" on the other resolution and who may vote "yes" on this resolution, with the same desire to serve our country that he claims for himself.

Sooner or later this House will be called upon to pass legislation having to do with labor troubles. We have the Wagner Act. That is on the books. During all these strikes it never was invoked by labor. My understanding is it could not be invoked by the employers.

Admitting that everything that has been charged against the employer as being improper is true, the fact remains that we have had these strikes, and the loss in wages alone ran as high as $1,000,000 a day for more than 40 days. This in the Flint strikes.

In the more recent Chrysler strike, the loss was more than $10,000,000 in wages, with a loss to retail merchants of Detroit and vicinity of $6,000,000, and to wholesalers of $7,750,000.

Nor is that the worst of the situation. After many days of conference, a solemn, written agreement was made between the corporation and the union that further sit-down strikes would not be countenanced, that production would not be interfered with.

Notwithstanding that agreement, strike after strike has occurred in the plants of General Motors during the period in which it was agreed that there would be none.

The following is a statement of the date of the strikes, the places where they occurred, the department of the factory, the time when the strike was called, the man-hours lost, and the number of employees involved:

Strikes in General Motors plants between date of settlement and Apr. 2, 1937

Does not this demonstrate the need for detailed and accurate information as to the cause underlying the present situation?

It must be assumed, for the sake of the argument, that all parties who entered into this agreement intended to comply with its terms. Then why was that agreement so repeatedly violated?

What are we going to do about it? Do we want the facts? Do we want to know whether or not just a few days ago, when Martin, a labor leader in Detroit, said they were going to put out of Michigan Reuther, Kraus, and Mortimer because of their "red" tendencies, he was correct or he was wrong? Do we want to know whether these strikes are caused by conditions which justify them; whether there is some excuse; or do we want to legislate in ignorance?

Do we want to know whether these strikes are the product, as some of the labor leaders have themselves stated, of "red" agitators within their ranks, or whether they are justified and are called, notwithstanding the agreement, on the order of the officers of the union?

In fairness to the officers of the union, we should cast aside all rumors, all newspaper reports, and ascertain for ourselves just who called these strikes, who participated in them, and the reason for such action.

Do we want to shut our eyes and close our ears and refuse to listen, or do we want to accept what the newspapers say or what comes from merely prejudiced or biased sources?

ANOTHER OVERLORD SEEKS TO EXERCISE AUTHORITY IN THE PRINCIPALITY OF MICHIGAN

A principality is a territory parcelled out to a prince. When the President called Murphy back from the Philippine Islands to be elected Governor of Michigan he assigned that territory to him.

Murphy's success in refusing to give to the people of Michigan their rights under the Constitution of the United States, his success in preventing the enforcement of the law when the citizens of Flint, when the police officers of that city, when the sheriff of that city, would have dispossessed those who held unlawful possession of the factories of that city and the streets of that city, has emboldened those with red tendencies within the ranks of the C. I. O.

It was a C. I. O. organizer who told police, when the big mass meeting was to be held in Cadillac Square in Detroit, that they might have authority to direct traffic. It was another of these leaders, who places himself above the law, who made the statement that he did not place the sit-downers in the factory and that he would not tell them to get out.

Here is a new statement, a new claim to arbitrary power. A headline of today's papers, in bold type, states, "Unionization or No Autos, Ford Told." The news report quotes Frankensteen, one of the chiefs in the automobile union, with saying, "Henry will either recognize the union or he won't build automobiles", and he points, as reason for his statement, to the submission of General Motors to previous demands.

Now listen to this statement again, it is: "Ford will either recognize the union or he won't build automobiles." Who is this man and with what authority does he speak?

The President of the United States speaks by virtue of the power granted by the people through their lawmakers and the Constitution. Congress enacts laws because of the power granted by the people. The Federal courts, the Federal marshals, derive their authority from that conferred upon them by the people. The governors of the States derive their authority from the State constitutions and the laws enacted by the legislatures of the States. So, too, do the sheriffs, the constables of the various counties.

But here comes a man who has no authority, yet he assumes to speak with authority. I am familiar with the law of Michigan which requires me to obtain a license from the secretary of state in order that I may drive my automobile. I know that if I want to sell liquor I must have a license from the liquor commission. And so on, through innumerable instances, permission from some officer created and recognized by the law must be obtained.

But think of this, you citizens of Michigan, and you, too, of the South, where the sit-down strike has not yet made its force felt. Why is it that in this country Frankensteen or anyone else can say that Henry Ford shall not make automobiles unless he does thus or so?

Frankensteen does not work for Ford; he does not speak for the workers in Ford's plants. Ford is the man who established the minimum wage. He is the man who has been labor's friend, and so recognized the world over. Those employed in his factories are making no complaint about anything.

Yet here comes a rank outsider and says that the whole works must stop unless Ford bows the head and bends the knee.

Verily, we have another man aspiring to authority, challenging the rule or nonrule of Governor Murphy, of Lewis.

Sometimes I have wondered what would have happened had General Motors, Chrysler, and Ford all closed their factories when the first General Motors strike was called at Flint.

If a declaration like this can be permitted to pass unchallenged, and if later an attempt is made to enforce that demand and the Ford factories are closed not because of any ill treatment by Ford of those employed but because he will not recognize Frankensteen, Lewis, or some other man who happens to be in power in the union at that particular time, then upon our shoulders will rest the responsibility for our failure to legislate to prevent such happenings.

Do you stand for that doctrine? If you do, that is all there is to it. Liberty of action is at an end, and no man will engage in industry, nor will industry endeavor to give employment, if it is subject to such a demand.

I will go one step further: I call your attention to a little factory up in the northeast corner of Michigan, at Algonac, the Chris-Craft. There were 600 workers in that factory, 600 men and women who were satisfied with their conditions; and the town went to considerable trouble to get that factory in there. During all these years it has operated to the satisfaction of the owners and to the satisfacion of the workers; yet on the 20th day of March 60 of the workers pulled a sit-down strike.

So far as shown by newspaper accounts, there were no demands for higher wages, no complaints as to working conditions or hours presented to the management. Apparently it was a sit-down strike to compel recognition.

Five hundred and forty of the workers wanted to go down and throw the sit-downers out and continue with their work. But being law-abiding citizens, they yielded to the pleas of the officials of the village and refrained from action.

Once again the wordy Governor Murphy was called upon. The strike is still on. The text of the company's statement is as follows. Read it, ponder, and then decide for yourselves whether something must not soon be done in this land of ours.

On March 20, 1937, Chris-Craft Corporation closed its plants to avoid violence between 540 employees who wished to go back to work and approximately 60 agitators who started a picket line. Since that time the picket line has continued to hold our plants and offices unlawfully, making it impossible to resume operations without violence.

The management of Chris-Craft Corporation feels at this time it is to the best interest of our employees that they be advised to seek employment elsewhere, as the operation of our plants will not be resumed until we have possession of our plants and offices and there is law and order in this vicinity. Office employees and executives are being notified of the termination of their employment.

The management wishes to express appreciation of the loyalty of 540 of our employees, representing 90 percent of our total employees, in their cooperation in an attempt to open our plant.

CHRIS-CRAFT CORPORATION,
By JAY W. SMITH, President.

You can get some idea of how the people of that vicinity feel about sit-down strikes when you look at the election returns from the first division of Clay Township, which cast 111 votes for the Democratic candidate for supreme court judge and 378 for a Republican candidate for the same office. Or go down to Yale Township, where they had a sit-down strike, and 203 votes were cast for the same Democratic candidate while 533 were cast for the Republican candidate.

Now, you men who talk in favor of labor and say that a man has the right to work—what about the 540 in the Chris-Craft plant? What are you going to do about them? Are you going to let that condition go unchallenged? Are you going to let the Governor of the State, who would not maintain order, continue in his nonenforcement policy? Are you going to let him force all laborers into the C. I. O. organization whether they wish to join or wish to remain free agents?

What happened the other day? Lewis is reported to have said that if this violence did not cease, that if these strikes continued—referring to the violation of the agreement entered into by the union not to strike in the General Motors situation—that he would call in his flying squadron of strong-arm men from the United Mine Workers to maintain order.

Think of the situation! A Governor who refuses to permit the sheriff of Genesee County to maintain order in that community, who refuses to permit him to enforce the lawful orders of the court; and the leader of the C. I. O., who boldly announces that the strong-arm men of his own organization will enforce his—not the law's—mandates.

Frankensteen will force Ford, willy-nilly, to recognize the union. Murphy will force the workers into the C. I. O., and Lewis will bring in his sluggers to see that the program is carried out. Just how far is it from where we now are in this matter to mob rule or to a successful revolution? Just what rights have the workers and the manufacturers of Michigan at the present time?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Does the gentleman want to know——

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, have I the floor or has the gentleman from Colorado? I decline to yield.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. So there you have the question in the organization itself through the statement of the head of the union itself. Do you want to know what the facts are or do you not want to know? Do you want to go ahead and legislate blindly or do you want information so that we may legislate intelligently?

And I call to your attention that Flint, in Genesee County, last year went 30,000 for the Democratic candidate. That county this week went 3,500 to 4,000 the other way. Which shows what? It shows what the people think of the sit-down strike.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman want to know?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield.

Mr. SADOWSKI. I want to correct a misstatement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the request of the gentleman that he be not interrupted. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is a fair example. I suppose you all think I am talking politics now, do you not? [Laughter.] All right, I am not talking politics. We have factories in my district, we have workingmen there. Can you not conceive of anything except a political talk? It shows the difference in the sentiment of the people between the time they voted on national policies and the present time. It shows what they think of the sit-down strikes.

What happened up in Pennsylvania? Do you want more of that? No; I am not in favor of violence; but you know what happened at that plant at Hershey. There was angry dissatisfaction on the part of the farmers, and into the factory they went, and they threw out the sit-down strikers and they restored the market for their milk.

The very bloodshed which Murphy said he wished to prevent will follow in the wake of the procedure instituted by him. All over this land this epidemic of sit-down strikes, if it continues, will be followed by violence, by fights between those who insist upon their right to work and those who seek to deprive the workers of their jobs. The fight will be laborer against laborer, worker against worker, not industrialists against workers.

Let us get the facts, let us know where we are, and then let us pass legislation that not only will protect labor but will protect everybody equally.

Mr. DINGELL. Faker.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Now, you call me faker. Be man enough, have courage enough, to come down into the Well of the House and make that statement, or make it off the floor of the House; come outside and make it; make it in the corridor, or remain silent. Do not sit there and mumble.

You come from Detroit, where the authorities went in and sent a number of your people to the State penitentiary for fraud in the Detroit and Wayne election. You come from Detroit, where the law has been defied; where anarchy and rebellion have prevailed for weeks; where thousands of workingmen have been deprived of their jobs; where your retail merchants have been deprived of business; where your wholesalers have lost upward of $7,000,000; where housewives, who need money for their groceries, have been unable to get it from their husbands' checks because you permitted these outsiders to come in and take possession of the factories. You sit in this House and you remain silent. You dare not raise your voice for justice and for right, for the protection of the honest workingman.

A vote in favor of this resolution is notice to the world that we do not approve of the sit-down strike. Any other vote will be construed by many as approval of the failure to enforce the law, of the methods employed at Flint and Detroit.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yields back 2 minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am trying to divide the time at my disposal evenly as between those for and those against the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege based on the remarks of the last speaker, and ask for 1 hour.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I did not yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. HOOK. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I then insist upon my right to rise to a question of personal privilege. The gentleman threatened us.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan cannot take the gentleman from Georgia off the floor by raising a question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOOK. The gentleman yielded 30 seconds to me.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I know the gentleman will not break faith with me. He asked me to yield him 30 seconds in order to propound a unanimous-consent request. I yielded to him for that purpose and that purpose only.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know where the gentleman from Michigan, and some of the other gentlemen who are so much interested in these sit-down strikes, were before. I happen to be the first one to have raised the question of sit-down strikes, and I condemned them as anarchy. I so condemn them today. I was requested from a number of different sources to introduce a resolution to investigate these strikes, and I informed those who suggested such action that I was not a demagogue and was not looking for publicity. In my opinion, an investigation would do more harm than good. It will take 6 months or more to investigate—and, in the meantime, what will happen?

We as American citizens will take care of the sit-down strikes and we do not need to have any investigation which will just build up somebody in the newspapers. I believe the American people are strong enough in their attitude of justice and fairness and big enough in character to take care of sit-down strikes. Public opinion will end them. The farmers at Hershey, Pa., took care of them.

May I say to you that the sit-down strikes did not have anything to do with the election in Michigan. Michigan went Democratic this spring and it will go Democratic again at the next election. The sit-down strikes were brought about by the monopolistic price-fixing corporations that exist today. If democracy is to survive we must have law and order—and if we are going to have law and order, let us have law and order on both sides! [Applause.] Let us enforce the antitrust laws. Let us enforce the laws condemning monopolies that have been passed on the floor of this House. When we do that we will have law and order and we will save democracy, but not until then. America will not stand for any of the communistic movements behind the sit-down strikes. Neither will we condone fascism. Americanism and democracy, which are synonymous with justice, will prevail. In America the people will rule.

Vote down this resolution and save time and money. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I am not especially interested from a local standpoint in sit-down strikes. We do not have such strikes in my section of the country, unless we get tired and sit down under a shade tree. However, I am interested in the provisions of this resolution and the results which may follow if it is adopted.

May I call upon the membership of this House to strip this resolution of its "window dressing" and "whereases" and consider where we are going if we adopt the resolution. What right has the Congress of the United States to inquire into the efforts made by the local and State authorities to prevent sit-down strikes? What right has Congress to interfere in the local affairs of the communities, the States, and counties of this Nation?

May I call attention to some of the things it proposes to do? It proposes to take from the Committee on Labor in this House the responsibility of investigating labor conditions, maximum hours, and minimum wages. It proposes to take from the Department of Justice and every other law-enforcing agency of our Government the question of whether or not a conspiracy has been entered into by both labor and employers. May I say in all frankness the American people are just about fed up on the proposition of Congress "nosing" into everything? [Applause.] We will have more trouble in this country just as long as we undertake to deprive the communities of their rights of local self-government. The communities can settle these things. The communities can settle sit-down strikes, and they can settle most of their troubles. The trouble with us is we have undertaken to settle everything and have settled nothing.

Every Member of this House has his own opinion as to what should be done in reference to the lawless conditions existing in our Nation. I am not defending the action of the sit-down strikers nor of the employers of labor in the situations that have arisen over a great part of our Nation. During the last few years the Congress has undertaken to regulate everything; to define human rights and property rights, and to deprive the States and local communities of their rights to determine for themselves questions that specially affect their communities. No one would undertake to say that the action of the sit-down strikers has been or is legal. In my opinion, they have violated the laws of every State in which such strikes have occurred; but whose duty is it to enforce the law of the State? Certainly it is not the duty of the Congress. It is the duty of the State authorities, and every unlawful strike that has occurred in the United States could and should have been settled by the State authorities.

Labor has certain rights guaranteed to it under the laws of the United States, as well as under the laws of the various States. Employers have certain rights, likewise so guaranteed, and so long as neither the employer nor labor violates the Federal laws Congress has no business of interfering in the strikes or in the troubles. If the Federal laws are violated, we have ample machinery to enforce those laws, and the Department of Justice can—and, I presume, would—enforce the law if it appears it is being violated. We do not render a service to our people when we undertake to remove from the people the power and the obligation resting upon them to maintain law and order in their own communities.

No good can be accomplished by such an investigation as is proposed by this resolution. It may cost the taxpayers a large sum of money and still nothing will be settled by such an investigation. We have ample laws already in existence to protect life, liberty, and property in this Nation. If property rights have been unlawfully interfered with by the sit-down strikers, or if the rights of the strikers have been or are being interfered with by capital, then they are entitled to the protection of the existing laws, and the machinery of the Government is ample to afford this protection.

More harm than good will result if this resolution in its present form is adopted.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, if we are going to stop these sit-down strikes that are now going on throughout the country, it seems to me the first sit-down strike we should stop is the one that is taking place right across the Capitol plaza, in which the Supreme Court has sat down on the Wagner Labor Disputes Act. [Applause.] Week after week, when the Court meets on Mondays to hand down decisions, the members of the press have been going over hoping that finally the Supreme Court may hand down its decision on the validity of the Wagner Labor Disputes Act, and week after week not only the press but the entire country has been disappointed. I submit, if the Supreme Court performed its duty and handed down that decision without regard to the political consequences so that the people of this country would know whether or not in the Court's opinion the Wagner Labor Disputes Act is constitutional, that would go a long way toward settling the sit-down strike situation in this country. In the first place, if the Court held it to be constitutional, then the employers would have no excuse to further deny labor the right to organize and bargain collectively. On the other hand, if the Court held that act to be unconstitutional, then we in Congress would have the responsibility of immediately reconsidering our previous action and could get to work and enact a bill which in our judgment would meet the objections of the Supreme Court.

Mr. Speaker, I submit the responsibility is squarely upon that Court to hand down this decision immediately and quit sitting down on a most important case.

I regret that in the very short period of time I cannot discuss at great length this important piece of legislation. I regret more than my own inability to have sufficient time, the inability to hear from other Members of the House, who are vitally interested in this subject and who will not have an opportunity to express themselves at all.

Mr. Speaker, it is a deplorable situation that in this House today we are discussing and formulating a policy for this Government on the one matter that is uppermost in the minds of the American people and we are doing it in only 1 hour, without a single Member of the House having the opportunity to offer an amendment to the resolution, unless perchance the gentleman from Georgia should yield for that purpose, and I have no reason to believe he will yield for that purpose. In other words, we must take this resolution as it is, discuss the whole problem of sit-down strikes, discuss the problem of the relationship between employer and labor, and discuss what our policy shall be for the future all in 1 hour and under a most vicious gag rule. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, of course, the manner in which this resolution is brought to us for consideration is not in violation of the rules of the House. It is brought up under the customary 1-hour debate, just as other matters coming from the Rules Committee. But because of the great importance of this subject the same Rules Committee that reported this resolution could also at the same time have passed another rule making it possible for us to have sufficient time to discuss the matter and could have provided the opportunity to offer amendments on the floor. I submit the manner in which this resolution has been brought up is sufficient in itself to cause the membership of the House to throw it back to the Rules Committee and tell them that we do not want this kind of practice in the future.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW].

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the resolution before us today for numerous reasons. First, because it is being "railroaded" through this body. There have been no hearings held upon this very important resolution. No written testimony is available to the Members of the House. In addition, it is being considered with 1 hour of general debate, without any amendments to the resolution permissible. The worst kind of strong-arm tactics are being resorted to.

I am opposed to the resolution for the further reason that the question involved here today is not a question of whether or not you believe or approve of sit-down strikes. The question presented in the resolution before us is, Shall we give authority to a committee of this Congress to meddle into affairs which properly should and do come under the jurisdiction of the respective States and of the local communities? If we do not vote this resolution down this investigation committee will come into being. It makes little difference who is appointed on the committee. I predict if the committee is permitted to function there will be a deluge of half truths printed in the press as to the testimony taken, which will create more bitterness between employers and employees than has been caused by any other act of Congress.

In my opinion, this act is ill-conceived, ill-advised, and inopportune. Certainly it has not been afforded mature and deliberate consideration. It can be compared to the Economy Act of 1933, which was a creature of the night, conceived behind closed doors, without any hearings being held upon it. It, too, was "railroaded" through this body with 1 hour debate, without any amendments being permitted.

Immediately after it was enacted into law we were compelled to devise ways and means whereby we could remedy the evils which had been created by reason of its mistaken passage. To you who voted for the Economy Act of 1933 and are fortunate enough to be here today, I say, remember that ever since you voted for that un-American measure you have either been explaining or apologizing for your vote.

The committee appointed under the authority of this resolution would also duplicate investigating activities now going on in the Senate.

If we are to adopt a policy of "railroading" through this body under "gag" rules measures of this type, we might much better close the doors of this Chamber and go home with bowed heads. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN].

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this resolution. I opposed it in the committee for two main reasons, first, that it is useless, and, second, that it is harmful.

The resolution is useless for the reason that Congress has no juridiction over the subject matter. The Supreme Court in deciding the case involving the Guffey-Snyder Coal Act used these words:

> Labor disputes—
>
> Such as result in sit-down strikes—
> are all local evils over which the Federal Government has no control.

It is my purpose if the previous question is voted down to introduce an amendment to this bill limiting the investigation to strikes in interstate transportation, which will bring it at least within the Constitution as construed by our present Supreme Court, but at the same time will emasculate the bill because there are no strikes in this field. If the motion for the previous question is voted down, we will have an additional hour for debate in the House, which I think is very much needed.

The resolution is also useless for the reason that the Senate has passed a concurrent resolution, which is yet to be voted on in the House, which will give us ample opportunity to condemn sit-down strikes if we feel like doing so. The concurrent resolution is drawn so as to cover the whole problem, so that we do not have to go out of our way as in this case to stir up trouble in order to voice our opposition to sit-down strikes.

The resolution is useless because the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] has already introduced bills to cover the ends sought to be achieved through this committee.

The resolution is also useless, Mr. Chairman, for the reason that the only legitimate or fair purpose which anyone could ascribe to this resolution is that it would have given us an opportunity to investigate subversive influences as affecting labor in this country. We have voted down the Dickstein resolution, which would have accomplished that purpose. We do not want an investigation into subversive influences; so all that is left in this resolution is a labor-baiting, snooping proposition. That is all there is to it. [Applause.] We are not interested in subversive influences in this country. We do not want to know about communism; we do not want to know about nazi-ism. We must be very much interested, though, if this resolution is passed, in an attempt to direct the condemnation of the House of Representatives against the activities of organized labor in their effort to get a living wage and recognition.

In addition to being useless, the resolution is harmful, because it is very poor politics; and I am going to talk now to the Democratic side of the House for just a minute. It is not necessary for me to go into details.

There are certain Members on our side of the House whose political success does not depend upon whether or not there is a national Democratic Party. Most of us, though, who constitute this great majority, come from sections of the country where conditions are such we do not want questions of this kind needlessly stirred up for political capital, and that is all there is to this. Why is it that the other side of the House is almost unanimously for this resolution? It seems to me when you cannot find the leadership of our party back of a resolution, and you find the opposition solidly in favor of it, you ought to want to look into the common sense of it. You ought not to have to look very closely into that rat hole for poison.

The resolution is also harmful because the animus of the whole thing is directed toward labor. They talk about investigating the whole thing, but you have heard the speeches. The man who introduced the resolution—and I like him very much—talked before this House and also before the movietone. You know why this resolution is wanted without any further argument. The resolution is contrary to an act we passed here just the other day, to strike at the La Follette investigating committee. We passed a resolution the other day requiring that no Federal employee should be used in any of these investigations.

Yet, on page 3 of the resolution there is a provision that all Government departments and all employees shall be subject to this committee, the exact opposite of the expression or sentiment of the House as expressed just a few days ago. We did not want the La Follette committee to have the Government aid in investigating subversive activities of employers, but we are asked to give such help in investigating labor.

The resolution interferes with State rights. There is not a State in this Union, so far as I know, that does not have laws against the appropriation of somebody else's property. When I see a gentleman like the gentleman from Georgia, who is always talking about State rights, getting up here and advocating the Federal Government going into the States and taking over their police power, it looks funny to me. [Laughter.]

The resolution is harmful, Mr. Speaker, because the net result of this investigation will be to nullify the beneficial effects of the investigation of the Committee on Labor and Education in another legislative body. This committee has so exposed labor conditions and espionage in this country that most abuses have been more or less curtailed up to the present time.

The industries, apparently, have stopped their effort to spend money to corrupt and undermine labor organizations, but now, if we start in on this snooping proposition here, they will have the strong arm of the Federal Government back of them, they will not be called upon to spend the money, and they will simply have in effect an Ogpu in the United States. This is no place for that kind of governmental activity.

The Chrysler Motor Corporation and General Motors Corporation in the last couple of years have spent over $1,000,000 to tear down and destroy labor unions by corrupting and bribing their officers, hiring bruisers and thugs to interfere when labor disputes come up. During this time they have spent almost $1,000,000 in firearms, munitions, and poisonous and noxious gases to destroy human life. They have solved the old type of strike. Industry has solved that. They do this by getting their agents into labor unions, by the use of poisonous and noxious gases. And by hiring roughnecks to simulate strike sympathizers and start fights in order to alienate popular support.

Let me read to the House, Mr. Speaker, a couple of letters that were produced before the Senate Investigating Committee. There were three companies selling poison gas and tear gas to industrial organizations. A salesman for one of them wrote to his employer, "Do not bill the city of Flint for these materials."

The materials were guns, clubs, and shells bought by James Mill, chief of police, apparently from the record, and the letter goes on to say:

> Instead, bill it to the Manufacturers' Association of Flint, 901 Industrial Building. For your information only, I have reason to believe this material is for the Chevrolet Motor Co., but they do not want it advertised or generally known that they are the buyers.

The good old Manufacturers' Association, the hard-boiled brothers who were for sabotage and who killed the child-labor amendment, are in action in Flint, apparently.

In July of last year, another salesman for the same company wrote—just listen to this—in a civilized country a salesman for a poison-gas outfit writes to his company:

> I am doing a lot of missionary work in anticipation of a strike this spring, and I am in a position to send in some good orders if it will only mature. Wish a hell of a strike would get under way. Hope this strike matures and that it is a damned bad one. We need the money.

[Laughter and applause.]

A saleman for the Federal Laboratories of Pittsburgh wrote to his home office during a strike in San Francisco:

> I might mention that during one of the riots, I shot a long-range projectile into a group, a shell hitting one man and causing a fracture of the skull, from which he has since died. As he was a Communist, I have had no feeling in the matter and I am sorry that I did not get more.

His employer, through its vice president, expressed its gratitude in the following reply:

> DEAR MR. ROUSH: I have just read your five-page report regarding which I wired you yesterday. The report is splendid and we think enough of it to excerpt a large portion of it to send out to the men, so you will be well known when you come in September 1.
> FEDERAL LABORATORIES, INC.,
> (Signed) B. H. BARKER, Vice President.

Mr. Speaker, the old methods of settling labor disputes through modern defensive means employed by the employing group is just as obsolete as wooden battleships. Our Supreme Court, which in most of its decisions during the last 3 years seems also to be about as obsolete as wooden battleships, tells us that the Federal Government can create no civilized method of arbitrating or settling labor disputes. They have scotched the N. R. A., the Guffey coal bill, and unless they reverse their prior decisions they will nullify the Wagner Labor Relations Act.

The adjudication of this act reached the Supreme Court last October. It was argued 4 months later. Over 8 weeks have now elapsed pending the decision of this question involving questions of law that have been argued and reargued for the last 3 years.

In the meantime sit-down strikes go merrily on. While in the interstate transportation industries where the Federal courts have permitted arbitration instrumentalities, the labor relations received perfect accord and harmony.

It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to defend the sit-down strikes. I do not like the violation of private property rights any better than anyone else, but as we look over the preparations and the tactics of the employing groups we can see that any other kind of strike would have ended in wholesale and inevitable bloodshed, with not the faintest hope for labor ever to have accomplished anything.

The technique of the sit-down strike has thrown much of the instrumentalities of slaughter prepared by the employers into the discard. Their thugs and gunmen cannot well start fights because the real strikers are in the factories and under discipline. The throwing of bombs and poisonous and noxious gas is not advisable because it will destroy the property of the employers, and so while this type of labor activity cannot be condoned, it at least has the virtue that while the Supreme Court is sitting in meditation over the good old days that are past, the strikers can sit down in comparative safety, effecting little injury to property, and have a chance of success.

The rapidity with which General Motors Corporation got back into production at the end of the strike is conclusive proof that there was practically no destruction of property.

I can see no occasion, no matter how much we dislike sit-down strikes, to get hysterical over the matter.

Every move that labor has made in its long struggle from serfdom up to its present position has been initiated at a time when such activity was violently against the law.

In the early fourteenth century Watt Tyler led a wholesale strike in England of artisans and agricultural workers. If you think that we are excited about the violation of existing law now, read the acts of Parliament of those days, where these striking laborers were berated for actually going from county to county in search of employment, and gathered together in groups and refused to take the maximum wages which the laws of Parliament had provided.

Or, go down two centuries later into Germany, where the serfs felt that they should have higher wages, lower rent, and the right to capture fish in the flowing streams as well as to kill wild game running on their own property. The lords of creation in those days owned the fish in the stream, the game that went through the woods, and the body of the serfs just as completely as any corporation board of directors owns the factory plant today. Yet when these serfs peacefully protested, what they got was the mailed fist, and while they were in revolt a spokesman for the manufacturers' association of that day issued these tender words:

> Because they are setting themselves against the higher powers, willfully and with violence, they have forfeited body and soul as faithless, perjured, lying, disobedient knaves and scoundrels are wont to do * * *. For if a man is an open rebel, every man is his judge and executioner * * *. Therefore, let everyone who can, smite, slay, and stab, secretly or openly, remembering that nothing can be so poisonous, hurtful, or disobedient than a rebel * * *. It is just as when one must kill a mad dog.

No, Mr. Speaker; that is not Martin Luther Dies talking in the twentieth century. That is just plain Martin Luther of the sixteenth.

This message conveys great consolation to many of us who have recently been somewhat irritated as men of the cloth have in recent years attempted to take over the settlement of all of our political and economic questions. We can at least realize that preachers in politics are at least no worse now than they were four centuries ago.

Going back to the early days of our own country, the very membership in a labor union constituted a conspiracy which was in radical violation of the law. In fact, a laborer in the early part of the seventeenth century in this country could not even attempt to fix his own wage.

That difficult task was performed for him by the employers in the various occupations, who got together and agreed among themselves what they would pay, and woe, indeed, to the laborer who did not accept that pay or attempted to organize for his own benefit. If he did not work he was a vagabond and liable to be sold into bondage. If he joined with another to protest he was a conspirator.

The struggle from that day to this to obtain higher wages, to reduce working hours from an average of 13 or 14 per day, to get decent sanitation in factories and reasonable safety devices, has been one long, continuous struggle by labor, usually violating the laws. And so, Mr. Speaker, in looking back over history I am not going to get panicky or hysterical about the sit-down strike situation.

Our State laws are ample to solve the problem. If the Governors cannot maintain law in their own States, they have ample opportunity under the Federal statutes to get aid from the President. Congress not only at the present time has no authority to act, but there is no necessity to act.

We have no need in this country of an Ogpu, and that is exactly what this bill would establish. I urge the defeat of this resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, the real issue presented by this resolution so far as the general public is concerned is whether we approve or disapprove the sit-down-strike lawlessness. Those who condone sit-down strikes or who are at heart in sympathy with this lawless method should oppose an investigation. But those who say that they are opposed to sit-down strikes cannot camouflage the issue by resorting to the well-known pretext that they cannot see any need for the investigation or any good that can be accomplished by it. On many occasions the House has created committees to investigate matters of far less importance than the present one. The argument used against this resolution can be urged with equal propriety against any investigation, regardless of the subject involved. If an investigation is not justified under the grave circumstances which now exist, I cannot conceive of any condition that would authorize this Congress to set up an investigating committee. So if those who are opposing this investigation not because they favor sit-down strikes but because they do not see any need for an investigation or any good that can be accomplished by it are consistent, they should oppose every investigation in the future; and the defeat of this resolution should establish a fixed precedent in this House which will preclude the consideration of any similar resolution in the future and the practice of setting up investigating committees should be permanently discontinued. [Applause.]

But let me emphasize that the man on the street will not be deceived by this specious argument. The issue is squarely before us. Those who believe that the sit-down-strike technique is indefensible and can no longer be tolerated in a land of law and order should support this resolution so that we can determine the cause or causes of the epidemic and recommend appropriate legislation, if it is deemed advisable and necessary.

That there is an immediate need for an investigation is demonstrated by the Nation-wide proportions which this form of lawlessness has assumed. It is spreading from coast to coast, in spite of the published statements of such outstanding labor leaders as William Green, Sidney Hillman, Martin, and Harvey Fremming to the effect that they do not approve of this strike method. Even if this epidemic should subside, we have no assurance against its recurrence upon an ever-increasing scale. When we consider the utter failure of many local authorities to stem this lawless tide, which threatens the destruction of the very foundation upon which constitutional democracy is erected, we must admit that there is a pressing need for an immediate congressional inquiry. But we are confronted with the question, What will you find out as a result of the investigation that you do not now know? Of course, the investigation will not establish the illegality of the sit-down strike method. The common law, which was gradually evolved through hundreds of years of painful experience, and which represents the noblest achievement of the Anglo-Saxon race, and every pertinent statute dealing with the subject have already established beyond the peradventure of a doubt that sit-down strikes are illegal. Therefore, on the question as to the illegality of sit-down strikes there is no need for an investigation. But when we come to the matter of determining the cause and fixing the responsibility, we encounter so many cross currents of conflicting charges that there is no possibility of getting the truth in the absence of an impartial inquiry. Those responsible for these sit-down strikes are making grave charges against the employers. In substance they indict these employers on many counts, which, if true, convict such employers of a lawlessness which no man can defend or justify. On the other hand, the employers charge those responsible for the sit-down strikes with a determined effort to impose the arbitrary will of ambitious labor leaders, independent of any consideration of equity or public welfare. Until the truth of these conflicting charges is ascertained and the responsibility fixed where it belongs, Congress cannot determine either the need for new legislation or the character of legislation necessary to prevent a recurence of this lawlessness. Most of the outstanding labor leaders have recently denied any responsibility for these sit-down strikes in published statements which have appeared throughout the press. If they are not responsible, it is doubly important for Congress to determine who are responsible.

I wish to make it clear that this resolution is not directed at the labor unions. There are few Members of this Congress who have as many laboring people in their districts as I do. In one of my counties some of the largest refineries are situated. These refineries employ thousands of laboring people, many of whom belong to unions. I am as deeply interested in the protection of their rights to strike, to bargain collectively, and to receive reasonable wages for reasonable hours of work as any Member could be. I would, therefore, be the last man to support any resolution of investigation to conduct a prejudiced inquiry for the purpose of fixing the responsibility upon the labor side to the controversy. Our able Speaker can be depended upon to appoint fair and impartial men who will give all sides a full opportunity to be heard and who will seek the truth without fear or favor. It is ridiculous for the opponents of this resolution to contend that the personnel of this committee will be biased in their conduct of the inquiry and in the conclusions they reach. To make this statement is to charge our great Speaker with a complete renunciation of all those progressive ideals and principles which have ever distinguished his public career. No one can deny that the overwhelming majority of the membership of this House, including our Speaker and leaders, are the friends of labor. To fear an impartial investigation at the hands of their proven friends would be to confess guilt. I am, therefore, certain that labor will welcome this investigation as an opportunity to vindicate itself in the eyes of the public. If, as some of the union leaders contend, the cause of the sit-down strikes can be traced to the misconduct and misdeeds of the employers they should invite this investigation. If on the other hand it develops that radical and un-American elements have inspired and directed this lawless movement for the purpose of undermining the foundation of this Republic, such revelation will enable honest and deserving labor to purge itself of this element and avoid the inevitable consequences of public condemnation and disapproval. If the labor unions involved are right they need have no fear of this investigation. On the other hand, if they are wrong they deserve no more consideration at the hands of Congress than any other group. The last man in this House to oppose this resolution ought to be a friend of labor. When any man or group of men resist a fair and impartial inquiry into their conduct and actions, such resistance is tantamount to a confession of guilt.

Our opponents say, "What good can be accomplished since sit-down strikes are local and therefore constitute questions for the State and not the National Government?" This is a very inconsistent argument coming from those who condemn the Supreme Court for denying to Congress the right to legislate in regard to hours, wages, and arbitration of industrial disputes. If, as they contend, the conditions of labor are proper questions for national legislation then certainly the prevalence of sit-down strikes on a Nation-wide scale is a subject for Federal inquiry. Regardless of Federal power to regulate hours, wages, and industrial disputes, it is clear that Congress does have the power to protect interstate commerce and the transportation of mails. In Ex Parte Siebold, decided many years ago, the Supreme Court said:

> The strong arm of the National Government may be put forth to brush away all obstructions to the freedom of interstate commerce or the transportation of mails.

Sit-down strikes conducted on a Nation-wide scale will not only obstruct interstate commerce but will completely destroy it. In most of the plants where sit-down strikes have occurred the major portion of the output was destined for interstate shipment. In addition to this, it was reported in the press that the delivery of the mails was prevented by the strikers, but I do not vouch for the accuracy of this statement. Before Congress exempted labor from the application of the antitrust laws sit-down strikes would have clearly violated the penal sections of those laws. There is no question but that Congress can, if it sees fit, pass legislation to include sit-down strikes in the definition of what constitutes a conspiracy and combination in restraint of trade, and give the striking workers protection from plant resumption during the negotiations of the disputes. I am not saying that Congress will do this or that the special committee will recommend it, but I am making this statement to refute the specious argument that this resolution should be defeated because there is nothing that Congress can do about the matter.

Let it not be forgotten that the purpose of the New Deal labor program and objectives is to legislate nationally in regard to questions which are no more national in scope and character than sit-down strikes.

Mr. Speaker, no one can truthfully say that this resolution singles out labor for an investigation. The resolution requires the committee to find out the truth as to the actual conduct of all parties to such strike, including the management and those acting under the management, as well as those who take part in the strike. It also requires the committee to find out the true condition in the affected industries in reference to wages, hours of work, and other conditions under which the employees are compelled to work. It makes it necessary for the committee to investigate the charges that the management of such affected industries have employed agents to perpetrate violence upon their employees. It also requires the committee to investigate all other charges which have been made or will be made by the representatives of labor on the one hand and the management of industry on the other, so that a full, complete, and impartial finding of facts may be had. If anyone can construe this language as unfriendly to labor he has a very vivid imagination. As I have proven, by my speeches and my votes, I have always been in favor of the right of labor to strike, but not to seize possession of other peoples' property and hold it against their will. The industries of this country are owned by 36,000,000 stockholders. Many of these stockholders have invested their life savings in these stocks. A great majority of them own less than $500. Therefore the industries seized by the sit-down strikers do not belong to the management, but to these millions of unprotected people who have a right to the enjoyment of their property. While, as I said, labor has the unquestioned right to strike, I also believe that after they strike and leave the plant peaceably they should be protected, so that a reasonable time will be allowed for negotiation and adjustment of the disputes, during which time the plant will not be operated by scab labor. I have introduced a bill to give labor this right.

But it will be argued that we can pass the necessary legislation without an investigation. The answer is that no intelligent legislation can be passed or should be passed until Congress knows the facts and the true cause or causes of the condition concerning which it proposes to legislate. A standing committee of the House cannot do the job. In the first place, the standing committee to which a pertinent bill would be referred is already occupied with many important measures which are now under consideration. In the second place, such committee could not subpena witnesses or send impartial investigators on the scene to gather the facts. A standing committee has many bills to consider. The importance of sit-down strikes requires the consideration of a committee which can devote its undivided attention to this one subject.

Mr. Speaker, ever since I began to take an active part in public affairs I have consistently condemned lawlessness and abuses in the business, financial, and industrial world. I have voted for legislation to curb this lawlessness and to make amenable to the law the financial pirates who almost wrecked our economic system by their greed. My record in opposition to this lawlessness was approved by the laboring people in the last election by an overwhelming majority. Always I have made it clear that I am opposed to lawlessness in every form or shape and under every condition. When the Ku Klux Klan was in political control of my district I took the stump in opposition to the lawlessness practiced by many of its members. I lived through that stormy period, and my subsequent election to Congress was a complete justification of my stand. Having always condemned and opposed lawlessness whether committed by mobs, organized groups, or organized money, I would convict myself of a cowardly inconsistency if I did not condemn sit-down strikes and use every method at my command to put an end to it. If I hesitated or procrastinated in the face of this great menace to my country, I could never defend myself against the charge that I had opposed lawlessness in big business, not because of the principle involved but because it was politically popular to do so. If I wavered or faltered through fear of political consequences, I would be compelled to hang my head in shame when the terrible charge was hurled at me that I condemned unpopular lawlessness but condoned lawlessness which I feared might prove to be popular. If we defeat this resolution, we may explain until we are black in the face, but there is only one explanation that the thinking people of America will be willing to accept, and that is that we are unwilling to meet this bold challenge which has been hurled into our very face. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I should have been very glad to have transferred my 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas. I rise at this time because I am pleased to be able to remind you that more than a month ago I stood in the well of this House and demanded consideration of this matter of sit-down strikes. A month went by, and there was practically only one Member, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], who has had the temerity to keep constantly before us the gravity of the situation. I am very glad that the serious consequences are now so well recognized and that action is suggested by the majority side of the Chamber. They have now offered to assume the responsibility. I would suggest that those who will object to this investigation may naturally be suspected as the ones who fear the results of the findings of such investigation.

Mr. WARREN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WARREN. I may say, if this resolution should be voted down, it is my purpose to immediately ask unanimous consent to call up Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 7. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think there is some necessity for an investigation. We would learn from whence in Europe this strike method came, who went to Europe and studied it and brought it over here. I asked the Members to consider its source a month ago. We wish to know the leaders advocating this method. According to the newspapers, criminals and people with communistic affiliations helped foment many strikes. Names, criminal records, and affiliations are given. Heretofore we have been eager enough to investigate business and banking methods. Why not investigate this patently illegal action? I do not favor many of these investigations and voted against the previous one considered. Let us not attempt to excuse this lawlessness by attempting to place responsibility on the Supreme Court. That is not the issue.

My time is exhausted, but I rejoice that the Congress is ready to take some action, and that action is in the hands of the majority. We on this side will assist you. [Applause.]

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not yield for that purpose. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, this debate seems to me not to have brought into sufficient prominence that feature of the resolution which most appeals to me. It is the feature that concerns the opening words of the Constitution of the United States:

> We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity—

Mark you that the third reason why our Constitution was adopted was to insure domestic tranquillity.

Mr. Speaker, if this resolution may result in restoring domestic tranquillity, then "we, the people of the United States", will have carried out a fundamental purpose of our being as a Union. Much has been said about the damage that has been wrought by the action of those who indulge in sit-down strikes. It reminds me of the old colored woman who was struck by an automobile. Her neighbors asked her if she was going to sue for damages. She said, "Lord, no; I don't want no damages. What I wants is repairs."

That is what I want here—repairs. I want a remedy for the situation. There have come before this body few situations that more demanded a study for remedy. There is plenty of occasion for study. There is plenty of ground for reaching judgment, for presenting legislation, which is the primary purpose of investigation.

At the north of us is a country where for nearly 30 years has been developing a system that nearly cures these evils. In Canada from 1907 to 1935, 640 labor disputes were referred to boards, and in 589 cases, in 92 percent, strikes were either averted or ended. With that example right at hand, why may we question the possibility of discovering for ourselves some remedy for this situation, some repairs of law, if you please?

Mr. Speaker, they say this is not of national concern. I deny that statement. There is probably nothing confronting the American people which so reaches into every corner and into every household of the Nation. Yesterday's paper reported a sit-down strike in the State of Pennsylvania—I vouch not for the accuracy of the following figures—where the farmers found that their market for 800,000 pounds of milk a day had been taken away from them by a sit-down strike in a factory. Every man, woman, and child in the United States can be affected by such happenings as that.

The deluge of sit-down strikes is sweeping from the Atlantic to the Pacific. In the Maine town where I was born there are 22 shoe factories, every one of them closed at the present time. Like report comes from California and every State between. From one side of the country to the other "We the people of the United States" see "domestic tranquillity" endangered. By reason thereof we suffer.

Surely it is not beyond the power, outside the province, of this body to attempt to bring to the people of the United States relief from this injury. I speak not for labor today. I speak not for capital. What I have in my heart is the injury to the United States if this state of affairs which is of such great public concern is allowed to continue and repeat. Surely it demands that we pay attention to the securing of "domestic tranquillity." Let us not quibble about details. Let us not question as to constitutional rights. Let use do what Theodore Roosevelt did in the great anthracite-coal strike when he used the position of President of the United States to create a commission and when he publicly commended its report, both to the strikers and to the employers. Peace was his aim.

Mr. Speaker, "We the people of the United States" ask for domestic tranquillity. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has expired.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MEAD. I desire to offer a substitute, which would substitute the Committee on Labor of the House for the special committee as provided by this resolution. May I ask if that amendment can be considered at this time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not unless the gentleman from Georgia yields for that purpose.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I did not yield for that purpose.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MEAD. I understand if the previous question is voted down, then my amendment substituting the House Labor Committee for the special committee can be considered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman is recognized, the amendment may be offered.

Mr. MEAD. If the previous question is voted down?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MEAD. I hope that will be done so we may consider the amendment.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question on the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIES) there were—ayes 117, noes 179.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I move the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. This vote is on ordering the previous question and not on the resolution?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The vote is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 150, nays 236, not voting 44, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution (H. Res. 162) upon the table.

The motion to lay the resolution (H. Res. 162) on the table was agreed to.

SIT-DOWN STRIKES

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7), which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the so-called sit-down strike is illegal and contrary to sound public policy;

That the so-called industrial spy system breeds fear, suspicion, and animosity, tends to cause strikes and industrial warfare, and is contrary to sound public policy; and

That it is likewise contrary to sound public policy for any employer to deny the right of collective bargaining, to foster the company union, or to engage in any other unfair labor practice as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. WITHROW and Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana objected.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—CHARLES M. PERKINS

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the request contained in the resolution of the House of Representatives of April 7, 1937 (the Senate concurring), I return herewith H. R. 1089, "An act for the relief of Charles M. Perkins."

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 8, 1937.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 9), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 9

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the President of the Senate in signing the enrolled bill (H. R. 1089) entitled "An act for the relief of Charles M. Perkins" be rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of the said bill the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make the following correction, to wit:

Strike out the figures "$14,987.66" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$14,897.66."

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ENGEL, Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky, Mr. MICHENER, Mr. MAVERICK, Mr. RABAUT, Mr. KELLER, and Mr. TRANSUE asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, March 15, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I may address the House for 15 minutes on why the Federal Government is going in the red $7,935,006 a day, or $546,856 more every day this year than it went in the red last year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion it would be impossible to grant the request, as March 15, 1937, has passed.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes on Thursday the 15th, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman to say March 15.

Mr. RICH. The 15th of April.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PERMISSION TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request which I think may cover the situation. I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may be granted 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on the two resolutions acted upon today.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, after the wonderful exhibition of Democratic management here today, I think they ought to have 5 days to extend their remarks and explain their arguments. I agree to the request.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, in view of those remarks, I object.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein some remarks of Rev. Linus Lilly, professor of law at St. Louis University.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who spoke on the two resolutions acted on today may be given 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, April 15, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, I may address the House for 15 minutes.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire the nature of the talk?

Mr. RICH. I expect to speak in reference to the expenditure of Federal funds by the Democratic administration and the enormous amount of money they are wasting and the fact the President of the United States states we are going to have a balanced Budget.

Mr. KENNEY. I hope the gentleman will mention the fact we can balance the Budget if we pass the national lottery bill. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

SENATE

FRIDAY, APRIL 9, 1937

Rev. Oliver J. Hart, D. D., rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, whose mercy is from everlasting to everlasting, we humbly beseech Thee that the people of these United States may always prove themselves worthy of their goodly heritage. Bless our Senate, now assembled in Thy name and presence, and grant that they may order all things in wisdom, righteousness, and peace, to the honor of Thy holy name and the good of Thy people. May all our desires and deeds be in accordance with Thy holy will. Scatter the darkness of our ignorance and grant that the littleness of our knowledge may be lost in the greatness of Thy love. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Joint memorial to the Congress of the United States requesting the enactment of appropriate legislation for the creation of the Fort Peck power authority

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Whereas the Congress of the United States has enacted legislation creating the Tennessee Power Authority, which has been of great use and benefit to the many States served thereby; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States has enacted legislation for the creation of the Columbia River Valley Authority to, among other things, operate power projects at Bonneville Dam, which, it is anticipated, will be a great factor in developing the adjoining territory; and

Whereas, due to the engineering skill and efficiency of the Army engineers, headed by General Markham and Colonels Moore and Larkin, the great Fort Peck Dam will soon be completed; and

Whereas the plans of this, the world's greatest earthen dam, which is being constructed for navigation, power, irrigation, flood control, and soil erosion, and costing over $100,000,000, provides for the construction and installation of a great power plant; and

Whereas the territory appurtenant to this dam, vast and undeveloped, has great possibilities, and the State of Montana should anticipate the future and plan ahead of time to utilize to the best interest of all the people of the State of Montana the potential possibilities made possible by this great dam; and

Whereas much power will be needed to develop irrigation, manufacturing, carry on transportation, and otherwise develop the natural resources of the enormous area adjoining the Fort Peck Dam: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be respectfully urged and petitioned to enact legislation creating the Fort Peck power authority, with powers and duties similar to that of the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Columbia River Valley Authority, including the right of this authority as far as possible to carry out President Roosevelt's rural electrification program, to own, control, and operate the power plants and projects and transmission lines, and to do all things necessary to utilize for the best interest of the people as a whole the power facilities the dam will provide; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this joint memorial be submitted by the secretary of state of Montana to the President of the United States, to both Houses of the National Congress, and to the Secretary of War and Chief of the Army engineers, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Montana.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation:

Memorial for a survey of the Yellowstone River in Montana to determine the best and efficient use of its waters and to stabilize the irrigated and irrigable lands in the Yellowstone River basin and to further assist in the control of floods along the said Yellowstone River

A memorial to the President of the United States, to the honorable Secretary of the Interior, to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Member in Congress from Montana, and to Governor Roy E. Ayers,

We, the members of the Twenty-fifth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the senate and house concurring), respectfully represent:

Whereas the provision of insuring an adequate supply of water for irrigation and domestic purposes is the most pressing problem in that section of Montana drained by the Yellowstone River; and

Whereas during the present series of dry years there has been an insufficient available supply of water for the irrigation of areas now under ditch and to supply water for the reclamation of large areas of semiarid land within the Yellowstone River basin and immediately adjoining uplands thereof; and

Whereas there is unappropriated and unused water in the basin of the Yellowstone River which, if properly conserved and controlled, to provide an ample supply of water for irrigation and reclamation purposes to the extent that not only the lands now under irrigation but also the vast areas thereof susceptible of irrigation and reclamation by the use of said waters to the extent that the agricultural and farming industry in this section of Montana could be rehabilitated and its permanency insured: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-fifth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the senate and house concurring) does hereby respectfully petition and request that the Congress of the United States and the Department of the Interior recommend the expenditure of at least $150,000 for the purpose of making a complete survey of the Yellowstone River basin in order to determine the feasibility of the various projects along said river to determine the method of best utilizing the waters of the said Yellowstone River for these purposes; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be mailed by the secretary of state of Montana to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of the Interior, to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each of the Representatives in Congress from Montana, and to Governor Roy E. Ayers.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Joint memorial to the Congress of the United States requesting the enactment into law the ever-normal-granary and crop-insurance program

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Whereas on December 3, 1936, representatives of the wheat growers of the United States, assembled in Washington, D. C., and went on record sponsoring the so-called "ever-normal-granary and crop-insurance program"; and

Whereas certain farm organizations and farmers in the State of Montana believe that the so-called "ever-normal-granary and crop-insurance program", if enacted into law, will be of great benefit and use to the people of the State of Montana: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be respectfully urged and petitioned to enact legislation putting into force this so-called "ever-normal-granary and crop-insurance program" with a 15-year average used as a basis instead of 10 years; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this joint memorial be submitted by the Secretary of State of Montana to both Houses of the National Congress and to the Secretary of Agriculture and to each of the Senators and Representatives of the State of Montana in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the General Court of Massachusetts, favoring the enactment of legislation to protect the States having high legal standards for labor and working conditions against unfair competition, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. LODGE and Mr. WALSH.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the General Court of Massachusetts, favoring the enactment of legislation to amend the Social Security Act, so as to increase the maximum amount from $15 to $25 to be paid by the Federal Government for cities and towns granting old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. WALSH and Mr. LODGE.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by a meeting of Perry County (Ill.) Democratic women, favoring the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a memorial from Vincent Leon, of Colorado Springs, Colo., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Maryland chapter, Rainbow Division Veterans Association, of Baltimore, Md., protesting against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the board of commissioners of the Utah State Bar, favoring the enactment of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 19) for the establishment of a trust fund to be known as the Oliver Wendell Holmes Memorial Fund, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board Employees Association, at Pittsburgh, Pa., favoring the enactment of the so-called McCarran-Mead bill, being Senate bill 70, providing longevity pay for postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

COMPLETION OF THE BLUE RIDGE PARKWAY, ETC.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I present for printing in the RECORD and appropriate reference Joint Resolution No. 38 of the Legislature of North Carolina memorializing the President of the United States to expedite the completion of the Blue Ridge Parkway, and memorializing the Governor and State Highway and Public Works Commission of North Carolina to put in first-class condition the State highways of North Carolina which intersect the parkway, which will connect the Shenandoah National Park of the State of Virginia and the Great Smoky Mountains Park of North Carolina.

In presenting the resolution I desire to avail myself of the opportunity to state to the Members of the Senate that the Great Smoky Mountains National Park of North Carolina is the largest national part east of the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. BACHMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to my very good friend from Tennessee, and I am glad to do so for the reason that part of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park is located in my sister State of Tennessee, so ably represented in part by my beloved friend who has risen to ask me to yield to him.

Mr. BACHMAN. Mr. President, I was about to make the correction which the Senator himself has now made. [Laughter.]

Mr. REYNOLDS. In pursuance of the resolution, I desire to state that the Great Smoky Mountains National Park of North Carolina, which is located in the western section of North Carolina near the eastern portion of the State of Tennessee, located within about 50 miles of Asheville, N. C., my home town, which is known to the world as the Little Gem City of the Mountains, last year received and entertained more visitors than any other national park in the United States of America, with the exception of Shenandoah National Park of the State of Virginia.

The Shenandoah National Park entertained 694,098 visitors whereas the Great Smoky Mountains National Park of western North Carolina entertained 602,000 visitors.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from Montana, and to state to him, interested as I know he is in preserving the historic shrines of America, that in the Military Affairs Committee just a few moments ago I voted to report a measure which will insure the preservation as a historic monument in his great State of the site where occurred the last battle participated in by one of our American heroes, General Custer.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator very much. I was wondering if the Senator was entirely correct when he said the Smoky Mountains National Park entertained more visitors last year than any other park, because I had understood that one of the parks in California and the Yellowstone National Park had had more visitors than any other parks in the United States.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask what is the present order of business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The presentation of petitions and memorials. The Senator from North Carolina presented a memorial from the Legislature of North Carolina, and the Chair thinks that, for the moment, he is describing the memorial, so far as the Chair is able to understand.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry directed to me by the able Senator from Montana, the Shenandoah National Park entertained more visitors than any other park in the United States last year. The Great Smoky Mountains National Park of western North Carolina was second, with 602,222 visitors; the Rocky Mountains National Park, third, with 550,496 visitors; Yellowstone National Park—which was mentioned specifically by the Senator from Montana—fourth, with 432,572 visitors; Yosemite National Park, fifth, with 431,192 visitors; sixth was Acadia National Park, with 340,000 visitors; seventh,

Mount Rainier National Park, with 317,345 visitors; eighth was Hot Springs National Park, with 273,083 visitors; the Grand Canyon was ninth, with 268,412 visitors; and the Platt National Park was tenth, with 235,945 visitors.

I am extremely interested in having the parkway completed, because it will avail the people of the United States an opportunity to visit the great State of North Carolina, which State carved the cradle of liberty for the American people.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. May I correct an error which the Senator from North Carolina has inadvertently made? Of course, he was only reading statistics in regard to national parks. I may say that at the Boulder Canyon project in Nevada, where Boulder Dam is located, more visitors were received last year than in any park of the United States.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to thank the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. McNARY. This discussion is all out of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken. Senators are not permitted to discuss petitions and memorials except by unanimous consent.

The joint resolution presented by Mr. REYNOLDS was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, as follows:

Joint resolution memorializing the President to expedite the completion of the Blue Ridge Parkway and memorializing the Governor and the State highway and public works commission to put in first-class condition the intersecting State highways in North Carolina

Whereas by Executive order there has heretofore been established the Blue Ridge Parkway, connecting the Shenandoah National Park in Virginia with the Great Smoky Mountains National Park in North Carolina and Tennessee; and

Whereas work has been in progress for some time on the said parkway out of funds allotted by the President; and

Whereas at the last session of Congress the said parkway was approved and placed under the supervision of the National Park Service, and appropriation for further work thereon was authorized to be effective after the 1st of July, 1937; and

Whereas it is of vital importance that active work on the construction of the said parkway be prosecuted pending the time when congressional appropriation will become available; and

Whereas the General Assembly of North Carolina has authorized and empowered the State highway and public works commission to take all necessary steps for the acquirement of the right-of-way for the said parkway through North Carolina; and

Whereas the said Blue Ridge Parkway will, when completed, not only afford great recreational facilities to a large part of the population of the United States but will be an integral part of the system of national defense; and

Whereas its early completion is a matter of vital interest to all the people of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring):

SECTION 1. That the General Assembly of North Carolina do memorialize the President of the United States to make available from the P. W. A. or such other funds as he may have at his disposal, money sufficient to keep the work on the said parkway in active operation until the Congress shall make available funds for its completion.

SEC. 2. That the General Assembly of North Carolina do memoralize the Governor and the State highway and public works commission to place in first-call condition all intersecting highways in North Carolina, so that people from all sections of the State may have easy and ready access to this great national parkway.

SEC. 3. That this resolution and the record of its adoption be transmitted through the usual and appropriate channels to the President of the United States, to the Governor of North Carolina, to the chairman of the State highway and public works commission, and a copy to each member of the North Carolina delegation in Congress.

SEC. 4. The Lieutenant Governor of North Carolina, the Speaker of the North Carolina House of Representatives, and a member of the North Carolina House of Representatives, to be designated by the Speaker, are hereby appointed a committee of three to deliver in person a ratified copy of this joint resolution to the President of the United States, and a copy to each member of the North Carolina delegation in Congress. The auditor and treasurer of the State of North Carolina are hereby directed to pay the actual expenses of this committee not to exceed $150.

SEC. 5. This resolution shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

In the general assembly, read three times and ratified, this the 20th day of March, 1937.

ADDITIONAL PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. WALSH and Mr. LODGE presented the following concurrent resolution of the General Court of Massachusetts, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolutions memorializing Congress in favor of Federal legislation increasing the amount of Federal reimbursement for cities and towns granting old-age assistance

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts hereby urges the Congress of the United States to amend the Social Security Act, so-called, by increasing the maximum amount to be paid by the Federal Government to cities and towns, with respect to each individual granted old-age assistance by them, from $15 to $25; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the Commonwealth send copies of these resolutions to each Member of Congress from this Commonwealth and to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. WALSH presented the following concurrent resolution of the General Court of Massachusetts, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Resolutions memorializing Congress for enactment of Federal legislation to protect against unfair competition the States having high legal standards for labor and working conditions

Whereas the general court is convinced that industries operating in this and other States with advanced legal standards for labor and working conditions are at a decided disadvantage in competition with similar industries and establishments operating under lower standards elsewhere; and

Whereas it has been found impracticable to secure the adoption of agreements among the States for the establishment and maintenance of definite and reasonable standards for labor and working conditions in the absence of some provision for protection of industries, in the States that may enter into such an agreement, from competition by industries and establishments operating in States that have no such standards in the field of labor and industry; and

Whereas Congress has enacted the Hawes-Cooper Act, so called, to aid the States in preventing the sale within their limits of goods and merchandise made by convict labor in other States, when the protected State prohibits sale in the open market of goods and merchandise made by convict labor within its limits, and has likewise enacted the Ashurst-Sumners Act, so called, which prohibits transportation in interstate commerce of goods and merchandise made by convict labor and destined for States in which the sale of such merchandise is forbidden; and

Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States, in decisions rendered on March 2, 1936, and January 4, 1937, has sustained the constitutionality of the Hawes-Cooper Act and of the Ashurst-Sumners Act, respectively; and

Whereas the action of Congress and the decisions of the Supreme Court concerning the subject of interstate commerce in convict-made goods and merchandise appear clearly to point the way to a method of protecting the industries of States with high legal standards for labor and working conditions from competition originating under lower standards elsewhere: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts hereby memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact legislation permitting States with established standards for labor and working conditions to protect their industries from competition originating under lower standards elsewhere, and forbidding the transportation in interstate commerce of goods and merchandise produced under low legal standards for labor and working conditions into States in which adequate and reasonable standards on these subjects have been established and maintained; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the Commonwealth transmit forthwith copies of these resolutions to the President of the United States, the Secretary of Labor of the United States, the presiding officers of both branches of Congress, each Senator and Representative from Massachusetts in Congress, and to the Governors of all the States of the Union, with an urgent request that they cooperate with this Commonwealth in securing the enactment of the proposed legislation.

Mr. LODGE presented a resolution adopted by members of the Massachusetts Women's Political Club, protesting against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMERICANISM PROGRAM BY HILL TOP MEMORIAL POST, PITTSBURGH, PA.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I present and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations a resolution forwarded to me by the Hill Top Memorial Post, No. 438, the American Legion, of Pittsburgh, Pa.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PITTSBURGH, PA., April 7, 1937.

Hon. JAMES J. DAVIS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Whereas Hill Top Memorial Post, No. 438, American Legion, prepared an Americanism program for February 15, 1937, in Knoxville Junior High School for the purpose of presenting to said school an American flag, a Bible, and a Bible marker, to which program the general public was invited, and a large audience responding to said invitations and a Federal theater orchestra under Works Progress Administration supervision was invited to take part; and

Whereas the said Federal theater orchestra upon request refused to play the Star-Spangled Banner or to in any other way participate in said Americanism program, but absolutely dictated its terms of participation in the program so that no music could be played or prepared speeches delivered, all of which are appropriate in the proper presentation of a flag, a Bible, and a Bible marker and the proper acceptance thereof: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That Hill Top Memorial Post, No. 438, American Legion, condemn such unpatriotic conduct of a governmental agency and such conduct as heretofore recited is hereby condemned to the end that the supervision of governmental projects be revised so that a repetition or repetitions of such unseemly conduct will not be repeated before any other audience of American citizens.

Adopted this 1st day of March, 1937.

HILL TOP MEMORIAL POST, NO. 438, AMERICAN LEGION, WM. G. BRIGGS, Post Commander.
R. Q. RICHARDS, Post Adjutant.

NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVES—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

Mr. WALSH. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably with amendments another bill, being the bill (S. 1131) to amend the part of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes", approved June 4, 1920, relating to the conservation, care, custody, protection, and operation of the naval petroleum and oil-shale reserves, and I submit a report (No. 317) thereon.

The report on Senate bill no. 1131 relates to the naval oil reserves. In view of the great interest in that subject heretofore, I believe it will be informative to have the report printed in the RECORD. This bill seeks to extend the authority of the Navy Department in relationship to the conservation of our naval oil reserves and the report deals extensively with all aspects of this important question. I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report (No. 317) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 1131):

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1131) to amend the part of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes", approved June 4, 1920, relating to the conservation, care, custody, protection, and operation of the naval petroleum and oil-shale reserves, having considered the same, report favorably thereon, with amendments, and, as amended, recommend that the bill do pass.

Amend the bill as follows:

Page 2, line 9, after the word "otherwise", add a comma and the clause "such use and operation to be for the protection of the aforesaid reserves or for carrying out the provisions of this act."

Page 2, line 14, strike out the word "all" and insert in lieu thereof "those."

Page 3, line 4, strike out the word "illegal" and insert in lieu thereof "wrongful."

Page 3, line 10, after the word "States", insert the clause "no contract to sell the oil and gas products thereof, other than royalty oil and gas products."

Page 4, line 3, strike out the word "annually."

Page 4, line 4, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a colon and add the clause "Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report annually to the Congress all purchase and condemnation proceedings entered into under the authority herein granted."

Page 4, line 15, strike out the figures "1936" and insert in lieu thereof "1937."

Page 4, line 19, after the word "authority" insert ", limited as provided in such plan or lease."

Page 5, line 5, strike out the first "of" and insert in lieu thereof "from."

Page 5, line 8, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a comma and thereafter insert "and", and strike out the word "In" and insert in lieu thereof "in."

Page 5, line 9, strike out the words "the foregoing" and insert in lieu thereof "any of these."

Page 5, line 16, strike out the words "and upon such blanks."

EXPLANATION OF AMENDMENTS

The amendment on page 2, line 9, insures that the authority granted shall be used exclusively for the protection of the naval petroleum and oil-shale reserves or for carrying out the provisions of this bill.

The amendment on page 3, line 10, modifies the existing authority of the Secretary of the Navy in connection with the Navy's fuel-oil reserves and provides that all contracts for the sale of oil and gas products, other than royalty oil and gas products, shall not become effective until approved by the President.

The amendment on page 4, line 4, is to insure that action taken by the Navy Department to acquire lands or leases in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 by purchase or condemnation shall be reported annually to the Congress.

The other committee amendments are to clarify the language contained in the bill.

PURPOSE OF THE BILL

The purpose of the bill is to make better provision for the conservation, care, custody, protection, and operation of the naval petroleum and oil-shale reserves.

Although the provisions of this bill are applicable to all of the Navy's fuel-oil reserves, its chief purpose is to conserve and preserve underground the oil remaining in naval petroleum reserve no. 1. If the bill is enacted effective steps may be taken to carry out the original policy of maintaining a great naval petroleum reserve in the ground. The Elk Hills reserve can then be maintained as a form of national insurance protecting the Navy's future efficiency. As long as this reserve is protected from drainage, the Navy will have an adequate reserve supply of fuel oil underground. It is not improbable that some day the safety of the United States may depend on the oil remaining in this reserve.

STATUS OF NAVAL OIL RESERVES

A brief summary of the present status of the Navy's fuel-oil reserves is as follows:

Naval petroleum reserve no. 4 comprises 35,000 square miles in extreme northwest Alaska, well within the Arctic Circle, nearly 1,000 miles from the nearest open port and remote from the railroad. The value of this reserve is unknown, and no oil is being taken from this area at the present time.

Naval petroleum reserve no. 3 (Teapot Dome) comprises 9,321 acres in Natrona County, Wyo. The Mammoth Oil Co.'s lease in this reserve was voided by a decision of the United States Supreme Court, and all the land in this reserve is now under full control of the Navy Department. All oil and gas wells have been shut in (or capped), and no oil or gas is being taken from this reserve at the present time.

About 3,500,000 barrels of oil have been taken from this reserve, and it is estimated that approximately 17,000,000 barrels of oil still remain in it. The Navy Department intends to maintain this reserve in its present shut-in condition for extraction of oil in time of future national emergency.

Naval petroleum reserve no. 2 in Buena Vista Hills, Kern County, Calif., comprises 30,181 acres. Nineteen thousand seven hundred and thirty-five acres are privately owned and 10,446 acres are Government owned. The privately owned lands and the Government owned lands are so thoroughly checkerboarded in this reserve that it is of little value as a future oil reserve for the Navy from present sands. However, there is an excellent possibility of obtaining production from sands below the present oil-bearing zone. All Government lands in this area, except 1,220 acres, are now leased. Approximately 100,000,000 barrels of oil have been taken from these Government lands and it is estimated that approximately 50,000,000 barrels remain. The Navy Department, with the approval of the President, made a plan agreement with the lessees of Government lands in this reserve, effective the 1st of October 1935, in which the Navy agreed to extend the leases, but gains greater control over their operation. It is believed that this agreement will delay taking the oil out of the ground over a considerably longer period of time and that the oil will be taken out by the most economical methods possible. As all oil from the upper sands will be exhausted in approximately 10 or 15 years, the value of the Government lands in these sands as a future reserve is practically nil. However, the lands still have a high potential value if they can be used for exchange purposes in perfecting and preserving naval petroleum reserve no. 1, and as a source of income to the Treasury; and they may become very valuable if oil is found in the deeper sands.

Naval petroleum reserve no. 1 comprises 38,073 acres in Elk Hills, Kern County, Calif. Thirty-two thousand one hundred and forty-one acres are owned by the Government, 4,662 acres are owned by the Standard Oil Co. of California, and 1,270 acres are involved in litigation. Only 429 acres of Government land is leased at the present time. These leases were made to prevent the Standard Oil Co. of California, which owns secs. 35 and 36, T. 30 S., R. 24 E., bordering the reserve, from draining oil from the reserve. The amount of oil on Government land is estimated at 500,000,000 barrels, which may be doubled if oil is located below the present sands.

The Standard Oil Co. of California is not producing a great quantity of oil from their holdings in this area at the present time. However, it may become necessary for them to extend their operations in this area to their fee-owned lands within the reserve in the near future.

The United States claims that the 1,270 acres involved in litigation were known to be mineral lands when surveyed and therefore titles thereto were never vested in the State of California.

SHALE-OIL RESERVES

There are two naval shale-oil reserves in Colorado and one in Utah. These reserves were created to provide oil for the Navy when the supply of oil from wells becomes inadequate to meet the demands. They are not a wartime reserve and can only be used at some future time when the oil-shale industry has become established on a practical commercial basis.

The process of retorting oil from shale is still in an experimental state. From 20 to 25 gallons of oil may be obtained from a ton of shale. However, the cost of producing a barrel of oil from shale is estimated to be at least double the cost of extracting oil from wells. The oil-shale reserves will last the Navy indefinitely whenever the value of shale oil is sufficient to warrant its recovery and refining.

EXISTING LAWS

Under existing laws the Secretary of the Navy has jurisdiction over all Government lands and leases within the naval petroleum reserves and authority to conserve, develop, use, and operate the same in his discretion, directly or by contract, lease, or otherwise, and to use, store, exchange, or sell the oil and gas products thereof, and those from all royalty oil from lands in the naval reserves for the benefit of the United States.

Over the naval oil-shale reserves the Secretary of the Navy has only jurisdiction under the Executive orders setting them aside.

THE PRESENT BILL

The bill as reported by the committee reenacts the authority giving the Secretary of the Navy jurisdiction over all Government lands and leases within the naval petroleum reserves and authority to conserve, develop, use, and operate the same in his discretion, directly or by contract, lease, or otherwise, and to use, store, exchange, or sell the oil and gas products thereof, and those from all royalty oil from lands in the naval reserves for the benefit of the United States.

The bill grants additional authority as follows:

(1) Extends to the naval oil-shale reserves all applicable provisions of law covering the naval petroleum reserves.

(2) Authorizes the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President—

(a) To enter into agreements with operators on adjoining private lands, which agreements have for their purpose the conservation of oil and gas on the Government's lands.

(b) To exchange Government lands in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 for private lands in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 in order to consolidate both Government and privately owned lands into solid blacks.

(c) To acquire privately owned lands in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 by purchase or condemnation.

(d) To use moneys due the Government as royalties from any of the naval petroleum reserves and moneys due the Government because of the illegal extraction of oil and gas from lands in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 in connection with (b) and (c) above.

(3) Authorizes the appropriation of those sums necessary to carry out the provisions of the act.

(4) Provides for the termination of existing leases in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 at the end of their initial 20-year periods by voiding the options for renewals.

(5) Provides for more advantageous leasing and greater control of operations under any new leases or agreements entered into involving the Government's lands.

(6) Provides that no leases of lands nor any benefits therefrom shall extend to foreigners whose governments do not grant reciprocal privileges to citizens of the United States.

(7) Vests in the Secretary necessary administrative authority.

(8) Provides that revenues accruing under the act shall be deposited as "Miscellaneous receipts", except as otherwise provided in the act.

(9) Provides for any or all royalties due the Government being taken either in cash or in kind as the Secretary elects.

(10) Provides for the cancelation of leases should a lessee fail to comply with the lease, the provisions of this act or of any regulations promulgated under the act.

NECESSITY FOR ADDITIONAL AUTHORITY

It is believed to be both necessary and advisable to extend to the naval oil-shale reserves and other naval fuel reserves all applicable provisions of law covering the naval petroleum reserves in order that the Navy Department's jurisdiction and administrative authority over all lands reserved for the same purpose may be covered by the same laws. The committee is of the opinion that authority will effect the most economical administration of the lands and will enable the Navy Department to make definite plans for the best use of its oil-shale lands when, eventually, they must be used for the purpose for which they were set aside.

The authority to authorize the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President—

(a) To enter into agreements with operators on adjoining private lands, which agreements have for their purpose the conservation of oil and gas on the Government's lands, is necessary and advisable in order that the Secretary of the Navy may have specific authority to contract with operators on lands adjoining the Government's reserved lands, whose operations threaten drainage of the Government's lands, for the purpose of obtaining payment for such losses as the Government's lands might sustain through drainage. Such contracts or agreements would, by the payment of compensatory royalty, make it unnecessary for the Government to lease or operate its lands, as has been the custom in the past, and would result in the conservation in the ground of most of those petroleum products which become the lessee's share under leases.

(b) To exchange Government lands in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 for private lands in the reserve in order to consolidate both Government and privately owned lands into solid blocks is necessary in order to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to enter into negotiations with the owners of such private lands for the purpose of exchanging some of those sections owned by the Government which now are threatened with drainage from three sides, should adjoining private lands be developed, for lands which would make the Government's entire holdings much less vulnerable to drainage when the adjoining lands are developed. If this authority is granted, it is the opinion of the committee that an exchange of properties with the Standard Oil Co. of California can be effected which will place no section of the Government's lands in contact with the company's lands on more than one side.

(c) To acquire privately owned lands in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 by purchase or condemnation; this, unquestionably, would be the best solution of the Navy's problem in naval petroleum reserve no. 1, but it embraces the almost insurmountable difficulty of properly evaluating those possible oil-bearing horizons as yet undiscovered which may be present in those formations lying beneath the known oil zone. Present oil production in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 is encountered at depths of less than 4,000 feet in those wells which have been drilled in the eastern part of the Elk Hills field. However, it is anticipated that other oil-bearing sands may be discovered in the formations below the known oil zone. It is the opinion of the committee that authority to purchase or condemn the private lands in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 will materially aid the Government in any negotiations entered into for the purpose of exchanging lands to consolidate the Government's holdings in its most valuable oil reserve. The Navy Department has estimated that private lands in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 probably contain between 75,000,000 and 100,000,000 barrels of recoverable oil from known sands and it has further estimated the value of this oil at about 70 cents per barrel in the ground, based on present prices.

(d) To use the right to royalty production from any of the naval petroleum reserves and the right to any moneys due the Government as a result of the illegal extraction of oil and gas from lands in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 in connection with exchange for or purchase of private lands in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 is authority which it is believed will be necessary if the authority to negotiate with the Standard Oil Co. of California to either exchange lands or purchase the company's holdings in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 is granted. Approximately 5,000,000 barrels of crude oil, 61,000,000,000 cubic feet of natural gas, and 13,000,000 gallons of natural gasoline, having a value of approximately $13,000,000, have been produced and sold or used by the Standard Oil Co. of California from lands the company claimed in fee and lands leased from other claimants in sec. 36, T. 30 S., R 23 E, Mount Diablo meridian, a section of land in naval petroleum reserve no. 1. On January 24, 1935, as a result of a contest of title ordered filed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, Department of the Interior, against claimants to section 36 on January 14, 1914, and the subsequent hearings and court actions, the Secretary of the Interior handed down an opinion that title to the section has remained vested in the United States and that the section never became the property of the State of California nor its transferees through which the Standard Oil Co. of California and others claimed title. On January 20, 1937, special counsel for the United States filed suit in the United States district court at Fresno, Calif., to dispossess the claimants to section 36 and to secure an accounting for the minerals produced and disposed of or used by them during their period of occupancy of the lands. It is the opinion of the committee that the Government's interests can best be protected by a compromise settlement of the Government's suit in connection with an agreement between the Government and the Standard Oil Co. of California in connection with the exchange of lands or purchase of the company's lands proposed in this legislation. It is not anticipated that the Government's royalties will be used in either an agreement to exchange lands or to purchase the Standard's holdings in the reserve, but it is thought advisable to have them made available in the event the wasting assets they represent need to be used in any arrangements made for the purpose of strengthening the Government's position in naval petroleum reserve no. 1.

ADDITIONAL PROVISIONS

Authorization for the appropriation of those sums necessary to carry out the provisions of the act is necessary should the Secretary of the Navy be unable to effect the necessary protection of the reserve by the other means provided in the bill and it is found necessary to purchase or condemn the lands in naval petroleum reserve no. 1, owned by the Standard Oil Co. of California, in order best to protect and conserve the oil in the Government's reserved lands. No funds whatever are appropriated by this bill for any purpose. It is believed that this authority will cause the Standard Oil Co. of California to defer the development of its lands in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 as long as it is possible for it to do so.

Provision for the termination of existing leases in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 at the end of their initial 20-year periods by voiding options for renewals is desirable in order to terminate leases made to lands in naval petroleum reserve no. 1, which, if the proposed legislation becomes law, may no longer be in the Government's best interests. Three of these four leases contain the following provision affecting tenure to the lands:

"SEC. 1. Purposes: That the lessor in consideration of rents and royalties to be paid, and the covenants to be observed as herein set forth, does hereby grant and lease to the lessee the exclusive right and privilege to drill for, mine, extract, remove, and dispose of all the oil and gas in or under the following-described trace of land * * * for a period of 20 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew this lease for successive periods of 10 years, upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the lessor, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods."

The Navy Department contends that these leases may no longer be in the public's interests and that provision should be made to terminate them when considered desirable after the end of the initial 20-year period. The Department is also of the opinion that under the circumstances the leases may be terminated at the end of their initial 20-year periods; and if renewed, such renewals may be conditioned on such terms as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, giving full consideration to the fact that the lands constitute naval petroleum reserves and therefore differ from public lands generally. However, both the Department of the Interior, which Department is responsible for the leasing of public lands, and the several lessees contend that the renewal of the leases is mandatory and that the terms and conditions of such renewals cannot be more stringent than those in the present leases without being "unreasonable." Since all oil and gas leases in the naval petroleum reserves were made by the Interior Department and many of them under authority of the act of February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437), an act designed to cover the exploitation of gas and petroleum on the public domain, and since no differentiation was made in the terms thereof from similar leases on public lands, the committee is of the opinion that the Congress should definitely settle the controversy without the necessity of long and expensive litigation in the courts when the leases expire. This section of the bill is designed to bring all leases on the naval petroleum reserves under the cognizance of the act of June 4, 1920, and of this act, at the expiration of their initial 20-year periods.

Provision for more advantageous leasing and greater control of operations under any new leases or agreements entered into involving the Government's lands is necessary in order to strengthen the Government's position in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 in the event that no satisfactory exchange of lands can be arranged, that no purchase or condemnation of private lands in the reserve can be made, and that no other agreements to protect the Government's interest can be entered into to conserve the oil in the Government's lands. This provision is a precautionary measure designed to remedy what the Navy Department has found to be the most objectionable features of the present leases—i. e., lack of any authority to regulate or control the operations of a lessee when they are not in the lessor's interests. The Navy Department recognizes that as long as some of its oil lands remain interspersed among lands owned by others it may be necessary at any time to lease or otherwise operate such parts thereof as are vulnerable to drainage or to unite with owners or operators on adjoining private lands for the cooperative or unit development of their respective holdings in order to avoid waste, destructive competition, excessive investments in development and to regulate production to the mutual advantage of all those concerned. Such unit or cooperative operations result in greater efficiency, higher percentage recoveries of oil and gas, and consequently greater benefits to all. However, the committee is of the opinion that authority should be definitely vested in the Secretary of the Navy to regulate the rate of development on and the quantity and rate of production from the Government's lands in its naval petroleum reserves at all times and under all conditions.

Provision that no leases of lands nor any benefits therefrom shall extend to foreigners whose governments do not grant reciprocal privileges to citizens of the United States is a necessary provision designed to provide the protection to the naval petroleum and other naval fuel reserves which is extended to the public lands by the first section of the Leasing Act of February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437). In the event of a world-wide oil shortage, it is not improbable that those countries having oil resources will enact legislation designed to reserve the benefits of such resources for their own nationals; the reciprocity provision in this bill is designed to prevent foreigners of such nations receiving any benefits whatever from oil and gas operations conducted on any of the Navy's fuel reserves.

Vests in the Secretary the necessary administrative authority to prescribe necessary rules and regulations and to do any and all things necessary to administer leases or other operations on the Navy's fuel reserves.

Provision that revenues accruing under the act shall continue to be deposited in the Treasury as "miscellaneous receipts" except as otherwise provided in the bill under the section authorizing the use of the right to royalties in any agreements having for their purpose the exchange of lands or the purchase of privately owned lands in naval petroleum reserve no. 1. The committee is of the opinion that ordinarily the Government's best interests will be served by depositing all cash receipts from the Navy's fuel reserves as "miscellaneous receipts" where they can at least partially offset appropriations for fuel for the Navy.

Provision for any or all royalties due the Government being taken either in cash or in kind as the Secretary elects is necessary in order that the Government may secure the maximum benefit from operations conducted on the reserved lands. This section of the bill provides for the Government to elect to take any or all its royalties in kind whenever it is deemed possible to sell any royalty product at a price better than that obtained by the lessee.

Provision for the cancelation of leases should a lessee fail to comply with the lease, the provisions of the act, or of any regulations promulgated under the act is necessary in order for the Secretary of the Navy to institute action looking toward the cancelation of any lease because of the lessee's failure to perform properly the lease contract.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. REYNOLDS:

A bill (S. 2112) to amend the Social Security Act with respect to its application to employees of fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, and associations; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 2113) to provide benefits on account of disability or death due to service in the armed forces of the United States in the event of war, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 2114) for the relief of the parents of John Quincy Rawlins, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2115) to amend section 77 of the Judicial Code, as amended, to transfer Clinch County from the southern district of Georgia to the middle district; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 2116) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Natchez, Miss.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 2117) to expedite the dispatch of vessels from certain ports of call; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. STEIWER:

A bill (S. 2118) to authorize a survey of Willow Creek, Oreg., with a view to the control of its floods; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LUNDEEN (for Mr. SHIPSTEAD):

A bill (S. 2119) to authorize a preliminary examination and survey of Gilmore Creek, Winona County, Minn., with a view to control of floodwaters; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 2120) for the relief of Rev. C. G. Eidnes; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 2121) to amend the Civil Service Act approved January 16, 1883, as amended; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma (by request):

A bill (S. 2122) for the protection of the Indians and their lessees within the Allegany and Cattaraugus Indian Reservations, N. Y.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BULKLEY:

A bill (S. 2123) to pay the Printz-Biederman Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, the sum of $741.40, money paid as duty on merchandise imported under section 308 of the Tariff Act; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2124) extending the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act to Samuel Steele Conaway; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RADCLIFFE:

A bill (S. 2125) for the relief of the New York & Baltimore Transportation Line; and

A bill (S. 2126) for the relief of the Southern Overall Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2127) providing for the promotion of employees in the Customs Field Service; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2128) relating to the legislative reference service; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. FRAZIER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 130) to restore to Congress the sole power to issue money and regulate the value thereof; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. STEIWER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 131) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to nominations of candidates for President and Vice President; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

H. R. 2260. An act to provide for appearance on behalf of and appeal by the United States in certain cases in which the constitutionality of acts of Congress is involved; and

H. R. 5721. An act to amend the Federal Register Act.

AMENDMENT TO WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the War Department appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1938, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill to insert the following:

"Concurrent camp, Fort Sill, Okla.: For construction and installation of buildings and appurtenances thereto, including interior facilities, fixed, movable, and office equipment, necessary services, roads, swimming pool, connections to water, sewer, gas, and electric mains, purchase and installation of telephone equipment, and similar improvements, and procurement of transportation incident thereto, without reference to sections 1136 and 3734 of the Revised Statutes, including general overhead expenses of transportation, engineering, supplies, inspection and supervision, travel connected therewith, and such services as may be necessary in the office of the Quartermaster General; all for new construction at the concurrent camp at Fort Sill, Okla. $424,950, to remain available until June 30, 1939."

IMPROVEMENT OF RELATIONS BETWEEN INDUSTRY AND LABOR

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I submit a resolution, which I ask to have read, and I request then that it may lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 115) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, be, and it is hereby, authorized to confer with leaders of industry and labor and such others as the committee may consider useful for the purpose of formulating a basis for improving the relations between industry and labor with a view to the elimination of industrial strife and the promotion of the general welfare. The committee shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable with a recommendation of appropriate legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-fifth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

CAPITAN GRANDE BAND OF MISSION INDIANS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on the last legislative day the Senate passed the bill (S. 1832) to reserve certain public domain in California for the benefit of the Capitan Grande Band of Mission Indians. Since that bill was passed the House has passed an identical bill, being House bill 5551. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which Senate bill 1832 was passed be reconsidered. If the Senate will agree to that request, I will then ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma that the vote by which Senate bill 1832 was passed on Wednesday last be reconsidered? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

The Chair now lays before the Senate House bill 5551.

The bill (H. R. 5551) to reserve certain public domain in the State of California for the benefit of the Capitan Grande Band of Mission Indians was read twice by its title.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it is not an unusual request if there is no great disparity in the language or purpose of the House and Senate bills.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The bills are identical.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 5551) to reserve certain public domain in California for the benefit of the Capitan Grande Band of Mission Indians was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described public domain be, and it is hereby, withdrawn from entry, sale, or other disposition and set aside as an addition to the Barona Ranch, a tract of land purchased for the Capitan Grande Band of Mission Indians under authority contained in the act of May 4, 1932 (47 Stat. L. 146): Lots 1 and 2 of section 23, township 14 south, range 1 east, San Bernardino meridian, California, containing 12.19 acres: Provided, That said withdrawal shall not affect any valid rights initiated prior to approval hereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 1832 will be indefinitely postponed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5232) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BYRNES. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. BYRNES, Mr. COPELAND, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. WALSH, and Mr. HALE conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMERICAN PEACE POLICY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR THOMAS OF UTAH

[Mr. POPE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Senator THOMAS of Utah at the semiannual meeting of the Academy of Political Science, Wednesday evening, Apr. 7, 1937, on the subject of The American Peace Policy, which appears in the Appendix.]

SENATOR NORRIS AND THE SUPREME COURT PLAN

[Mr. BROWN of Michigan asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Detroit News of Apr. 7 instant relative to a suggested amendment by Senator NORRIS to the Constitution with respect to the Supreme Court, which appears in the Appendix.]

MESSAGES TO MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE BY THE LATE GOVERNOR OLSON

[Mr. LUNDEEN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the third inaugural message of the late Governor Olson to the Legislature of Minnesota, and also his special message of Dec. 3, 1935, which appear in the Appendix.]

LABOR AND LEGISLATION—ADDRESS BY I. M. ORNBURN

[Mr. MCCARRAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject of Labor and Legislation, delivered by Mr. I. M. Ornburn, secretary and treasurer of the union label trades department of the American Federation of Labor, on Feb. 13, 1937, which will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

REGULATION OF BITUMINOUS-COAL INDUSTRY—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. NEELY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4985) to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 15, 20, 21, 22, 24, 25, 27, 28, 30, 37, 38, 39, 44, 46, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 59, 60, 61, 62, 64, 65, and 66.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 18, 19, 23, 26, 29, 31, 32, 33, 35, 36, 40, 41, 42, 43, 47, 48, 50, 51, 58, 63, 68, and 69; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "the managers and employees of the statistical bureaus hereinafter provided for" and a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: At the end of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment strike out the period and insert a comma and the following: "but shall maintain its principal office in the District of Columbia" and a period; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "The Commission is hereby authorized to initiate, promote, and conduct research designed to improve standards and methods used in the mining, preparation, conservation, distribution, and utilization of coal and the discovery of additional uses for coal, and for such purposes shall have authority to assist educational, governmental, and other research institutions in conducting research in coal, and to do such other acts and things as it deems necessary and proper to promote the use of coal and its derivatives"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For each district there shall be established by the Commission a statistical bureau which shall be operated and maintained as an agency of the Commission"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "June 16, 1933"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 4–A. Whenever the Commission upon investigation instituted upon its own motion or upon petition of any code member, district board, State or political subdivision thereof, or the consumers' counsel, after hearing finds that transactions in coal in intrastate commerce by any person or in any locality cause any undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons and localities in such commerce on the one hand and interstate commerce on the one hand and interstate commerce in coal on the other hand, or any undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate commerce in coal, or in any manner directly affect interstate commerce in coal, the Commission shall by order so declare and thereafter coal sold, delivered or offered for sale in such intrastate commerce shall be subject to the provisions of section 4."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "an agent or a place of business"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert the following :"(e) The term 'United States' when used in geographical sense includes only the States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the District of Columbia."; and the Senate agree to the same.

M. M. NEELY,
ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
JAMES J. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

R. L. DOUGHTON,
THOS. H. CULLEN,
FRED M. VINSON,
FRANK CROWTHER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Senate made 69 amendments to the House bill. The House conferees have unconditionally concurred in 34 of those amendments. The House concurred in 8 of the remaining amendments with slight amendments, and the Senate conferees receded from 27 of the amendments made by the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senate adopted an amendment which provided that farm organizations should be exempted from the operations of certain provisions of the bill. Does that amendment remain in the bill?

Mr. NEELY. That amendment remains in the bill. It was discussed at considerable length by the conferees.

I move that the Senate agree to the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

SIT-DOWN STRIKES—INDEFINITE POSTPONEMENT OF RESOLUTION

On motion by Mr. DAVIS, Senate Resolution 111, submitted by him on the 5th instant, was ordered to be indefinitely postponed, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that so-called sit-down strikes and the intolerable menace of industrial espionage are illegal and contrary to sound public policy.

EMBARGOES AGAINST NATIONS AIDING OTHER NATIONS IN CIVIL STRIFE

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from the previous day which will be read.

The legislative clerk read Senate Resolution 100, submitted by Mr. NYE on March 25, 1937, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to advise the Senate through its Committee on Foreign Relations whether the existing neutrality laws of the United States are sufficient to provide an embargo against nations whose armed forces are engaged in active warfare in a nation where a state of civil war exists, which state of civil war has caused our Government to declare embargoes against exportation of arms, ammunitions, and implements of war to that nation.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have examined the resolution, and I am certain there are matters in it which should be considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations. I therefore move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, reserving for the moment the right to object, I desire to address myself very briefly to the resolution in question.

We in the Senate should and do, of course, resent any insinuation offered by critics that our legislative acts are intended only to seem to offer benefits and advantages to the people, without actually affording them.

On January 6 I joined in the Senate's unanimous approval of Senate Joint Resolution No. 3, which had as its purpose the prohibition of the exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war from the United States to Spain, or to any other foreign country for transshipment to Spain, or for the use of either of the opposing factions in Spain. I undertook at the time to point out that the resolution did not pretend to be any part of our policy of neutrality, but that it was alone a measure intended to keep us out of war.

It was argued at the time, and feared, that to continue to allow war supplies to go from our shores into Spain might tend to draw us into the war prevailing and threatening to spread. Also, there was a feeling that a denial of arms to Spain would tend to hasten an end to the struggle raging there.

It has impressed me, Mr. President, that if there was danger of our becoming involved in the Spanish trouble by refraining from moving embargoes against the exportation of arms to Spain, there is equal danger in our failing to move with like embargoes against nations which might be exercising a very active hand in support of one side or the other in Spain.

Congress has authorized the moving of such embargoes. Our existing neutrality law provides as follows:

> Whenever the President shall find that there exists a state of war between or among two or more foreign states, the President shall proclaim such fact, and it shall thereafter be unlawful to export arms, ammunition, or implements of war from any place in the United States * * * to any port of such belligerent states, or to any neutral port for transshipment thereto, or for the use of a belligerent country.

News which comes to us daily concerning the Spanish trouble, and the alleged activities of other nations in Spain, quite naturally calls our attention to the existing law cited—first, the Spanish arms embargo of January 6, 1937, and the neutrality resolution of February 29, 1936. This consideration led to my submission on March 25 of Senate Resolution 100, now under consideration.

Mr. President, I submit that no more favoritism or prejudice is shown in Senate Resolution 100, and in my action in submitting it, than was shown in my support of the Spanish arms embargo voted on January 6; yet there has been some little inclination in some fields to look upon the effort involved as being "anti" this, or "pro" that. If there is to be insistence on reading names into the resolution, I can only point out that the name of no one country in particular should be used. It might be Portgual, it might be Italy, it might be Germany, it might be Russia, or it might be all of them. Again, it might be even others, depending upon the finding of certain facts concerning the action of nations in Spain; but I insist that the resclution is impartial, in proof of which I can but read it at this point:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to advise the Senate through its Committee on Foreign Relations whether the existing neutrality laws of the United States are sufficient to provide an embargo against nations whose armed forces are engaged in active warfare in a nation where a state of civil war exists, which state of civil war has caused our Government to declare embargoes against exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to that nation.

Mr. President, what this resolution seeks is knowledge of the basis of our Government's present attitude toward the activities in and about Spain today, to the end that in our consideration of the general neutrality problem and question we may better know the effectiveness of such policy as we may adopt.

It is quite apparent to me that the Government has not yet found a state of war to exist in Europe, or it would have been so proclaimed by the President. Perhaps the information which our Government has on the subject does not bear out the repeated stories being published on the direct aid being accorded one side or the other in Spain by nations foreign to Spain. If that is the case, Mr. President, then it is fair that Congress should have knowledge of it. Perhaps a state of war does not exist in Europe. Then, let us have knowledge of when, under our policy of neutrality, our Government will recognize a state of war to exist.

So long as we legislate a discretion to the President to determine when a state of war exists, let us have some indication of how that discretion is to be exercised. Perhaps we could then afford to incorporate in the law language that would help clarify and strengthen our American purpose. To this extent, a response to Senate Resolution 100 seems to me most necessary.

I fully appreciate that the task of determining when a state of war exists is not an easy one; yet I must insist that if our wish, purpose, and interest were served by the passage of the Spanish arms embargo in January of this year, it should not be difficult to determine when our policy of neutrality should be invoked as other foreign nations may become involved in the Spanish conflict.

If our action of January 6 was just and sound from the standpoint of our security and our American interests, why would it not be sound policy to invoke the provisions of our neutrality laws against nations which may be actively engaged with one side or the other in Spain?

Surely our Government is not going to await official declaration of wars before invoking our neutrality laws. If we do so wait, wars may go on for years without resort to our policy.

An editorial in the Pittsburgh Press of March 29 rather clearly establishes the fact that there is nothing new about undeclared wars. I ask to have this editorial incorporated in my remarks in its entirety.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. NYE. This editorial in part declares:

While on the subject of when is a war not a war, we did a little research to see if there have been any historical parallels to the Spanish situation. And some interesting facts came to light.

If Italy, as loyalist sympathizers charge, is actually waging an undeclared war on Spain, it is not the first time such an unofficial conflict has taken place. Contrary to what many of us may think, there have been quite a few undeclared wars in the last 300 years.

Back in the middle of the eighteenth century, England and France fought for 2 years before they got around to a formal declaration of war. The United States did not declare war in 1812, and to this day the British consider that struggle only an unofficial byproduct of their fight to crush Napoleon.

In 1884 French gunboats bombarded Chinese ports without any severance of diplomatic relations. And in 1894 Japan did not declare war against China until about a month after fighting actually began. Likewise, in 1904, the Japanese fleet attacked Port Arthur several days before hostilities were formally proclaimed.

The World War was declared and fought in approved diplomatic fashion, although even then several nations started fighting after breaking off diplomatic relations.

More recently, the Chaco war between Bolivia and Paraguay was fought unofficially for 3 years until Paraguay finally declared hostilities in 1933. Japan did not declare war against China when occupying Manchuria. And Italy invaded Ethiopia in 1935 without a preliminary declaration of hostilities.

Hence, there is nothing new about undeclared wars. If the State Department thinks Italian intervention in Spain constitutes actual war, it can find plenty of historical precedents to bolster its case.

Mr. President, it has been suggested that there is not, perhaps, a sufficiency of evidence proving official participation by certain governments in the Spanish civil war. Some would have us feel that it is unwise even to discuss the probabilities in this connection. It seems to me experience has rather clearly demonstrated that we shall best serve ourselves and our country if we acknowledge certain conditions and contentions.

I do not think it is poor or dangerous practice to acknowledge the facts that are confronting us today. I insist that there is the strongest possible case for the presumption that foreign troops and munitions are actively engaged in the Spanish civil war, and that such soldiers and munitions are there by the active consent of their governments. This seems especially true of one government in particular. Dispatches each day are revealing the Italian premier to be concentrating new divisions of Italian troops for dispatch to aid the Spanish forces opposing the Government of Spain.

The Spanish Government—still, so far as our Government is concerned, a friendly government, having our full diplomatic recognition—has stated, in a note to the League of Nations, that foreign troops were on Spanish soil, including tank and machine-gun corps and flame-projector companies, all of these motorized.

If we would doubt the word of the Spanish Government as being partial and prejudicial in the circumstances, let us look to an official report by a high French official, Robert Lasuet, who is reported by the Associated Press as declaring that 100,000 foreigners are fighting in Spain.

The New York Times, hardly friendly to the Spanish Government, takes the responsibility for publishing an article from its special correspondent in London on March 5, in which is found a very definite charge of foreign troops and war machines in Spain.

Mr. Knickerbocker, the leading foreign correspondent for the Hearst papers, reports in his letters seeing foreign planes and pilots in Spanish engagements.

As early as last October the New York Times foreign correspondent, Kluckhohn, who was behind the insurgent lines in Spain, reported that the "backbone of General Franco's army is now foreign", and that only foreign aid has made the rebel success to date possible.

Edwin L. James is another important commentator whose veracity and judgment would both be seriously questioned if there were no evidence that there were active foreign troops and munitions in Spain. He reports to the New York Times great activity by foreign forces in Spain.

On December 1, 1936, another prominent foreign correspondent, Charles A. Selden, risked his reputation for truth in an account of information received by the British foreign office of the landing of large foreign forces in Spain, and he said: "There is no doubt of the authenticity of the report."

Is there doubt about Italian aid to the Franco cause in Spain? Even Italian newspapers have admitted that there has been official Italian aid in Spain.

Italian occupation of the Balearic Islands, belonging to Spain, is reported by the distinguished and independent Manchester Guardian weekly in another clipping before me.

Doubt about official intervention of foreign forces in Spain cannot possibly exist.

Look to the confident assertion of the editor of the Washington Post on March 27, that the "State Department files are bulging with evidence showing that the Italian Government is very deeply involved in the Spanish crisis." This editor is noted for his knowledge of foreign affairs.

I ask that the editorial from the Washington Post to which I have referred be printed in its entirety in connection with my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of Mar. 27, 1937]

WHAT PRICE NEUTRALITY?

Administration leaders are taking a very curious attitude toward Senator NYE'S temperate resolution asking the Department of State to provide pertinent information on the armed intervention of other nations in the Spanish civil war. Objections to its immediate consideration, raised by Senators ROBINSON and PITTMAN, clearly indicate a desire to prevent discussion of the issue and, above all, to keep information known to be in possession of the Department of State from coming to light.

Senator PITTMAN specifically claims that "there isn't the slightest evidence" to show that the Italian Government is supporting the Spanish rebels. If that is really the belief of the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, he certainly needs all the information which the Nye resolution might be instrumental in obtaining. For State Department files are bulging with evidence, from our own diplomatic representatives in Spain and from other reliable sources, showing that the Italian Government is very deeply involved in the Spanish crisis. The Senate and the American people have every right to know the substance of these reports.

That right is the more apparent because of the character of our neutrality legislation, both on the statute books and pending. Under the law now in operation, we have declared embargoes against both sides in the Spanish civil war. Of itself that has meant effective American assistance to the Spanish rebels. In defiance of traditional international law, we have ruled that a revolt against a duly elected government is good and sufficient reason for penalizing that government.

There is already a widespread realization that as this policy is operating it is not neutrality at all but merely disguised assistance to a Fascist rebellion. And if, on top of that, administration spokesmen deny credibility to the abundant evidence that Italy is now openly aiding the Spanish rebels, the deep-rooted American sense of fair play will be deeply outraged.

The Post, as has often been made clear in these columns, is no believer in the efficacy or desirability of a mandatory neutrality policy. But when such a policy has been decided upon, it must be vigorously and consistently applied. Otherwise it becomes not merely worthless but a shameful travesty on the national will which prompted neutrality. And that is pretty close to being the actual situation when we refuse to ship munitions to the legal Spanish Government but happily ship them to Italy, Germany, and Portugal to be used against the only Spanish Government which we recognize.

Senator NYE merely asks the Secretary of State to advise the Senate "whether the existing neutrality laws of the United States are sufficient to provide an embargo against nations whose armed forces are engaged in active warfare in a nation where a state of civil war exists." The question is academic. Of course, the existing laws are sufficient to apply an embargo against Italy tomorrow if it is shown that her troops are fighting under governmental direction on Spanish soil. But it is desirable that Secretary Hull should say flatly that this is the case, since the mere statement might make extension of our neutrality embargoes unnecessary.

Unless effective external pressure is now brought to bear on Mussolini, he is very likely to intervene in the Spanish war in a way which will seriously endanger world peace. Most effective pressure to prevent that outcome can be brought by the United States. In the Ethiopian conquest, President Roosevelt did not wait for the declaration of war, which never came, before he announced that Italy was a belligerent. He does not need to wait now if the evidence of hostilities is sufficient. And none knows better than Secretary Hull that the evidence of Italian military intervention is already very close to being amply sufficient to define that country as being actually at war with Spain.

Extension of the neutrality embargoes in the event of actual Italian intervention is not optional for the administration. It is mandatory. It is not a matter of whether such policy would be desirable, though this is clearly the case. A policy of ordained neutrality toward all actual belligerents has already been clearly laid down by Congress and approved by the President. If the latter refuses to apply this policy in its first real test, there will certainly be no point in wasting any further time on the far more extensive neutrality legislation now tangled between the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, the reports to which I have been referring could be multiplied a thousand times. It has not been observed that any responsible correspondent in Spain has cared to deny that foreign troops and munitions have been participating in the war in Spain. The presumptive case seems so clear that I feel that the burden of proof is upon those who would show that nations are not engaged with armed forces in Spain.

We know that control by the government is such in certain countries that not a penny can leave the nation without governmental authorization, that not a man can cross the border without governmental approval of his departure. These governments need soldiers, and need them badly. It is preposterous to believe that they would let millions of dollars worth of munitions and scores of thousands of men depart their borders without their consent, approval, and intent.

I hope we can have such action on Senate Resolution 100 as will give us a true picture of the relationship of our law or laws and our policy toward the Spanish situation at the present time.

I realize, of course, that there is need for moving cautiously in matters of this kind, and I shall not object to the resolution being referred to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee; but I must insist that all the rules of fair play and consistency dictate that we should move embargoes against all governments participating in the Spanish conflict—embargoes equal to those we voted against the warring factions in Spain.

Just one more word. It seems to me that the further we go in the consideration of the problems arising out of arming nations at war the more we have brought home to us emphatically every hour the utter need, regardless of what other governments may do, of the Government of the United States producing very largely its own requirements of munitions, and, further, the need of our Government forbidding the exportation of munitions of war to other nations, in peace time or in war time.

I should like to have incorporated in the RECORD at this point an editorial appearing in the Philadelphia Record of March 15, 1937, calling attention to the part which other nations are playing in bringing about a program which confines nations to their own defense.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Record of Mar. 15, 1937]

FRANCE OUTLAWS THE MUNITIONS RACKET

"Men have been shot who have betrayed their country less than M. Schneider has done." So cried Henri Audraud in the Chamber of Deputies at Paris 5 years ago. The M. Schneider referred to was head of the great Schneider-Creusot munitions works.

Yesterday the French Government nationalized the Schneider-Creusot munitions works.

No longer will that particular merchant of death peddle his wares to the enemies of France, to be used to shoot down the soldiers of France—as was the case in the World War.

The Schneider-Creusot firm has been French in name but international in activity. Even before the World War it held as much as 25,000,000 shares of stock in the Russian armament firm of Poutiloff, and a substantial part of the stock of the famous Skoda munitions works in Czechoslovakia.

And Schneider-Creusot, during the World War, paid a dividend of 30 percent.

Is it any wonder France, acting under legislation passed last summer, nationalizes this great industry, so that henceforth it will work for France and France alone?

When will America follow suit?

When will we take over our own munitions plants—not by seizure but by condemnation and payment as France is doing—so that henceforth American munitions plants will work for America, and America alone?

Let our conservatives ponder the fact that French conservatives voted for the legislation under which the Schneider-Creusot works is being taken over. They did so because the qustion was one of national defense—a declaration of French independence from the international munitions racket.

We all know the story. The Nye committee's investigation told it in detail:

Manufacture of war scares; playing nation against nation in munitions competition, with profits for the arms ring on all sides; influence on Government finance; the alliance in France of the munitions men and the metal trust; and our own experience in the World War—

When United States arms makers actually held up production—until the Government agreed to pay the exorbitant prices they demanded.

The French Government has moved to end this piracy. When will our own?

Surely there's no reason for Congress to hesitate. In case its Members have forgotten, we recall for them the Gallup poll which showed 82 percent of the American people in favor of nationalizing our munitions industry.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, so many have been the inquiries concerning findings of the Senate Munitions Committee that I have seen fit to prepare a statement which can be sent to those many who make the inquiry. Without reading it, though it is very directly related to the subject I am discussing, especially the governmental control of the munitions industry, I ask unanimous consent that my statement on that question may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

For the past few years, Congress has been studying and has recently adopted some legislation which, it was thought, would effectively express and embody the hope and the will of the American people not to engage in foreign wars. Until the States of Europe become united by the bonds of peace, as the States of America are united, the clouds of war will continue to threaten one-half of the earth and to menace our own peace.

What have been the underlying causes of our past involvements and how shall we avoid foreign entanglements in the future? These questions and others which have a direct bearing upon this subject which has engaged not only our own attention but that of the entire world ever since the close of the World War, which left a shattered world in its wake and resulted in the greatest economic upheaval and human distress in our own history—these questions are answered in a remarkable book, War Madness, by Stephen and Joan Raushenbush, which has just been published by the National Home Library Foundation, Washington, D. C., on a nonprofit basis.

This book is based largely on information made available to the public in the hearings and reports of the United States Senate Munitions Committee. In language which everybody can understand, it is a forceful presentation of the facts and findings resulting from the committee's investigations of nearly 2 years.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, PRESIDENT WILSON, LLOYD GEORGE

President Roosevelt stated in 1934 that it was the munitions makers who were threatening our peace. Speaking of the armaments race, he said:

"This grave menace to the peace of the world is due in no small measure to the uncontrolled activities of the manufacturers and merchants of engines of destruction, and it must be met by the concerted action of the peoples of all nations."

President Wilson tried to have all private manufacture of arms eliminated after the World War. He proposed to include in the constitution for the League of Nations a provision that "the high contracting parties further agree that munitions and implements of war should not be manufactured by private enterprise and direct the executive council to advise how this practice can be dispensed with."

Lloyd George has told the British Royal Commission that private munitions makers should be abolished; that "it is not a healthy state of things in a community when a large and, on the whole, influential body of men * * * should have a direct pecuniary interest in war or agitations which lead to war."

AMERICA FACES THE ISSUE

The munitions makers do not like the thought, but Congress is going to have to vote for or against the munitions makers very soon.

War Madness discusses this most important subject. It describes the foreign-sales practice used by munitions companies in order to increase their foreign trade, and shows how they have worked in South America, Cuba, China, and Japan. It illustrates their antipeace activities and their interest in having disarmament conferences fail. The influence of these companies, plus that of the big Army and Navy supply companies in this country, is discussed. The American people are asked to consider seriously making the Army and Navy masters in their own house by asking them to produce all their combat weapons instead of producing only part of them and paying excessively high prices to the munitions and shipbuilding companies for the rest, as is the practice today.

CAN WE STAY OUT OF WAR?

Here is a summary of the influence of our war trade on our 1914–17 neutrality course and of the policy pursued during those years of permitting American babies and bullets to travel together on belligerent munitions-laden ships exposed to submarine attack. Using as background our 1914–17 experience, this book analyzes the various protective measures the United States might take if it wishes to avoid involvement in another major war into which our 1914–17 policies led us.

The authors see the decision for the American people as one between profits and peace, and point out that halfway neutrality measures will not do much toward keeping our peace. They see a war boom in this country as the greatest menace to our staying out of another major war. They recognize that real neutrality will cost us something; that it will mean giving up the large temporary profits of a war boom; but compared with the billions we would waste in war, the price of neutrality is cheap.

WAR WITHOUT PROFITS

A valuable service is performed by the book War Madness in analyzing the legislative attempt to take the profits out of war. After long study of this subject, the authors are convinced that the profits cannot be taken out of war, nor can the burdens of war be equalized for labor, drafted men, and capital. It warns the people against legislation purporting to do this. For lovers of democracy in the United States, this book calls attention to the Senate Munitions Committee report on the War Department's industrial mobilization plans for the next war and the committee's finding that under these plans there "may be actual operating dictatorship, under military control, in this country."

With the bombing of civilian populations and industrial centers from the air, intended to demoralize civilians and incite revolution, the danger to all democracy in another major war is emphasized. The question asked is whether lovers of democracy can contemplate participation in a future war without shuddering at the thought of the extremes another war will bring and without wondering whether democracy in any of the warring countries will survive the demands of war for complete and unquestioned control.

DID YOU KNOW?

How many know:

That Lammot du Pont, president of the most powerful industrial combination in the United States, thought "it was not helpful" to the peace of the world to have munitions makers going around trying to bribe governmental officials?

That the former president of the Navy League wrote of his desire to connive with the British Navy League to get rid of the London Naval Pact?

That the munitions makers made the Navy "pay through the nose" (this means the taxpayers) for ships in 1933 simply because the Navy needed the ships?

That a high admiral of the Navy planned to use Navy Day to defeat candidates for Congress?

That an Army general preferred to permit American military secrets to be sold abroad rather than let the munitions companies go without profits?

That a prominent banker and munitioneer thought increased armaments might bring on war rather than promote peace?

That the Munitions Committee suggested a referendum to be held in 1938 on whether men should ever be drafted for service outside continental America?

That there is a possibility that the United States is too poor to forego profits and stay out of foreign wars?

The authors of this book are well qualified to write on these all-important subjects. Stephen Raushenbush was secretary and chief investigator of the special Senate committee investigating the munitions industry during the entire course of its work. He is a recognized expert in this field. Mrs. Raushenbush, before her marriage, served as investigator for the committee and worked largely on the committee's studies of the neutrality policies of the United States from 1914–17, prior to our entrance into the war.

Written for the average American citizen, this book presents clearly the issues and questions so vital to the peace of this Nation. It asks the American people to examine them carefully if they desire to save the lives of America's young men and to use the resources of this Nation to further our own progress and well-being, and if they are determined to avoid the horrors of war.

War Madness, by Stephen and Joan Raushenbush, should be required reading for all American citizens.

SENATOR NYE'S QUESTION

It will be interesting to see what reply the State Department makes to Senator NYE's request for a statement as to whether or not Italy is at war with Spain.

Offhand, we would say that Italy is certainly fighting somebody in Spain, for she has an estimated 80,000 troops there, plus several hundred airplanes and tanks. Even the Italian Foreign Office cannot maintain that the soldiers are there simply for maneuvers or that they are innocent bystanders.

But, then, diplomats don't always take into consideration such concrete facts. Before there can be war, according to them, there must be a formal breaking off of diplomatic relations, followed by an ultimatum or two and then an equally formal declaration of war. Only then is it diplomatically permissible to send an army to invade a country's territory.

There has been no break in diplomatic relations between Spain and Italy, nor any ultimatum or declaration of hostilities. The Italians simply sent an army into Spain—they call it a "volunteer" force—and it started fighting.

Therefore, the State Department's reply to the NYE inquiry will not be easy to draft. Officially, it can say Italy is neutral. But try to tell that to Spanish Loyalists who have been the targets of Italian machine gunners and bombers. And if it says Italy and Spain are at war, Mussolini's Foreign Office can be depended upon to issue an indignant denial and to point to the diplomatic record to prove its case.

We don't envy the State Department its task. It's going to be damned if it does and damned if it doesn't. Whatever the reply, somebody is going to be offended.

In traditional diplomatic fashion, the Department could sidestep Senator NYE's question. But we hope that it won't. This is too serious a crisis to play blind man's buff.

Besides, that's what the European powers have been doing in regard to Spain. And as a result, the situation has got out of hand. Perhaps, if a few countries had done some plain talking, the present international complications of the Spanish struggle would have been avoided.

We don't profess to know what the State Department's reply should be, for it has access to accurate, direct, and unpublished information about this crisis that ordinary citizens don't possess. But we do think it should plainly and bluntly speak its mind.

There are times when frank diplomacy is the best diplomacy. We believe this is one of them.

While on the subject of when is a war not a war, we did a little research to see if there have been any historical parallels to the Spanish situation. And some interesting facts came to light.

If Italy, as Loyalist sympathizers charge, is actually waging an undeclared war on Spain, it is not the first time such an unofficial conflict has taken place. Contrary to what many of us may think, there have been quite a few undeclared wars in the last 300 years.

Back in the middle of the eighteenth century, England and France fought for 2 years before they got around to a formal declaration of war. The United States did not declare war in 1812, and to this day the British consider that struggle only an unofficial byproduct of their fight to crush Napoleon.

In 1884 French gunboats bombarded Chinese ports without any severance of diplomatic relations. And in 1894 Japan did not declare war against China until about a month after fighting actually began. Likewise, in 1904, the Japanese fleet attacked Port Arthur several days before hostilities were formally proclaimed.

The World War was declared and fought in approved diplomatic fashion, although even then several nations started fighting after breaking off diplomatic relations.

More recently, the Chaco war between Bolivia and Paraguay was fought unofficially for 3 years until Paraguay finally declared hostilities in 1933. Japan did not declare war against China when occupying Manchuria. And Italy invaded Ethiopia in 1935 without a preliminary declaration of hostilities.

Hence, there is nothing new about undeclared wars. If the State Department thinks Italian intervention in Spain constitutes actual war, it can find plenty of historical precedents to bolster its case.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have moved to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations because, in the first place, in my opinion, it is not in proper form. The Senator from North Dakota states a hypothetical case and then asks for an opinion upon the hypothetical case. The Senator's resolution asks the opinion of the Secretary of State as to whether or not the embargo against the exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to a state wherein there is civil war should be extended to those governments "whose armed forces are engaged in active warfare in such nation" where there is civil war.

The present law could not be extended to any state wherein there was not civil war, of course. It would be extended to another state if it were engaged in war with the government of the state where there is a civil war.

I take it that the words "armed forces" in international law universally mean military forces under the control of a government. I do not take it that "armed forces" mean nationals of a government who are under arms in a foreign country. If that were true, then the armed forces of the United States would be today engaged in war in Spain, because it is undobutedly true that a great many American citizens today are engaged in the civil war in that country on one side or the other. They are our citizens; they are under arms; they are in armed forces, but they are not a part of the armed forces of the United States.

The Senator assumes that the armed forces of some other country than Spain are engaged in war in Spain, and then says, "That being a fact, Mr. Secretary, should our embargo law apply to that country?"

Of course, it could not apply to that outside country unless we found that there was a state of war existing on the part of that outside country with the government of a country in which there is a civil war. I think possibly that is the question on which the Senator from North Dakota is attempting to obtain an opinion from the Secretary of State. If so, the resolution should be put in proper form by the Committee on Foreign Relations, if the committee decides that it is proper to ask such advice from the Secretary. We must not assume a certain state of facts and then ask for an opinion on such state of facts.

I think it is very unfortunate for any government, through any department, to take any official or semiofficial action insinuating that any other government is engaged in a wrongful act. I think it is very dangerous to our peace for any government, through any of its official or semiofficial departments, to insinuate that one government is conducting an undeclared war against another government until the facts are clearly established—in fact, are obviously recognized, as they were in the case of the war between Italy and Ethiopia.

As to whether or not any armed forces, under the definition of "armed forces" generally recognized in military matters, are engaged in war in Spain, I have no evidence. I know that various governments which are undoubtdely interested in that civil war have charged other governments interested in that civil war either with sending or permitting their nationals to enter into Spain for the purpose of engaging on one side or the other of that conflict. Only recently it has been charged, I believe by the representative of the Russian Government, that the Government of Italy was violating the understanding with regard to nonintervention in Spain, but at the same time the representative of Italy at that meeting challenged the statement and denied it. That issue was referred to a committee of the Non-Intervention Committee, representing 27 governments. Similar charges have heretofore been flung back and forth between these countries. Now, all these charges have been referred to a committee of representatives of 27 governments interested in nonintervention, and interested in attempting to prevent that civil war from spreading. There are 27 governments which are opposed to intervention. There are 27 governments, most of which today have placed an embargo upon the shipment of arms and ammunition into Spain. That embargo is in existence. Nearly all of the governments have agreed to restrain their nationals from going into Spain any further.

The situation is as well in hand as the great governments in the world who are in the area of this threatned world war can have it in hand. They have authorized committees to try these questions. The questions are now submitted. If war breaks out, those countries will be immediately affected and endangered. In that circumstance why should we attempt to drag our Government into the fire of this serious and dangerous question which threatens universal war? We are not a member of the committee representing 27 governments. We are not a member of the League of Nations. We are not directly involved in the threatened European contest. We know that everything on earth is being done by most of those governments to localize the conflict and to prevent it from spreading. They will do so, if possible. Certainly there is nothing that we could do to stop the spread of that war—not a thing on earth. While we may eliminate some of the chief causes that tended to drag us into the last great World War, none of those acts will be of any benefit at all to us if we arouse the enmity and hatred of powerful governments of the world.

I think this matter should not be stirred up in this country when there is nothing that we can accomplish by stirring it up except to arouse hatred.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, before the motion is voted upon, I should like to add just one brief statement:

When Senate Resolution 100 was presented by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] was temporarily absent from the Chamber; and I asked that the resolution go over, explaining personally to the author of the resolution that, in my judgment, the resolution would not accomplish its purpose for the reason that it called for the expression of a legal opinion by the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State is not a law officer. He does not express opinions on legal questions. He does not advise either House of Congress on such subjects.

As will be noted from a reading of the resolution, the Secretary of State is asked to say—

> Whether the existing neutrality laws of the United States are sufficient to provide an embargo against nations whose armed forces are engaged in active warfare in a nation where a state of civil war exists. * * *

Manifestly such a question should not be addressed to the Secretary of State; and manifestly, in all probability, the Secretary of State would refuse to act as the legal adviser of a Senator or of the Senate. He has no authority and no obligation under the law to perform such functions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 63) providing for a continuance of the participation of the United States in the Great Lakes Exposition in the State of Ohio in 1937, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 316. An act for the relief of Edward Y. Garcia and Aurelia Garcia;

S. 525. An act for the relief of Harry King;

S. 544. An act for the relief of M. K. Fisher;

S. 784. An act for the relief of Amelia Corr;

S. 1133. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1909, to extend commissary privileges to widows of officers and enlisted men of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, and also to officers of the Foreign Service of the United States at foreign stations;

S. 1311. An act for the relief of Norman Hildebrand;

S. 1455. An act to authorize certain officers of the United States Navy, officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the United States Army, and officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps to accept such medals, orders, and decorations as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered;

S. 1550. An act to provide for the appointment of two additional circuit judges for the ninth judicial circuit;

H. R. 157. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation of disabled residents of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes" (Public, No. 801, 70th Cong.);

H. R. 4286. An act to provide special rates of postage on matter for the blind;

H. R. 5293. An act to authorize the acquisition of 640 acres of land for the use and benefit of the Santa Rosa Band of Mission Indians, State of California;

H. R. 5299. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange certain lands and water rights in Inyo and Mono Counties, Calif., with the city of Los Angeles, and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 226. Joint resolution to amend section 7 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes", approved July 1, 1902, as amended; and

H. J. Res. 278. Joint resolution to make funds available to carry out the provisions of existing law authorizing the purchase and distribution of products of the fishing industry.

JACK J. WICK

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1414) for the relief of Jack J. Wick, which were, on page 1, line 4, to strike out all after "to", down to and including "the" where it occurs the first time in line 9, and insert "receive, settle, and adjust all claims of contractors in connection with the constructing and equipping of the factory building at the Reedsville Experimental Community, a subsistence homestead project, at Arthurdale, W. Va. The"; page 2, line 1, after "extended", to insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary"; page 2, line 2, to strike out "claim" and insert "claims"; page 2, line 6, to strike out "said claim" and insert "these claims"; page 2, line 10, to strike out "said claim" and insert "these claims"; and to amend the title so as to read "An act to provide for the settlement and adjustment of claims of contractors in connection with the construction of the factory building at the Reedsville Experimental Community, Arthurdale, W. Va."

Mr. NEELY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—PROCEDURE IN CERTIORARI CASES

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, it is my intention to discuss one ground relied upon by the proponents of the bill to reorganize the judiciary, and if I am not drawn away from that ground by interrogatories I hope to confine my remarks so that material with reference to it will appear in one place in the RECORD, unified and all together, and not scattered over many days and interlarded with several different subjects. The subject I propose to discuss is petitions for certiorari provided for by the act of 1925, the principle that animates the act itself, the practice under the act by the Court, the fact that there is now no claim that the act is unwise or that it ought to be amended or repealed, and, ultimately, the fact that it is almost the last resort of those who support the President's proposal.

As the hearings before the Judiciary Committee proceed, and the sifting process of examination and cross-examination takes place, we must come practically to the conclusion that there is nothing wrong about the method provided by the law which gives to the Supreme Court a very broad discretion to pass upon what cases it will entertain jurisdiction of so as to hear them upon their merits. The facts adduced must bring the statement, "Yes; we admit that the Court is abreast of its docket; it is an indisputable fact that the Court is not in arrears in its work." The record taken before the committee from the very first witness, Hon. Homer Cummings, the Attorney General, down to the last witness, makes clear, beyond any question, the fundamental fact that the Court is not behind in its work.

Let me read just a line from the testimony, carefully prepared, of the Attorney General, who was the first witness. I read from page 19 of the transcript of the first volume:

> Nevertheless there are those who, with something of a flourish, reassert the undisputed fact that the Supreme Court is up with its docket, apparently unmindful that, under the existing practice, there is no reason why it should be otherwise.

Let us clear the decks for close fighting. The Attorney General, the man whose words are probably the words of the President of the United States, for, I think, it is safe to say that our Presidents occupy perhaps a similar position to that of Charles II which he described when he said, "My acts are my own, but my words are the words of my ministers."

So I think it is safe to say, if we read carefully the President's message to the Congress, and the accompanying letter of the Attorney General, and his carefully prepared written speech read by him before the Committee on the Judiciary, that when we go to headquarters, when we go to the source of this effort to reorganize the judiciary—and I am particularly interested in the Supreme Court in discussing this question—we find that it is admitted that the Court is up with its docket. But the charge that is made is another thing, and it is that to which I wish to direct attention. I shall not do so by argument; I wish I could avoid argument though, of course, it is natural to draw inferences as one goes along presenting evidence; but the main thing I am undertaking to do is to present evidence, to present the record, so that any man, without argument, may pass upon this charge that is pregnant in the words—

> Under the existing practice, there is no reason why it should be otherwise.

Again, on the same page, after passing over some of the text, occurs this expression by the Attorney General:

> The question is not whether the Court is up with the docket, but by what means it keeps up with the docket, and whether the burden that it must sustain is too great to warrant the careful consideration to which these petitions are entitled and whether assistance, by the appointment of additional Judges, is indicated.

Mr. President, my impression of the effect of the testimony before the Judiciary Committee is that the charge that age is a cause for this measure has practically been abandoned. In any event, if it has not been voluntarily abandoned, the great weight of the evidence is against it as a reason for changing the personnel of the Court by act of Congress and act of the Chief Executive. So we come right down to the question of whether the means by which the Court is able to do its work and keep abreast of its docket is contrary to the law or contrary to the public policy or contrary to the intention of the Congress; for, Mr. President, if there is anything wrong in the theory, if there is anything wrong in the power to exercise discretion in this matter, Congress and not the Court is responsible for that, and the remedy for it is not to increase the number of Judges on the Supreme Bench, but I apprehend it is to amend the act of 1925.

Some who support the proposal to increase the Court make the claim to which I am about to refer. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], who is not present, but to whose office I sent a message this morning as soon as I knew that I would address the Senate upon this subject, referring to the letter of the Chief Justice, which was put in evidence before the committee and introduced into the record, said:

> In his letter he gives no information whatsoever concerning the method of disposition of these cases. The process is still as much of a mystery as it has always been. The President does not know the method. The Congress does not know the method. The lawyers do not know the method. The Court only knows the method, and does not disclose it.

Mr. President, I apprehend that the Senator from Tennessee had forgotten the facts to which I am going to call attention. I do not characterize his remarks. I think that, with the busy life we all lead, the utmost consideration for the frailty of humankind with respect to memory should always be given, and I hope it will always be accorded to me. The Senator from Tennessee was a Member of this body at the time when the bill was introduced which became the Judiciary Act of 1925.

I am going to refer to the hearings on Senate bill 2060 and Senate bill 2061, which cover the subject matter of the legislation enacted in 1925, one of them being the first draft of the law itself, and the other being an act to empower the Supreme Court to make rules that would govern applications for certiorari and the principles upon which they should be denied or granted.

I now read extracts from the record to show that there is no mystery about the principle involved in dealing with cases involving or petitions for certiorari; that it is not a secret which the Court conceals or can conceal or desires to conceal, and that every Senator was charged with knowledge before he voted on the act of 1925 of the entire principle governing the granting or denial of petitions for certiorari. More than that, he was charged with knowledge of the practice that has been followed for years with respect to such petitions. The story is fully unfolded in those hearings. I do not say that the Senator from Tennessee knew about them; but I have observed in the report of the hearings an extract from one of the speeches of the Senator from Tennessee relating to the conditions in the inferior courts, conditions which constituted a cause for the Judiciary Act of 1925. I read now from page 26 of the hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session, on S. 2061 and S. 2060, when Mr. Justice Van Devanter was testifying:

> The title of the act as introduced in the Senate is, "A bill to amend the Judicial Code, further to define the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of appeal and of the Supreme Court, and for other purposes." What it does is to take up all the various statutes dealing with the appellate jurisdiction of the circuit courts of appeal and the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, to bring them together and restate the law on the subject, to make the various provisions harmonious, and to eliminate some of the obligatory jurisdiction now existing in the Supreme Court, to transfer some that now exists to the circuit courts of appeal, and to enlarge the discretionary jurisdiction which the Supreme Court now exercises on petitions for certiorari.

I do not need to discuss that. It presents the picture. Here the Congress was undertaking to do something beneficial, something constructive, something that had to do with the administration of justice and particularly with the speeding up of the trial of cases, not only in the lower courts but also in the Supreme Court, in order that the Court could get abreast of its docket and stay abreast of its docket. There at the outset, in a most concise manner, is a description of the purposes of the act of 1925 with respect to petitions for certiorari. It was designed to reduce the obligatory jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, to broaden out and increase its discretionary jurisdiction and amplify its power to say in principle, to which I am going to allude later, "These cases will not be heard" or "These cases will be heard."

I now read further from the testimony of Mr. Justice Van Devanter as it appears at page 28 of the hearings to which I have referred:

> Mr. Justice VAN DEVANTER. This bill extends existing statute so as to cover a large number of cases. There are classes of cases to which the existing certiorari provisions do not now apply and in which we could not, even if it seemed wise in point of merit, grant a writ of certiorari. This bill will enable us to grant such a writ in any case pending before a circuit court of appeals. It also does away with the obligatory jurisdiction on appeal or writ of error, as to circuit courts of appeal cases, by providing that no case shall come from those courts to the Supreme Court except on petition for certiorari.
> Mr. Justice MCREYNOLDS. The theory being that after two trials in a Federal court as of right—one in the district court and one in the circuit court of appeals—the matter should end, subject to a discretionary review in the Supreme Court for some superior reason.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point those portions of the committee hearings which I have indicated on pages 28, 29, and 30 of that record.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> Mr. Justice VAN DEVANTER. That is true. No case comes into a circuit court of appeals except it has passed already through the trial court, and when the trial court and the circuit court of appeals have both considered and decided it the bill proceeds on the theory that the Supreme Court should not be required to review the case unless there be in it some question or matter of such importance as would cause that Court in the exercise of a sound discretion to take the case.
> I may say something here about what is done with petitions for certiorari. Such a petition is presented on behalf of the litigant who feels aggrieved at the decision of the circuit court of appeals. It specifies the character of the case, its history, the questions decided, and the particular or particulars wherein it is insisted that the decision of the circuit court of appeals was wrong. A brief accompanies the petition. Both are served upon counsel for the other party, and he is given opportunity, and usually avails himself of it, to file an opposing brief. The Supreme Court then examines the matter on the petition, record, and briefs, each member of the Court making his own examination. In our conference a vote is taken on the question whether the petition shall be granted or refused, in the same way that we vote in other cases. If there be occasion for discussion, the discussion is had as in other matters. Not only that, but whenever the vote is relatively close the conference makes it a practice to grant the petition.
> Mr. Justice SUTHERLAND. Even though a majority be against it?
>
> Mr. Justice VAN DEVANTER. Yes. For instance, if there were five votes against granting the petition and four in favor of granting it, it would be granted, because we proceed upon the theory that when as many as four members of the Court, and even three, in some instances, are impressed with the propriety of our taking the case the petition should be granted. This is the uniform way in which petitions for writs of certiorari are considered.
>
> Senator CUMMINS. I should like to ask a question at this point. I am not sure that it is a proper question, but I know that the curious-minded will be apt to ask it when we get further along. In cases coming from the circuit court of appeals, of which you now have jurisdiction only through the writ of certiorari, does the Supreme Court in passing upon the application give greater heed to the amount involved or to the character of the questions involved?
>
> Mr. Justice VAN DEVANTER. I have no hesitation in answering to the character of the questions involved.
>
> Mr. Justice MCREYNOLDS. Really, the amount involved receives very little consideration.
>
> Mr. Justice VAN DEVANTER. I would make my answer positive on that matter.
> I deem it well to state further the lines on which the Court proceeds in determining whether a writ of certiorari shall be granted. The inquiry is, first, whether or not the case is one in which a petition for certiorari will lie at all; next, whether the questions presented in the case are of wide or public importance or concern only the parties to the particular case; next, whether there is any conflict between the decision that is complained of and decisions on the same question in other circuit courts of appeal or in the Supreme Court; and next, if any of the questions determined by the circuit court of appeals be questions of State law, whether or not there is a conflict between the decision of that court thereon and the decisions of the court of last resort in the State on the same questions. Whenever we find such a conflict that, without more, leads to the granting of the petition, if the case be one in which a petition for certiorari will lie.

Generally speaking, the chief question is whether the case is of such a character that the last word, the ultimate guiding rule, should be announced by the Supreme Court so that there may be uniformity of decision in the several circuit courts of appeal, and also uniformity of decision in the State courts insofar as Federal matters are concerned.

One of the advantages of this discretionary jurisdiction on certiorari is that at the very threshold it enables the parties to learn whether the Supreme Court is going to take jurisdiction; whether their affairs shall be held in abeyance for a year or longer during the pendency of the case, or whether they must accept the decision of the circuit court of appeals. That is a very real advantage, for, besides providing uncertainty and delay in a very large number of cases, it saves a considerable amount of expense.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Justice Van Devanter again said, on page 30:

Granting the writ means, and only means, that the Court finds probable cause for a full consideration of the case in ordinary course.

On page 36 he said further:

In dealing with petitions for certiorari from State courts the Court proceeds upon just the same lines that it does with petitions for certiorari to circuit courts of appeals, and all that I have said about the modes in which the latter are considered applies equally to petitions for certiorari coming from State courts.

At page 43 occurs the following:

Senator CUMMINS. There probably will be no legislation with regard to your procedure in that respect. But it seems to me there is suggested in this bill a plan for the speedier disposition of the ordinary cases that come before you. I understand you to say that there are a great many cases come before you that ought not to be there.

Mr. Justice VAN DEVANTER. Yes.

Senator CUMMINS. And that they are not of sufficient importance from any point of view to command the attention of the Supreme Court?

Mr. Justice VAN DEVANTER. I think that is true of a good many.

Senator CUMMINS. And the general suggestion of this bill is that cases might be eliminated, and if they were eliminated you would be able to dispose of the cases that really ought to be in the Supreme Court more speedily than you are now doing?

Mr. Justice VAN DEVANTER. I think so. I should say that under the operation of this bill cases ought not to remain on the docket more than 6 months, and perhaps a little less, before the time of ordinary hearing, even making allowance for advancing cases as required now.

Senator CUMMINS. Would not this be true, as a general statement that considering the delays incident to the trial of every case, if this bill were to pass the Supreme Court would be able to keep up with its business?

Mr. Justice VAN DEVANTER. I think it would be as nearly current as would be practicable, considering the time required for printing the records and the time that counsel ordinarily would take to prepare their briefs and the need for presenting them thoroughly. But making allowance for those things, I think that under this bill the business would be practically current. It would not become so immediately, but I should think it would within a year.

On page 45 Mr. Justice McReynolds testified:

The general theory is that after one has had two trials in a Federal court, one in the district court and one in the circuit court of appeals, mere private litigation should stop; but if the cause involves matter of general importance, some statute to be construed, some constitutional provision, it should come to us for final disposition. Also where circuit courts of appeals entertain different views, the case should come up.

Mr. President, it will be recalled that in the message to the Congress which came from the President that very point was raised with some emphasis, as I thought, namely, the point that in connection with recent legislation of the Congress some courts had held one way and other courts had held another, and that it is for the general welfare to have a court which will act with expedition in deciding which holding is correct and making the law uniform throughout the Nation.

To that I subscribe fully. The record shows, however, that for such delays as have occurred in a large number of cases of recent date we cannot charge the Supreme Court. It will be found that the delays were requested by the Government, by the Attorney General, and were granted at their request and on their representation that they needed more time in which to prepare for trial. I do not question that. I have no doubt they needed the time, that their request was reasonable, and that the extension was wisely granted. What I object to is, now in this emotional period, when half truths have the effect of whole truths, making use of the mere statement that there were delays, without having anybody know that the delays were occasioned at the request of the Government and not because the Court was crowded in its business.

Referring again to page 45 of the testimony of Mr. Justice McReynolds, I read further:

The last situation is illustrated by a case heard the other day. About 1904, as I recall, Congress provided for taxing adulterated butter. That statute was construed in the sixth circuit. Several years afterward the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals arrived at a different conclusion. It came to us upon certiorari. Now the construction will be final.

I read now from page 47 of Mr. Justice Sutherland's testimony. I invite attention to the fact that Mr. Justice Sutherland had then only recently left the Senate and gone on the bench, and he was particularly expert as to the bill relating to the power to make rules governing certiorari cases. I think his testimony is devoted more particularly to that aspect of the matter, but it enters into any consideration we may make of the question whether there is in fact, in the practice under the Judiciary Act of 1925, any delay that is in conflict with public policy or any misapplication of the discretion granted by the act of 1925 which justifies Congress in creating six new vacancies on the Supreme Court Bench and having the President fill them.

Mr. Justice Sutherland said:

I can say this much about it from my observations thus far, that a very large proportion of the cases that come to that Court—I would not undertake to say what proportion—ought never to be there at all.

With the exception of cases from the Court of Claims, this bill does not deprive anybody of the right of appellate review. The only thing that it does is to stop the review in some cases at the circuit court of appeals which do not stop there under the existing law. The circuit court of appeals consists of three judges and ranks with any of the State supreme courts in the Union. With State litigation with the exception of such cases as may come to this court because they present some Federal question, the review stops with the State supreme court; that is, the States have thought it was sufficient with rare exceptions, to have a case reviewed by one appellate court; and I would say that perhaps half of the cases that come to our court now ought to stop with the circuit court of appeals; that when a litigant has had a trial before a trial judge, and has gone to a court of appeals of as high rank as the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States he ought to stop there. The result of crowding the calendar here is, as both my brothers have said, to delay inordinately the hearing of the cases that are meritorious and that ought to be heard in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. President, as further evidence that there was nothing mysterious about this discretionary power of the Court, nothing hidden, nothing furtive, and nothing necessary to say to the Congress of the United States today, because it was all said in 1925, I now call attention to the hearings in the House Judiciary Committee, which have been available since 1925, which were available last week, and which are available today.

I read from hearings before the Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session, on H. R. 8206.

Let me, for the RECORD, coordinate that number with the numbers from which I have read. On December 18, 1924, H. R. 8206 was coordinated with S. 2060, as shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at various pages, to wit: For January 31, 1925, pages 2750–2754; for February 3, 1925, pages 2916–2925. Here the Senate, acting in Committee of the Whole, considered H. R. 8206, struck out all the matter after the enacting clause, and substituted all of the matter in S. 2060, as perfected by amendments. So we are dealing with the same subject matter in both of these hearings.

I first read from page 7, the testimony of Mr. Justice Van Devanter:

Two modes of invoking a review in the Supreme Court are now recognized. One is by writ of error or appeal, and is commonly spoken of as an obligatory jurisdiction, because it may be invoked as of right by a litigant whose case is within the class subject to that mode of review. The other is by writ of certiorari—

Let me digress long enough to call attention to the fact that we are now speaking of history. We are now speaking of experience. The right to invoke the jurisdiction of the Court by a petition for a writ to certify the record from a lower court did not originate in the act of 1925. It was in existence before that time; and, because it was in existence previously, no man in the United States Senate or anywhere else who can read, and who is sufficiently interested to read the RECORD, should be in ignorance about it, or believe that there is any mystery about it, or charge that the Court will not tell us what to do. Here is a record that tells what they did do, what their experience was. It is history speaking, with a somewhat venerable accent.

The other is by writ of certiorari, and is commonly spoken of as a discretionary jurisdiction because the court is invested with a discretion to deny a review unless it appears that the questions presented are of public importance or of wide general interest, or that in the interest of uniformity that court should consider and decide them.

Is there anything mysterious about that rule? Is it vague because it is too general? I will leave it to those who read it to answer that question. My own observation and experience is that a discretion that has not latitude in it, a discretion that is attempted to be circumscribed by legislation, is not of great utility, and that if this effort of Congress and of lawyers and of judges had any hope whatever of accomplishing and of perpetuating its objective, that hope rested in a discretion broad enough so that the Court could determine, on every petition, whether the matter presented was of sufficient public importance to justify devoting the attention of the Federal Supreme Court to it, or whether it was of wide general interest, or whether in the interest of uniformity, to which attention has been called previously, that court should consider and decide the matter.

I now read from page 8, from the statment of the same witness:

While the authority of the Supreme Court to take cases on petition for certiorari is spoken of as a discretionary jurisdiction, this does not mean that the Court is authorized merely to exercise a will in the matter but rather that the petition is to be granted or denied according to a sound judicial discretion. What actually is done may well be stated here with some particularity.

Mr. President, note that with particularity, now, the Court is telling of experience. No man exercising a reasonable amount of care in looking at a problem of this great importance should be ignorant of this history, because it answers the charge that there is something mysterious, that there is something covered up, that there is something sly and furtive, in the manner in which petitions for certiorari are dismissed.

What actually is done may well be stated here with some particularity. The party aggrieved by the decision of the circuit court of appeals and seeking a further review in the Supreme Court is required to present to it a petition and accompanying brief, setting forth the nature of the case, what questions are involved, how they were decided in the circuit court of appeals, and why the case should not rest on the decision of that court. The petition and brief are required to be served on the other party, and time is given for the presentation of an opposing brief. When this has been done copies of the printed record as it came from the circuit court of appeals and of the petition and briefs are distributed among the members of the Supreme Court, and each judge examines them and prepares a memorandum or note indicating his view of what should be done.

We heard the learned Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] question whether each judge examined these documents, and heard him assert that the letter from the Chief Justice to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] did not show whether each judge did or did not examine them. Here is the history of the case. Here is the history of the operation of the Court on petitions for certiorari before the act of 1925 was passed, given for the purpose of showing the Congress what would be done under the act of 1925.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Will the Senator from Vermont allow the present occupant of the chair to ask for information, if it will not disturb the Senator? When were these examinations had, and before what body of Congress and to what subject came this testimony?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I thank the Presiding Officer for calling attention to a matter which I had omitted to state. The date of the hearing was December 18, 1924. It was before the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives on House bill 8206, which became the Judiciary Act of 1925, after the Senate struck out all after the enacting clause and substituted the text of the Senate bill relating to the same matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thanks the Senator.

Mr. AUSTIN. Referring again to page 8, Mr. Justice Van Devanter appears to have justified, as follows:

In conference these cases are called, each in its turn, and each judge states his views in extenso or briefly as he thinks proper; and when all have spoken any difference in opinion is discussed and then a vote is taken. I explain this at some length because it seems to be thought outside that the cases are referred to particular judges, as, for instance, that those coming from a particular circuit are referred to the justice assigned to that circuit, and that he reports on them, and the others accept his report. That impression is wholly at variance with what actually occurs.

We do not grant or deny these petitions merely according to a majority vote. We always grant the petition when as many as four think that it should be granted, and sometimes when as many as three think that way. We proceed upon the theory that, if that number out of the nine are impressed with the thought that the case is one that ought to be heard and decided by us, the petition should be granted.

Mr. President, I submit that there is not much left to the imagination. In a brief paragraph, which occupies only half a page, there is a description in detail of what goes on inside the chamber of the Court on a petition for certiorari. There is no mystery about it. Every Justice studies every case. In conference every case comes up in regular order, and is discussed and disposed of as an individual case.

It is said in the testimony of the Attorney General that there are so many pages to the transcripts of testimony that a mathematical calculation can be made proving absolutely, and beyond any question at all, that the Court does not perform its duty; that is, that it could not, in the time allowed, read all the testimony.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. In just a moment. This record shows that under the practice as it existed when the bill then before Congress was being considered, testimony was studied if it became apparent from an examination of the petition that there was involved a matter of public import, a matter which affected the general welfare, or a matter which related to uniformity in the administration of the law, any of the matters which really gave jurisdiction, really excited into action the discretion given to the Court by the law. In all such cases the Court went into detail on the record of testimony and made a search. But I cannot conceive of a lawyer who has had experience in the trial of cases in court insisting upon the judge who passes upon the original question of color of right to a hearing reading the testimony page by page on every petition that is presented.

Now I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I think the Senator has covered the point I wanted to bring out. I was amazed to read the statement of the Attorney General to the effect that the judges had to read every page in order to know whether or not a certiorari should be granted. Any lawyer of experience who has ever tried a case, first in the lower court and then in the appellate court, knows that in practically no case in the appellate court is it necessary for the court to read all of the testimony. That is all the more true when the only question they have to examine in the appellate court on certiorari is as to whether or not there is a point involved which entitles the parties to certiorari, and that point will be stated in a brief filed by the attorneys who come up with the petition for certiorari, and it will be denied by the attorneys who oppose it. If the Attorney General would read the briefs which are ordinarily filed in certiorari cases, he would find that in no case does either the petitioner for the certiorari or those who are opposing the granting of the certiorari take the evidence into consideration to any extent. It is not necessary for them to consider the evidence until the particular point comes before the Supreme Court after the petition for certiorari has been granted.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Montana. I agree with him fully.

It occurred to me, as I thought this matter over, that if the lawyers keenly interested for their clients and for their causes are unable to present in the petition and answer, and in their briefs, any issue which ought to excite the exercise of discretion by the Court, it is not likely that the Court, occupying, as it does, a judicial attitude toward the matter, could discover such an issue if it went through the transcript of testimony with a fine-tooth comb. If a Federal question is involved, if a question which relates to the public interest in any way is involved, if there is a question which goes one step beyond the little private issue between two litigants, is it not safe to say that the counsel to whose benefit the setting up of the issue would inure would set it forth in his petition so that it would stand out to catch the eye of the Court at once? That being so it is rather amazing to find the Attorney General of the United States criticizing the physical power of the Court to read so many thousand pages in so many days.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Many times when there is a petition for certiorari going to the Supreme Court of the United States from the circuit court of appeals there will be only one point or two points involved, and the points will be set out in the brief very simply. So that it could not be possible that it would be necessary for the court to read all the evidence in the case in order to determine whether the one point, or the two points, or the three points, or the four points brought the case within the rule of the Supreme Court, or within a law enacted by the Congress.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Montana. I believe his statement to be correct.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I would not interrupt the Senator had he not already been interrupted. Did the Senator say that the Justices have stated in any of their testimony that in the first instance they read the petitions and briefs themselves?

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, yes. I think that has been stated several times.

Mr. MINTON. They read each and every petition and each and every brief that is filed in certiorari?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. I have just read the statement of one Justice speaking that way. Let me repeat it. I read again from something I have already read, on page 8 of the report of the hearings before the committee of the House of Representatives:

> When this has been done, copies of the printed record as it came from the circuit court of appeals and of the petition and briefs, are distributed among the members of the Supreme Court, and each judge examines them and prepares a memorandum or note indicating his view of what should be done.

Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator understand they do that themselves, or do it through their law clerks?

Mr. AUSTIN. Of course, I do not know how that is.

Mr. MINTON. I will tell the Senator what one of the law clerks told me. He told me that the clerks did it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Of course, that may be; yet these Justices who have testified, in one situation or another, or whose words we find preserved, give us a different picture of the situation.

Here is something which I think quite touching; at any rate, I was moved emotionally when I read these extracts from letters published in the Saturday Evening Post of March 20, 1937, under the title How Old Is 91? After Mr. Justices Holmes' death in 1935, Dr. John C. H. Wu, a young Chinese to whom these letters were written by Mr. Justice Holmes, published them in his magazine in Shanghai, China, called the T'ien Hsia Monthly. Besides throwing light upon one of the greatest characters in American history, an excerpt from these letters throws a special light upon the question asked by the learned Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON]. I read from page 117 of that issue. This particular letter had started with the sentence:

> The chief sent me the other day a rather charming book by Morgan about John Morley, with a portrait in front that reminded me of Newman by a look of holiness.

Skipping down, I come to this:

> At our conference last Saturday I was indiscreet enough to show some understanding of or notions about a left-over case, wherefore it was assigned for me to write, and as the last chance on Monday brought in some 35 applicants for certiorari; i. e., for leaves to come up to us where it is not a matter of right, but depends on our discretion, each of which has to be examined with some care, my hands have been full, but that is all done now.

Senators will recall that in the testimony of the Attorney General he referred to certain language of the Chief Justice. I am reading from page 19 of the transcript of the Attorney General's testimony as follows:

> That the consideration of applications for certiorari places a heavy burden upon the Supreme Court is evidenced by the words of the Chief Justice himself, in an address delivered before the American Law Institute in May 1934.

That was some time before this issue arose, and, of course, was free from any interest whatever except the interest of truth.

> After explaining the operation of the system, he continued as follows:
> "Thus all the Justices pass upon the application for certiorari. During vacation the papers on these applications follow us wherever we are, at home or abroad. Having approximately 300 of them to deal with during the summer, you can see that during the period when the Court is not in session there is a large amount of judicial work to be done."

I now answer the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON]. There may be cases—I know of none, but there may be cases—in connection with which the law clerk of the Justice analyzes the petition and answers and briefs, and thereupon submits the memorandum to his chief. If that is done, yet we find Mr. Justice Holmes in his lifetime, and at that patriarchal age, writing his friend that he personally studied his own cases. We find Mr. Justice Van Devanter, now still on the bench, testifying that he studied his own cases. We find the Chief Justice on this occasion, when there was not any issue about it, saying to the general public that he personally examined his cases; and the effect of all this, to my mind, is that though there may be exceptions, the rule is otherwise, and that the Justices themselves study their cases.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. In the first place, I think we should probably take the word of Mr. Justice Holmes and of Chief Justice Hughes and of Mr. Justice Van Devanter rather than the word of some clerk who formerly worked for one of the Justices of the Supreme Court as to what he did when he worked for him.

Secondly, I wish to ask the Senator a question. These law clerks are provided by the Congress of the United States, are they not?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I believe so.

Mr. WHEELER. And they are put there for the purpose of briefing material and assisting the Justices in the work of the Supreme Court?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I understand that to be their function.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I agree that the Justice, of course, must give consideration to applications for certiorari, because, after all, no one can take part in a conference but a Justice. It would be utterly purposeless to have a conference about certiorari if you did not understand what you were going to confer about. There is no reflection upon anyone because of the way in which certiorari petitions are handled. It seems to me that in the nature of things they have to be handled in that way. The law clerk, as I understand, examines and passes upon the petition in the first instance and prepares a memorandum for the Justice to guide his action with reference to the case, and the Justice goes into conference armed in that fashion. With this memorandum and his wide knowledge of the law, naturally he goes into conference well equipped to discuss the proposition of law that is presented in the petition for certiorari; but the fact remains that he does not wade through these petitions and responses and briefs in the first instance, but rather relies upon what he has a perfect right to rely upon—the assistance that we here in Congress furnish him.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, of course, the barrister system is recognized in the English practice, anyway, as a practice of good standing, under which all the preparation is made by another person, who sits in court and prods and prompts the man who really does the court work. There is nothing immoral, there is nothing unethical, there is nothing wrong about it. However, so far as my own knowledge goes, it is not done here. I could not say it is not done. I say, though, that such evidence as we have shows that it is not done here. The Senator from Indiana probably has some information on the subject to which he may later call our attention.

In any event, it seems to me the main point is not the method, but it is the fact that each Justice studies each petition for certiorari and arrives at his own personal opinion about it, and then in conference discusses the matter with his fellow Justices, and after discussion the entire Court passes upon the matter; and if as many as four of the Justices are excited to action upon the case—that is to say, if the case involves a question of public interest or any other question that excites the action of the Justices—then, if four of them say so, there is a hearing on the merits; and a hearing may be granted even though less than four so agree.

Mr. President, I have taken so much time that I am going to cut short some of this matter. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point what is marked on page 12 and page 13 of the hearing to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is not too much to say that one-third of the business which now comes to the Supreme Court results in no advantage to the litigants or the public. Permit me to explain how this is so: Cases coming from a State court have already passed through two courts, and so of cases coming from a circuit court of appeals. In each instance the case has been through a court of original jurisdiction and an appellate court. Of course, most of them have been rightly decided. Our obligatory jurisdiction operates to give a review in a third court as of right, even though the decision is obviously correct. A further review in such a case serves no useful purpose. It is of no benefit to anyone. In such cases the review usually is sought for purposes of delay or in an obstinate effort to wear out an adversary, and the crowded state of the docket assists in accomplishing that purpose. The summary or statement to which I have invited your attention shows that more than two-thirds of the cases which come to us under our obligatory jurisdiction—from State courts, circuit courts of appeal, district courts, and the Court of Claims—result in judgments of affirmance by our Court, and also a goodly number are ultimately dismissed for want of prosecution. This, we think, illustrates that the present statutes are too liberal—that they permit cases to come to us as of right with no benefit to the litigants or to the public. What we learn of the cases in examining them confirms and emphasizes this conclusion. Of course, in proportion as our attention is engaged with cases of that character, it is taken away from others which present grave questions and need careful consideration.

One remedy proposed by the bill—the chief remedy—consists in diminishing the obligatory jurisdiction and enlarging the discretionary jurisdiction. I have already indicated some advantages which would come from this change. There are also others. It will enable the parties to learn promptly where they stand—whether they are to abide by the decision given below or must remain in a state of uncertainty for a year or so longer. I say "learn promptly" because a petition for certiorari must be presented within 3 months, and such petitions are almost always acted on and either granted or denied within a month after being presented—most of them are acted on within 2 or 3 weeks. The parties can then adjust their affairs accordingly. That in this there will be a real saving and a general benefit is illustrated by what occurred at the 1922 and 1923 terms. At the former, out of 398 petitions for certiorari, 86 were granted, and at the latter, out of 370 petitions, 70 were granted and 300 denied. Thus, in 1922 the litigants in 312 cases, and in 1923 the litigants in 300 cases, learned in the beginning, instead of after a year or more of waiting, that their cases were ended and that the judgments given below must be given effect.

Mr. AUSTIN. On page 21, I call attention to the following:

All appeals from the district court shall go to the circuit courts of appeals, with certain minor exceptions, and there they shall be final, the theory being that after a man has had two trials in Federal courts, unless his case involves something more than his private interests and is of public importance, it ought to stop. It permits us to review every final judgment of a circuit court of appeals, whether it involves 10 cents or $10,000,000. There are a few cases, such as applications to stay orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and matters relating to antitrust subjects, which come to us still direct from the district courts, when composed of three judges.

Then you have the judgments of State courts. This bill permits our court to review every final judgment of a State court which involves a Federal right, every one of them irrespective of amount. But it permits the litigants to come as of right only in certain specified cases, where the statute of a State, or the validity of a statute of the United States, or the validity of a treaty is involved, and things like that. All other cases from the State courts must come after application for certiorari, after the matter has been submitted to us in a preliminary way, to see whether or not the case should be reviewed.

The last quotation I am going to ask the Senate to consider from this particular hearing is found on page 28, Mr. Chief Justice Taft speaking:

Well, I am not going into the Bible just at present; this is difficult enough. I only want to emphasize another feature. Often in the legislature there is resounding eloquence on the subject that every poor man should have the opportunity to carry his case to the last court. There is no statement that is so unfounded as that. The truth is that it is in the interest of the poor litigant that the litigation should be ended; and, my dear friends, there is nothing that offers such an opportunity for delay as a suggestion that a profound constitutional question is involved in sustaining a verdict in favor of the poor litigant when the rich litigant has a long purse with which to continue the litigation.

It is a mistake to suppose that the mere suggestion of a constitutional question is something that should require the case going right through. The court ought to be able shortly to say whether the suggestion has any real substance when tested by recognized constitutional principles. You can cite the fourteenth amendment and the fifth amendment and you can get up a great deal of fog, which it is the business of the court, and which it ought to have a prompt opportunity to clear away by saying, "This case, although it purports to involve a constitutional question, really does not, and we cut it off."

Mr. President, there is more evidence that I intend to put in the RECORD showing that there is no mystery, that there is nothing furtive, that the Court does not conceal anything with respect to its procedure on petitions for certiorari. It is ancient history; it is all well known or ought to be well known to any legislator undertaking to pass on the pending Court reorganization bill.

There was a report submitted in the House to accompany H. R. 8206 from the hearings on which I have been reading. I will not read all the report; I realize that to do so would take too much of the time of Senators, but I wish to read a part of it and have inserted in the RECORD the remainder. Beginning in the middle of page 2, the committee refers to the object of the bill. That is one of the things which I think the American people ought to know. They ought to know what was the purpose of the Judiciary Act of 1925 in order to determine whether there has been any misconduct by the Court in exercising a jurisdiction which results in the denial to private litigants and to public litigants of a hearing on the merits. Now what was the object? This is a current utterance; this is the best evidence of what the object was. I read:

THE OBJECT

The bill is designed to lessen the number of cases which, under existing law, reach the Supreme Court. It will not lighten the burden or relieve the Supreme Court of work, but will remove from their consideration a class of cases which now burden the docket and have no public interest or value, and give the Supreme Court time to hear and determine those cases which should alone engage their attention.

That Court is more than a year behind on its list of pending cases, and this condition will surely be aggravated each year if the Court is left without relief. It is hoped by this bill to enable the Court to overtake its work and keep up with it. Having to hear numbers of cases of a trivial character, or cases brought really for delay, or to wear out an adversary, the Court is hindered from hearing and determining more important cases and from efficiently functioning in the performance of its highest duty of interpreting the Constitution and preserving uniformity of decisions by the intermediate courts of appeals.

There is much more of this, and I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, at this point in my address, the remainder of page 2 and a part of page 3 to the point which is marked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The Supreme Court will always have plenty to do whether this bill passes or not. The problem is whether the time and attention and energy of the Court shall be devoted to matters of large public concern or whether they shall be consumed by matters of less concern, without especial general interest and only because the litigant wants to have the Court of last resort pass upon his right.

Although final decisions will be multiplied in the intermediate courts of appeals by this bill, if it shall become a law, yet every case now reviewable by the Supreme Court under existing law will still be reviewable by that tribunal whenever a question is presented which is of sufficient importance in the opinion of the Supreme Court. The obligatory appeal and writ of error is limited, and a very broad and comprehensive discretionary power is given by certiorari. Through this discretionary power there can and will be a weeding out of all trivial and unimportant cases; cases brought for delay, cases which cover matters already decided, etc., so that rapidity of action will be achieved; and the public questions—the vital and important ones—will be reviewed, considered, and decided.

The change of many cases from the obligatory class to the certiorari class will enable the Court by a denial of the writ to give immediate notice to the parties of the disposition of their cases. It will greatly reduce the number of those who have to wait until their cases are reached on the docket and relieve them of the needless suspense and delay to which they are now subjected. The opportunity of taking cases to the Supreme Court merely for delay will be almost entirely removed.

Lest it should be thought that the increase of discretionary jurisdiction might impair the administration of justice and lead to partial hearings, and not secure a decision by the whole Court, it is proper to call attention to the very thorough and complete system by which discretionary jurisdiction is exercised. In granting or refusing a prayer for a certiorari the petitioner gets the judgment of the whole Court. The application is not disposed of by a single Justice. The luminous and informing statement of Mr. Justice Van Devanter tells the whole story:

"While the authority of the Supreme Court to take cases on petition for certiorari is spoken of as a discretionary jurisdiction, this does not mean that the Court is authorized merely to exercise a will in the matter but rather that the petition is to be granted or denied according to a sound judicial discretion. What actually is done may well be stated here with some particularity. The party aggrieved by the decision of the circuit court of appeals and seeking a further review in the Supreme Court is required to present to it a petition and accompanying brief, setting forth the nature of the case, what questions are involved, how they were decided in the circuit court of appeals, and why the case should not rest on the decision of that court. The petition and brief are required to be served on the other party, and time is given for the presentation of an opposing brief. When this has been done copies of the printed record as it came from the circuit court of appeals and of the petition and briefs are distributed among the members of the Supreme Court, and each judge examines them and prepares a memorandum or note indicating his view of what should be done.

"In conference these cases are called, each in its turn, and each judge states his views in extenso or briefly as he thinks proper; and when all have spoken any difference in opinion is discussed and then a vote is taken. I explain this at some length because it seems to be thought outside that the cases are referred to particular judges, as, for instance, that those coming from a particular circuit are referred to the justice assigned to that circuit, and that he reports on them, and the others accept his report. That impression is wholly at variance with what actually occurs.

"We do not grant or deny these petitions merely according to a majority vote. We always grant the petition when as many as four think that it should be granted, and sometimes when as many as three think that way. We proceed upon the theory that, if that number out of the nine are impressed with the thought that the case is one that ought to be heard and decided by us, the petition should be granted."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am very much impressed by what the Senator has had to say, but I observe in the report from which he has just read a statement which has appeared in several other utterances upon this subject, namely, that the attention of the Supreme Court should be directed only to those cases which have a public interest or those cases in which constitutional questions are to be decided. I assume the Senator has not had time to consider the question which is aroused in my mind by this statement, namely, whether, under the Constitution, which ordained the creation of one Supreme Court and which defined the judicial power as extending to cases arising under the Constitution and the laws, Congress should undertake by law to say that only those cases which involve a matter of public interest and questions of a constitutional nature should go to the Supreme Court? That, it seems to me, goes to the heart of the subject matter of the act of 1925 and to the heart of the discussion which is now pending.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I might have expected that question to come from the learned Senator from Wyoming. It is a profound question, and one that I would not be so intemperate as to try to answer on my feet without having better preparation to answer it than I now have. I confess I have thought of it; in my opening remarks I alluded to the fact that we are not confronted with an effort to amend the Judiciary Act of 1925, and that, of course, apprehended the point that is raised by the learned Senator from Wyoming. We are not really confronted as yet with the question of whether we have authority to curtail the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. That bridge I do not want to cross this morning.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I assume, then, that the Senator takes the position that the Congress has already crossed that bridge, and has already placed it within the discretion of the Supreme Court to deny or grant petitions for certiorari?

Mr. AUSTIN. No, Mr. President, I have not; I believe we misunderstand each other. The act of 1925, so far as it relates to petitions for certiorari—and I think that is found in section 240 of the act—is clearly within the power of Congress, because it comes within the exceptions and regulations which the Constitution expressly refers to the Congress on matters of appeal and matters within the scope of the inferior courts. But I understood the question of the Senator from Wyoming to deal only with the jurisdiction within the Supreme Court, and not to relate to appellate jurisdiction or that which arises on petition for certiorari. Is not that correct?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. AUSTIN. I prefer to be excused from a discussion of it. Perhaps later we may take that up.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point what is marked on page 8 of the report to which I have referred, appearing under the heading The Way of Appeal Will Cease To Be a Trap.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE WAY OF APPEAL WILL CEASE TO BE A "TRAP"

Besides the relief of the Supreme Court docket, and turning aside a large number of cases from that Court and making the decisions of the circuit courts of appeals final in many cases and only reviewable by certiorari—this bill should become a law because it clarifies and makes understandable the law governing appeal whether by writ of error, appeal, or certiorari.

It was well said by the Chief Justice at the hearing that the present laws are a "trap" in procedure.

This bill will simplify the law of appellate jurisdiction, relieve lawyers and litigants of uncertainties and perils which cannot always be avoided even by the well-equipped and trained practitioner.

The statutes fixing the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and the circuit courts of appeals are today fragmentary. They are scattered. Some are in the Revised Statutes of 1878; some in the Judicial Code of 1911; and others consist of amendments appearing here and there in many volumes of the Statutes at Large. They are difficult to find and when found are neither harmonious nor plain. Mr. Justice Van Devanter very forcefully pictured this state of the law when he said in the hearing:

"The Circuit Courts of Appeals Act, passed in 1891, besides defining the jurisdiction of those courts, contained many provisions relating to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Most of these provisions and many amendatory enactments were brought together advantageously in the Judicial Code of 1911. But that was not a complete revision. It left some statutes, old ones, untouched and did not bring them forward; so no one could examine the Judicial Code and act safely merely upon what appeared there. It would be necessary to go back and search the Revised Statutes and the intermediate Statutes at Large to determine what course to pursue in invoking a review by either a circuit court of appeals or the Supreme Court. Not only so, but the statutes when found left it uncertain in some classes of cases in the district courts whether the case could be carried directly to the Supreme Court or must go to the circuit court of appeals.

"Since the Judicial Code of 1911 many statutes have been enacted which bear upon the jurisdiction of these courts—a statute would be adopted at one time with respect to one class of cases, and another statute would be adopted at another time with respect to another class. These statutes have been multiplied until now they are not harmonious. Neither do they follow a consistent plan or theory.

"The situation now is that in the Supreme Court a good many cases have to be dismissed, their merits left untouched, because they have been brought there from a district court when they should have gone to a circuit court of appeals, or because they have been brought from a circuit court of appeals on writ of error or appeal when they could come up only on certiorari, or because they have been brought from a State court on writ of error where certiorari was the only admissible mode of bringing them up.

"These mistakes are generally attributable to the fact that the practitioner has found a part of the statutes and not the rest. Sometimes the mistake is mere carelessness; but it not infrequently happens that lawyers who stand high in their profession at home mistake their remedy or the mode of invoking it either because they do not find the controlling statute or because they have difficulty in reconciling it with others."

Your committee expresses its deep obligation to the Chief Justice and Justices of the Supreme Court for their help not only in preparing this bill but explaining it thoroughly.

The proposed legislation was recommended by the President in his message of December 3, 1924, to the Congress.

Mr. AUSTIN. It will be noticed that the committee of the House recorded their appreciation of the assistance of the Supreme Court on those two bills in the following language:

Your committee expresses its deep obligation to the Chief Justice and Justices of the Supreme Court for their help not only in preparing this bill but explaining it thoroughly.

Mr. President, it is worthy of comment that when the Congress embarked upon a constructive effort to improve the judiciary system and the practice under the law it consulted, it conferred with the Department that was going to be most vitally affected by the legislation, and that it received a ready response from that Department. Consequently there was coordination; there was cooperation; there was not left behind the transaction a bitter feeling; there was not created in the minds and the emotions of the people the idea that one department was trying to whip another department into line, or that one department or two of them were combining against another department to curtail its powers or to overcome its independence and freedom. It is worthy of note, in passing, that in the pending bill the Supreme Court was not consulted, and, so far as I know, and so far as the record shows, nobody on behalf of the Supreme Court was conferred with in order to ascertain whether something need to be done; and if so, what ought to be done.

There is more proof that there is no mystery about the actions taken on petitions for certiorari, that nothing has been concealed, that nothing need be concealed; but, on the contrary, the procedure currently has been testified to in a hearing in a recent session of Congress. I am glad to invite attention to a hearing before the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, on S. 2176, a bill providing for appeals from orders of Federal courts prohibiting compliance with Federal laws. The hearing occurred March 25, 1935, which is fairly current. Mr. Chief Justice Hughes, Mr. Justice Van Devanter, and Mr. Justice Brandeis appeared before that committee. Mr. Chief Justice Hughes testified as follows, reading from page 3:

That power of the Court to bring cases up by writ of certiorari in advance of decisions by the circuit court of appeals was declared many years ago under the act of March 3, 1891, which established the circuit courts of appeal. I think that you will find that matter discussed in the case of the Three Friends, which is reported in 166 U. S., at page 1, and at page 49 you will find the special reference that I have in mind.

The amended act of 1925, with respect to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, recognized in terms, you might say, conferred in terms, that authority upon the Supreme Court to bring up cases by certiorari in advance of the decisions of the circuit court of appeals. In short, whenever an order or a decree is appealed to the circuit court of appeals, as soon as that order or decree is appealed from and the case sent to the circuit court of appeals, the Supreme Court has the power to order it up immediately by writ of certiorari. That is true whether the order so appealed from is interlocutory or the decree is final. When the Supreme Court orders up a case by writ of certiorari, before judgment of the circuit court of appeals, the case is before the Supreme Court as if there had been an appeal directly from the order or the decree of the district court.

Of course, the Court exercises that power with what it deems to be proper regard for its own functions, and with appropriate consideration of the respect that the circuit courts of appeal are entitled to under our system of appellate jurisdiction in the Federal courts. But whenever there is a case of such importance that it should be at once heard and decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, the Court is ready to take that case in advance of the decision of the circuit court of appeals.

I may refer to a recent illustration of the exercise of that authority, for example, in the recent Gold Clause cases. One of those cases was from the district court in Missouri, which had rendered a decree in a bankruptcy proceeding with reference to the claim of the trustee of bonds issued by one of the railroads in the Missouri Pacific system, who claimed that the bonds should be paid in gold under the gold clause in the bonds in question.

There was a petition for certiorari, appeal having been taken to the circuit court of appeals, filed with the Supreme Court on October 17, 1934.

Mr. President, note that date—October 7, 1934.

We granted the writ on November 5, 1934.

In other words, the writ was granted within less than 30 days.

It is true that that case was not heard until January, but it could have been heard earlier except that the Government naturally desired more adequate time for preparation, and on the motion of the Solicitor General on November 19 the case was sent over to the January term.

But, I wish to call your attention to the point that there was a case of a decision by the district court, that the matter was deemed to be of great importance, and so, without waiting for a decision by the circuit court of appeals, the Government asked for a writ of certiorari, which was granted.

I digress for the purpose of emphasizing the fact that it is not right for the Attorney General of the United States to criticize delay in the hearing of this case when the fact is that the delay was caused by the Attorney General's department.

Another feature of that case was that the Government was the successful party below, and although it was the successful party below, the Court recognized the propriety of the application for certiorari, which the Court granted.

They did not have to wait for trial in the circuit court of appeals.

Another illustration of the exercise of that authority is in the case now pending before the Court as to what is called the "railroad retirement bill." That is case no. 566, Railroad Retirement Board v. The Alton Railroad Company, in which a decree was entered by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia on October 30, 1934. A writ of certiorari was asked of the Supreme Court of the United States on December 7, 1934, and was granted on December 13, 1934.

In other words, it was granted within less than 1 week.

The case could have been heard earlier than it was heard, but because of the desire to have time for appropriate preparation the Government had its argument put over and the case was heard in February. There again, immediately, you might say, upon the entry of the decree in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the Government entered its appeal to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, and the Government thereupon made application to the Supreme Court of the United States for a writ of certiorari, which was immediately granted.

They did not have to wait for trial in the circuit court of appeals.

I may refer to another case, no. 694, United States v. Certain Lands in Louisville, Ky. There the question was as to the constitutional authority to condemn lands under section 203, subdivision (a), paragraph 3, of the National Industrial Recovery Act. There was a decree of the district court on January 12, 1935. A petition for certiorari, on appeal to the circuit court of appeals, was presented to the Supreme Court on February 9, 1935.

That was in less than 30 days.

But the Government saw fit to dismiss its petition on March 11. The case could have been heard if the Government had so desired.

Yet this is one of the cases comprehended in the eight-hundred-odd cases criticized in the President's message and in the testimony of the Attorney General because it was dismissed. I shall point out later that not this case alone but more than 100 such cases were dismissed either at the request or with the consent of the Attorney General.

I think those are illustrative not only of the power of the Court but of the exercise of that power in cases where it appears to the Court that there is adequate reason, because of the great importance of the question and the desirability of an immediate decision, without waiting for the determination by the circuit court of appeals.

I am omitting much of this testimony, and turning over to page 7 for the purpose of bringing out the principle upon which the denial of jurisdiction is asserted under the act of 1925. This is still the testimony of the Chief Justice:

Under the jurisdictional act of 1925, there are only a limited number of cases in which the right of appeal to the Supreme Court is allowed, and the Court determines on application for certiorari what cases should be brought before the Court. That is a very important exercise of authority, and there is nothing that we do to which we give greater attention with reference to the protection of the jurisdiction of the Court and its appropriate exercise.

The principles are quite obvious.

This occurred in 1935; and yet, at the present session of Congress Senators stand on the floor and assert, in effect, that these principles are mysterious, and that the Court is concealing matters.

Cases should not go to the Supreme Court of the United States simply because of the amount of money involved, because of the character or prominence of the parties, or because of the counsel. The question before the Supreme Court is, manifestly, the importance of the question of law involved, the importance of an authoritative determination by the tribunal invested with that very important function. We consider these various applications with respect to that, not as to the parties, not as to the amount of money involved, not as to the counsel, but as to the law.

There is no other place on earth to which the American citizen can go and get the final word as to what is the law. There is no sanctuary for the law itself other than the Supreme Court of the United States, and there is nothing to which the Court should give greater concern than the protection of the law.

The parties have the right of appeal to the circuit courts of appeal. That satisfies the rights of individual litigants. When it comes to a further review by the Supreme Court of the United States, the higher principle of importance to the public at large is involved.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD similar testimony by Mr. Justice Van Devanter which is marked on pages 9 and 10 of this report, and similar testimony by Mr. Justice Brandeis which is marked on page 10 of this report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF HON. WILLIS VAN DEVANTER, ASSOCIATE JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

* * * * * * * *

The Chief Justice spoke of the bill being selective of a class of cases. Yes; it is. It permits the officers of the Government to take an appeal to us, but that is not a sufficient criterion. There ought to be a petition to the Supreme Court for certiorari, as there is now; and if the records were searched you would not find an instance in which, in an injunction case, a district court has held a statute of the United States unconstitutional. The Supreme Court has denied a petition for certiorari presented immediately after an appeal to the circuit court of appeals. There has been no such case. The Chief Justice, as an illustration, has spoken of three prominent cases which were all of such vital character that, of course, the Court granted the petitions.

I want to say one thing further. It is not a secret. We have stated it on many occasions. Petitions for certiorari are not determined by a majority vote. If as many as four members of the Court, which is a minority, vote for granting a petition for certiorari, it is invariably allowed. Mr. Justice Brandeis has been on the Court for 20 years, and he will not recall a single instance in all that period where a petition for certiorari which commended itself to four members of the Court was not granted. That is a rule that is understood and adhered to, and it works well. The point is that in exercising that certiorari jurisdiction the Court desires to be at fault in taking jurisdicton rather than to be at fault in rejecting it. That rule is not one of recent years. It originated before almost all of the members of the Court ever thought of being there.

I think there is not anything more that I wish to state, but I will say just this closing word. It is only indirectly apropos now. That is in reference to the laudable disposition about 12 years ago to simplify resort to our Court from State courts. There was an act passed—Senator NORRIS will recall it—that an appeal from a State court could be taken by just lodging a notice with the clerk of the supreme court of the State. That seemed simple on its face. It seemed as though it was in the interest of avoiding technicalities here and there. It had not been in force 10 days before there were appeals from convictions of murder in the State of Washington and two or three other States where there was not an iota of a Federal question. The Court was about to adjourn for the term. The appeals were holding up the whole matter of carrying the judgments into execution.

All of those cases, if presenting a Federal question, could have come to us by appeal or writ of certiorari, but not if devoid of such a question. Chief Justice Taft, Justice Brandeis, and I had an interview with Senator NORRIS and Senator WALSH. A bill was passed to eliminate the loose appeals, and, barring two or three appeals—I think four—no harm was done. Legislation along these lines should fit in with the existing legislation—with the existing system—and the principles upon which the existing legislation proceeds.

STATEMENT OF HON. LOUIS D. BRANDEIS, ASSOCIATE JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. Justice BRANDEIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the subject has been discussed so fully by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Van Devanter that I think I can aid you best by saying I agree absolutely with everything they have said.

* * * * * * * *

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I hasten to a further aspect of this special matter of the claim made by the proponents of the bill that there is in the practice of the Supreme Court on petitions for certiorari a reason for increasing the number of members of the Court. What I am about to refer to has to do with a part of the President's message, the testimony of the Attorney General, and the speech of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. I quote now from the speech of the Senator from Tennessee wherein he quoted the President's message, as appears on page 2810 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

Its [the Supreme Court's] difficulties in this respect were superficially lightened some years ago by authorizing the Court, in its discretion, to refuse to hear appeals in many classes of cases.

That is where the President is referring to the very same thing I have been discussing; namely, that part of the Judiciary Act of 1925 which enabled the Court to cast off this load of private litigation, and to select from all those cases that were offered to it by petitions for certiorari only certain well-defined cases on a certain well-defined principle.

Then the President is quoted as continuing thus:

This discretion was so freely exercised that in the last fiscal year, although 867 petitions for review were presented to the Supreme Court, it declined to hear 717 cases. If petitions in behalf of the Government are excluded, it appears that the Court permitted private litigants to prosecute appeals in only 108 cases out of 803 applications. Many of the refusals were doubtless warranted. But can it be said that full justice is achieved when a court is forced by the sheer necessity of keeping up with its business to decline, without even an explanation, to hear 87 percent of the cases presented to it by private litigants?

That statement was commented on by the Senator from Tennessee as follows on the same page of the RECORD:

In his statement it is seen that the President makes the issue perfectly plain. It is that the Court does not and apparently cannot give about 87 percent of the certiorari cases the attention that such cases are entitled to receive; that 87 percent of the cases presented by private litigants by petitions for certiorari are denied without even an explanation. What examination is accorded these cases nowhere appears. Who actually passes on them is not disclosed.

Of course, I have proved who examines the cases. I have shown that every Justice on the Court examines them, every Justice passes upon them, and what actually occurs is recorded here. It is in our RECORD now, but it has been in the record of committee hearings since 1924, available to every Senator to read.

Referring now to the Attorney General's report, that part of it written by the Solicitor General, page 13 of the report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1936, we find this statement:

Rule 12, which was adopted in 1928 and amended in 1932, has resulted in a great saving of time both for the Court and for counsel, but the figures again disclose that a very large majority of the cases on the appellate docket do not possess sufficient merit to warrant consideration on the merits. It is quite erroneous to regard the Court as constituted for the correction of error in every case. In the exercise of its discretionary jurisdiction under the Judiciary Act of 1925, it has become a court for the decision of important questions of general application and for the settlement of conflicts in the decisions of other courts.

Mr. President, how can the Attorney General of the United States take any other position than that today? Undoubtedly the President's information, stated in his words, came from the Attorney General. I say "undoubtedly" because there is intrinsic proof of it in the letter that accompanies the message, and in the testimony which I have read into the RECORD, the testimony of the Attorney General made on careful preparation, for it was a written statement.

The report of the Attorney General continues:

The limitations of the Court's statutory jurisdiction and its rules for the exercise of its discretionary jurisdiction should be more carefully observed.

That is a little admonition to the members of the bar.

Many petitions for writs of certiorari are filed which, in the light of settled practice, must be regarded as entirely without merit.

Again he says—I now read from page 18 of the Attorney General's report:

Careful appraisal of cases for certiorari takes place in the Solicitor General's office. An effort is made to lighten the burden of the Court by presenting only those cases which involve matters of public interest, the resolution of conflicts between the circuits, or broad administrative practices. It is believed this restrictive policy is not carried to a point which eliminates cases to the detriment of the Government. Eight percent of all petitions for certiorari at the last term were filed by the Government, a percentage slightly in excess of normal. It was equaled at the 1929 and 1930 terms. Of the total of 867 petitions for certiorari disposed of at the last term, 717, or 83 percent, were denied or dismissed, and only 150, or 17 percent, granted.

Now we come to the milk in the coconut. This part of the Attorney General's report is contiguous to the part I have just read. It is a part of the same paragraph, but it was not carried into the message that came to the Congress, into the Attorney General's testimony, or into the speech to which I have referred, and yet it is of the very essence of the situation.

No government can be heard ethically to complain of the dismissal of eight-hundred-odd cases when it participated in that dismissal itself, as shown by what I am about to read:

Separating the petitions for certiorari in Government cases from those in non-Government cases, it appears that in all but 9 percent of the cases in which the Government opposed certiorari the petition was denied.

Mr. President, reversing the statement in form, it appears that in 91 percent of the cases where the Government opposed the petition for certiorari they were successful in getting a dismissal; and now they come forward and use that as a basis for getting a reorganization of the Supreme Court. I think it is reduced to an absurdity. I read again:

Sixty-five percent of the petitions in which the Government was petitioner were granted. In 12 cases the Government either acquiesced in the granting of the petition or recommended certain action, and in all of these cases certiorari was either granted or the Government's recommendation followed.

That is in the report of June 30, 1936, for the year 1935.

I refer now to the report of the same Attorney General which appears under date of June 30, 1935, and was for the year 1934. At page 11 is repeated what he said in the report I have just read, showing his thorough knowledge of the object and purpose of granting to the Supreme Court discretion to refuse to hear cases on their merits which come up on petitions for certiorari, showing clearly his knowledge of the practice under that rule, and praising it, and saying that the Solicitor General exercises care to cooperate and make effective the function of discretion. There again he boasts of his success in this regard. At page 15 appears the following:

In less than 10 percent of the cases in which the Government opposed the granting of certiorari was the writ issued.

In other words, to put it conversely, in more than 90 percent of the cases where the Government opposed the granting of the writ it was successful. Can it be heard to complain about it now when complaining might serve a useful purpose to the Government? I do not admit, in asking that question, that it would be a useful purpose in the long run; it might help to accomplish an immediate objective.

Mr. President, here is another report, signed by the same Attorney General, bearing date June 30, 1934, for the year 1933. I call attention to the fact that on page 10 of this report substantially the same facts which were recorded with respect to the year 1935 and the year 1934 are recorded, and I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point the statement on page 10 which I have marked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Rule 12, which was adopted in 1928, and amended in 1932, has resulted in a great saving of time both for the Court and for counsel, but the figures again disclose that a very large majority of the cases on the appellate docket do not possess sufficient merit to warrant consideration on the merits. It is quite erroneous to regard the Court as constituted for the correction of error in every case. In the exercise of its discretionary jurisdiction under the Judiciary Act of 1925, it has become a court for the decision of important questions of general application and for the settlement of conflicts in the decisions of other courts. The limitations of the Court's statutory jurisdiction and its rules for the exercise of its discretionary jurisdiction should be more carefully observed. Many petitions for writs of certiorari are filed which in the light of settled practice must be regarded as entirely without merit.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, what appears on page 13 must be read:

On this basis the Government's percentage of writs of certiorari allowed was over 56 percent as compared with less than 15 percent where the petitions were filed by private litigants.

The Government was eminently successful.

In only 8 percent of the cases in which the Government opposed the granting of certiorari was the writ issued.

Wonderful! Most efficient department! That is almost perfect. Stated conversely, in 92 percent of the cases where the Government opposed the granting of a writ of certiorari, it was successful. Should it now be heard to complain, and assert indirectly that that was wrong, and that the poor private litigants who were deprived of their hearing by virtue of the action of the Government were wrongfully deprived of it, and that they were deprived of it because the Court was trying to fit its docket to its capacity? The answer is obvious: Of course not.

Mr. President, that report was submitted only 3 years ago. Here is another report by the same Attorney General. This I believe to have been his first one. It is dated June 30, 1933, and is for the year 1932. It is a curious fact that there has been reiterated in every one of these reports the same statement. In the report before me it appears on page 10, the same page on which it appeared in the last report, the same statement regarding the facts, a statement which shows that the Attorney General's Department is familiar with that which has been called "mysterious", that there was no reason to charge the Supreme Court with concealing how it handled such cases. The Attorney General's Department knows all about it and is cooperating in it. I read from page 13:

One of the aims of the Solicitor General's office is not to burden the Supreme Court with useless appeals and applications for certiorari. Of the total of 800 petitions for certiorari disposed of at the last term, 649, or 81 percent, were denied or dismissed, and only 151, or 19 percent, were granted. Separating the petitions for certiorari in Government cases from those in non-Government cases, it appears that in all but 7 percent of the cases in which the Government opposed certiorari, the petition was denied.

That is better than any other of the Court records to which we have referred so far. To state it conversely, in 93 percent of all the cases where the Government opposed the granting of the petition for certiorari of the poor little citizen the Government was successful. It lost out in only 7 percent of its opposition. Yet we hear the Attorney General imputing to the Court something that would justify the Congress reaching in with a violent hand and creating six vacancies on that Court, and thereupon the President filling those vacancies and increasing the number on the Court. The testimony of the Attorney General was not given in haste, was not given without thought, but was given after carefully writing it, for he read this from a prepared statement before the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate. I read from page 19 of the testimony:

The question is not whether the Court is up with the docket—

It will be remembered that he admits that it is—but by what means it keeps up with the docket; and whether the burden that it must sustain is too great to warrant the careful consideration to which these petitions are entitled and whether assistance, by the appointment of additional judges, is indicated.

Mr. President, that is all there is left to the case. When it is all summed up on the floor of the Senate, that will be the last thing the proponents of the plan will be arguing. Age is gone out of the window, and there is nothing left but this one claim.

I ask the Congress and the American people to lay that claim down beside the claims made annually by the Solicitor General, and subscribed to by the Attorney General in his letter of transmission to the Congress of the report. It must always be recognized that this is not the language of the Attorney General himself. The four reports which I have quoted are the language of the Solicitor General, submitted in the annual report of the Attorney General, and under his transmitting letter, which purports to be signed by him.

If in ordinary human affairs the same person came to one of us and made a statement which we checked up with statements made on four occasions annually preceding that statement, when there were no circumstances to cause the statement to be colored by an interest or by a bias or prejudice, and we found that on four separate annual occasions the statements of that individual were in direct conflict with the statement he now makes, we know very well what the verdict would be.

Mr. President, I am going to conclude this chapter, which I have tried to devote solely to one point in issue namely, the principle involved in the Act of 1925 which relates to petitions for certiorari, the practice thereunder, and the charge made here that it is cause for reorganization of the judiciary—with a reference to the revised rules of the Supreme Court adopted under that act of Congress, which gave the Supreme Court the power to adopt them. I have referred to them previously by number. I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point the portions marked on pages 31, 32, 33, and 35 of the revised rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From p. 31]

5. A review on writ of certiorari is not a matter of right, but a sound judicial discretion, and will be granted only where there are special and important reasons therefor. The following, while neither controlling nor fully measuring the Court's discretion, indicate the character of reasons which will be considered:

[From p. 32]

(c) Where the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia has decided a question of general importance, or a question of substance relating to the construction or application of the Constitution, or a treaty or statute, of the United States, which has not been, but should be, settled by this Court; or where that court has not given proper effect to an applicable decision of this Court.

[From p. 33]

Proceedings to bring up to this Court on writ of certiorari a case pending in a circuit court of appeals or the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, before judgment is given in such court, should conform, as near as may be, to the provisions of rule 38; and similar reasons for granting or refusing the application will be applied. That the public interest will be promoted by prompt settlement in this Court of the questions involved may constitute a sufficient reason.

[From p. 35]

6. The same general considerations will control in respect of petitions for writs of certiorari to review judgments of the Court of Claims as are applied to applications for such writs to other courts. (See par. 5 of rule 38.)

Proceedings to bring up to this Court on writ of certiorari a case from the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals or from the Supreme Court of the Commonwealth of the Philippines should conform, as near as may be, to the provisions of rule 38. The same general considerations which control when such writs to other courts are sought will be applied to them.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I was interested in this question, and I wrote to the Clerk of the Supreme Court and asked for data relating to the petitions for certiorari which are referred to in the President's message, in the testimony of the Attorney General, and in the speech of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. One would think, from the way the matter is presented, that the Court had arbitrarily and in some mysterious, hidden manner deprived private individuals of their day in court. To be sure, the statements made do not charge any illegal act, but they leave the trace of a shadow; they leave an imputation that is not directly expressed, but which it is hoped may be caught up by many citizens throughout our land—the common people. It is always that play to the common people which will be found in a statement of a half-truth which implies much more than that which is expressly stated, because, as Lincoln said, "God must have loved the common people; he made so many of us." I say, in the hope of exciting an emotion in the breasts of many of the people who may come within the category of private litigants at some time in their lives, that the charge is left there, without any limitation, that the Court has denied the opportunity to be heard to all this great number of 1,717 private litigants, without telling the world that in 143 cases the Government opposed the granting of those writs. This is known by the letter which the Clerk of the Supreme Court has written to me in answer to my letter. I read the letter, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CLERK,
SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., March 31, 1937.

HON. WARREN R. AUSTIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I regret that I could not more promptly submit to you statistics, in response to the request contained in your letter of the 24th instant, which would show the position of the Department of Justice as regards the selection of cases to be reviewed by this Court on petition for certiorari. The vast amount of publicity received by the Court recently has reflected upon my comparatively small organization, which must naturally have an open mind and endeavor to supply information impartially, to such an extent that we are unable to transact business with the degree of efficiency we normally attempt to maintain. Figures which were already available could not be used without rechecking and taking into consideration several elements which, if not considered, might subject one using them to criticism which is not entirely justified, might prove embarrassing if not answerable knowingly. The figures obtained by my check of the dockets for the terms for which data was requested coincide substantially with the figures used by the Solicitors General in their reports of the business of the Court appearing in the Annual Report of the Attorney General of the United States, and I therefore use their figures where possible.

It is not accurate to count the number of cases on the docket wherein the Government was respondent, subtract the number of such cases wherein certiorari was granted, and state that the figure remaining represents the number of cases in which the Government successfully opposed the granting of the writ. Cases in which the Government was respondent and which were disposed of on the application for the writ, as distinguished from those cases disposed of after the writ was granted, must be classified into four groups:

(1) Cases wherein the petitioner requested that his petition be withdrawn, thus resulting in the dismissal of the petition without consideration of the Government's position.

(2) Cases filed by indigent litigants, docketed by the Clerk without prepayment of costs upon the filing of a pauper's oath, and which went to the Court on the petitioner's motion for leave to proceed in forma pauperis without giving the Government an opportunity to oppose the petition for certiorari, upon consideration of which the Court denied the application for certiorari as well as the motion to proceed in forma pauperis. In such cases it cannot be said that the Government was successful in opposing the granting of the writ, although had it had an opportunity it would probably have opposed with the same result.

(3) Cases wherein the Government filed a memorandum acquiescing in the granting of the writ for reasons peculiar to the particular case but wherein certiorari was nevertheless denied. The percentage of such cases to the whole is small, but the fact that the Government does upon occasion take such a position evidences its policy and understanding as regards the type of case which the Court will review on certiorari. I have examined the Government's briefs for the current term and have indicated in the attached table the number of cases wherein the Government took this position but wherein certiorari was nevertheless denied. In seven cases at the present term certiorari was granted wherein the Government either joined or acquiesced in the application for certiorari. I regret that time has prevented me from obtaining this figure for the other terms involved. To do so would entail the examination of all briefs filed by the Government in cases wherein certiorari was denied to determine the position actually taken by the Government. It can safely be said, however, that the number of such instances is relatively small and my estimate would be that there are less than 10 at each term.

(4) The number remaining represents those cases wherein the Government actively opposed the granting of the writ and such opposition was an element resulting in the denial thereof.

I again recommend the perusal of that portion of the annual report of the Attorney General dealing with this Court for a definite statement of the Government's position relative to the review by this Court of petitions for certiorari, and as illustrative quote the following excerpts:

"From the report covering the 1935 term: '* * * in all but 9 percent of the cases decided in which the Government opposed certiorari the petition was denied.'

"From the report covering the 1934 term: '* * * in less than 10 percent of the cases in which the Government opposed the granting of certiorari was the writ issued.'

"From the report covering the 1933 term: '* * * in only 8 percent of the cases in which the Government opposed the granting of certiorari was the writ issued.'"

The statistical table is attached and recent reports of the judicial conference requested enclosed.

Respectfully,

CHARLES ELMORE CROPLEY, Clerk.

	1933	1934	1935	[1] 1936
Total number of cases disposed of on petition for certiorari in which the Government was respondent	260	206	244	[1] 167
Petition for certiorari withdrawn on motion of counsel for petitioner	3	0	2	1
Motion to proceed in forma pauperis denied	25	15	17	16
Cases wherein Government filed memorandum acquiescing in granting of writ but where writ was nevertheless denied	[2]	[2]	[2]	7
Cases wherein Government actively opposed granting of certiorari and certiorari was denied not excluding the few instances in the 1933, 1934, and 1935 terms where the Department of Justice may have acquiesced in the granting of the writ but it was nevertheless denied	232	191	225	143
Total number of cases disposed of on application for certiorari excluding cases wherein the petition was withdrawn on motion of the petitioner	723	666	706	481

[1] The data for the October term, 1936, includes cases disposed of up to and including Mar. 15, 1937.
[2] No statistics.

The fourth bracket is the most eloquent one so far as the question I am presenting goes. It refers to cases wherein the Government actively opposing granting of certiorari, and certiorari was denied, not excluding the few instances in the 1933, 1934, and 1935 terms where the Department of Justice may have acquiesced in granting the writ, but nevertheless it was denied.

The reports for all the years in which the present Attorney General has been Attorney General of the United States show the following facts: The report for 1933 shows 232 of such denials—denials by the Court where the Attorney General opposed the granting of the writ. The report for 1934 shows 191 such denials. The report for 1935 shows 225, and the report for 1936 shows 143. The other items or brackets in this table are important, but I regard that evidence as the most important disqualifying evidence that could be produced in the present situation.

Not one of the denials of petitions is shown to have been arbitrary. On the contrary, they appear to have been made according to the spirit and the letter of the law.

If the only claim that is left to support this proposal to create six vacancies in the Supreme Court for the purpose of filling them—not six vacancies by driving any one off the Court but six vacancies by adding offices to the Court—if this violent action must rest upon the sole ground that in the year 1935 private litigants in eight-hundred-odd cases were denied their petitions for review by the Supreme Court, then the action should not be taken. No change in principle or in practice is contained in the pending bill. A change in the number of Justices is not supported by this claim.

INVESTIGATIONS UNDER FEDERAL RECLAMATION LAWS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 176, being Senate bill 48, to authorize an appropriation for investigations under the Federal reclamation laws.

I may say that when this bill was reached upon the Calendar the other day, objection was made by the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. He asked for an opportunity to confer with me regarding the amount of the authorization. The bill is reported unanimously by the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. The committee has recommended an authorization for $600,000. At the request of the Senator from Tennessee, and in agreement with him, I now move that that sum be reduced to $300,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I myself, the Senator will recall, during his absence several times requested that the bill go over.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. I inquire whether $300,000 will be adequate for the purposes of the bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It will be adequate to initiate the work of investigation. I may say that there has been general agreement among all who have been studying the conditions in the States which have been affected by the drought that if adequate steps were taken to store the water of the upper reaches of the various rivers it would have the effect not only of preventing the bad results of the drought, but would also have the effect of preventing floods later on in the lower reaches of the river. I believe that a much larger sum than $300,000 could wisely and judiciously be expended upon this study, but I am quite willing to agree to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider bill (S. 48) to authorize an appropriation for investigations under the Federal Reclamation laws, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $600,000 to enable the Secretary of the Interior, through the Bureau of Reclamation, to carry on engineering and economic investigations of proposed Federal reclamation projects, surveys for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of existing projects, and studies of water conservation and development plans in cooperation with State agencies or other Federal agencies, including the Corps of Engineers, National Resources Committee, and the Federal Power Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of", it is proposed to strike out "$600,000" and insert $300,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE UNITED STATES NAVY (S. DOC. NO. 35)

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, on March 11, I asked and obtained consent for the publication of Senate Document 35, to be known as The United States Navy. I now ask unanimous consent that four pages of that document may be used for illustrations. It is necessary to secure the consent of the Senate in order that illustrations may be printed in a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AUTHORITY TO SIGN JOINT RESOLUTION DURING RECESS OR ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the recess or adjournment of the Senate to follow today's session the Vice President be authorized to sign Senate Joint Resolution 53, providing for the continuance of the participation of the United States in the Great Lakes Exposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EFFECT OF BONNEVILLE DAM ON PROPAGATION OF FISH

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that motion for just a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. STEIWER. I had understood that Senate Resolution 113 would be called up today. I inquire if it was laid down by the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was not laid down before the hour of 2 o'clock, and was not thereafter in order, as the Chair is informed by the Parliamentarian.

Mr. ROBINSON. I inquire what is the resolution?

Mr. STEIWER. It is on the calendar under the heading "Resolutions and Motions Over Under the Rule" and is Senate Resolution 113. I think it will not cause any delay or take any time beyond a minute's explanation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; I suggest that the Senator now make the explanation he has in mind.

Mr. STEIWER. I shall be happy to do so.

Mr. President, the resolution requests the Commissioner of Fisheries to make a certain survey and report to the Senate of conditions affecting the propagation of salmon on the Columbia River. I have talked with the Commissioner of Fisheries, who tells me that he has no objection to the request and is in a position to comply with it. The Bureau of Fisheries has in that area competent experts and with a minimum of expense can make the necessary survey and report.

I ought to add that the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] was interested in this subject with me, although he did not join in presenting the resolution, and we desire to have this survey made for the purpose of formulating a plan later for some additional hatcheries in the area of the Bonneville Dam, on the Columbia River, in order to make sure that the works at that dam will not destroy the important fish industry of the Columbia River.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is the Senator prepared to state the approximate cost of the survey or investigation?

Mr. STEIWER. I cannot state the figure, but the Commissioner told me that the cost would be nominal. Those who would make the survey are already in the area.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon for the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 113), submitted by Mr. STEIWER on the 5th instant, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Fisheries is hereby requested to make an immediate survey of the facilities for the passage of salmon and other commercial fish at Bonneville, on the Columbia River, and the effect, if any, of the Bonneville Dam on the propagation of salmon and other commercial fish, and to make recommendations with respect to the steps which may be necessary in connection with such dam in order to attain the full conservation of such fish and the preservation of the fishing industry on said river. The Commissioner is further requested to report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the result of such survey, together with his recommendations.

SIT-DOWN STRIKES—RESOLUTION INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, my attention has been called to the fact that Senate Resolution 112, submitted by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and Senate Resolution 111, submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], relating to sit-down strikes, are still on the calendar of the Senate. Anticipating that neither of the Senators will desire action on his resolution, and with a view of obviating the necessity of carrying them on the calendar of the Senate, and with the understanding that should the Senators desire to have them reinstated on the calendar, such action will be taken, I move that Senate Resolutions 111 and 112 be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Arkansas that, on motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], his resolution, being Senate Resolution 111, was indefinitely postponed earlier in the day.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. I move, then, that Senate Resolution 112, submitted by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Capt. Hugh Chester Downey, to be major in the Air Corps of the Regular Army, with temporary rank from April 13, 1937, under the provisions of law.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nomination of Col. Walter Campbell Baker, Chemical Warfare Service, to be Chief of the Chemical Warfare Service, with the rank of major general, for a period of 4 years from date of acceptance, with rank from May 24, 1937, vice Maj. Gen. Claude E. Brigham; and also the nomination of Col. Charles Burnett, Cavalry, to be Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, with the rank of brigadier general, for a period of 4 years from date of acceptance, with rank from May 24, 1937, vice Brig. Gen. Creed F. Cox.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of several officers for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations in order on the calendar.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for promotion in the Marine Corps.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Marine Corps be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the Executive Calendar.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 12, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 9, 1937

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, APRIL 9, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our Lord, whose throne is in the heavens and whose footstool is the earth, be pleased to put us in the mood of prayer. Lead us in Thy righteousness and make Thy way straight before us. We pray Thee to stir within us those qualities which lift us into the elect of a sturdy, invigorating manhood. We must deny ourselves, overcome our sins, and build characters which become the children of the Most High. Blessed be Thy holy name for the humanities of Thy kingdom. Keep us alive to human suffering and eager to serve our country's need. Grant, our Father, that peace and happiness may come over our people like a glorious sunrise, brightening up the remotest corners of our land. Feed us with the bread of life. Through Christ our Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I asked unanimous consent to insert a statement in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD regarding veterans and their benefits in the different States. It exceeded the amount of space permitted by the Joint Committee on Printing. I have received an estimate from the Joint Committee, and I would now ask unanimous consent to insert the statement, notwithstanding the estimate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas what the cost will be for the insertion?

Mr. PATMAN. It is a statement gotten up by the Disabled American Veterans of benefits for veterans in each State. It is very valuable to the veterans and to Members of Congress. It costs $585. That is very low compared to the value of it. I am sure the gentleman himself and the veterans in his district will get that much value out of it. It cost hundreds of dollars to prepare.

Mr. RICH. I do not object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.
